> The general rule has often been declared that the legislature may validate retrospectively the proceedings which they may have authorized in advance.

That is supported by the Federal and State authorities which I quote in this article.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry before he leaves that subject?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think the bill which is now before us is calculated to drive the legislatures of the States to adopt a system of taxation within the State which perhaps, aside from this legislation, they would not prefer to adopt? It seems to me that all that Congress ought to do in dealing with this subject is to provide that in the method of taxation there shall be no discrimination against the national banks and that if States seek to discriminate the national banks may adopt the lower rate of taxation that is applied in any State with respect to capital that comes in competition with the national banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is exactly what I have provided. All moneyed capital engaged in banking must be taxed at the same rate at which bank stock is taxed, and at which bank capital is taxed. That is exactly what we attempt to do. At present that is not the rule. At present the rule is that the individual investor pays a different rate. As I stated in opening my remarks, the States have found that a uniform system of direct ad valorem taxation is unscientific, unworkable, and does not produce the revenue and result which it should. So in some States they have taxed public utilities on a gross earnings basis, they have taxed individuals by income taxes, they have taxed corporations by direct taxes, and when a man buys a mortgage he pays a tax for 20 or 25 years. Would the Senator say that all those rates must be equal? In the first place, that would disrupt the taxing systems which have grown up, and which experience has shown are wise, and which produce more revenue. I think I stated that in my own State, with a direct tax on intangible assets, varying in the communities from 2 to 3 per cent, $350,000 was produced, and our State provided a 3 mill per dollar tax on all intangibles and collected $1,350,000, because the capital was not sent out of the State, was not driven away. It is better for the State, because you can not tax a farm mortgage, or a 4 per cent bond as security, at the same rate at which you can tax a growing business. If you do the business of loaning money to farmers at cheap rates will go out of existence.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in Tennessee we have a constitutional provision that all taxation shall be equal and uniform. I think those are the exact words. How would this amendment affect that provision of the constitution of Tennessee?

Mr. KELLOGG. It would not affect that in the slightest degree, because banks can only be taxed by the consent of the Federal Government anyhow. It would not affect the Senator's State in the least in that particular.

I have taken too much of the time of the Senate, and I shall not insist on going on further with this, as I understand other Senators want to speak.

Mr. BURSUM obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] desires to have the Agricultural appropriation bill taken up. Does the Senator from New Mexico object to yielding while I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will have the floor. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KING. Has the tax bill been withdrawn?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was to be withdrawn at 2 o'clock, but the Senator from Minnesota proceeded by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the unfinished business, House bill 12817, be temporarily laid aside? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, be laid before the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. I will have no objection if on the second reading the bill be read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not understand the remark of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I stated that I have no objection to the formal reading being dispensed with, if on the second reading all the text of the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a moment?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill relating to free seeds, my amendment to be inserted on page 33, following line 6. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

On page 33, after line 6, insert:

"Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packing, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, On January 3 the Senate received a message from the President returning Senate bill 3275, an act granting pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and so forth, without his approval and accompanied by a message.

I can not help but feel that this is a harsh message, a cruel message, when we consider the physical conditions, the suffering endured, sacrifice made, the service to the Nation, the results from that service which has come to the country, the age of the veterans, the aged widows who are eking out a miserable existence, who are suffering from infirmity and a shortage of sufficient nourishment and care on account of inability to provide financial means for obtaining the same—of those who are affected thereby.

Mr. President, I have read and reread the message of the President. I read; I seek to analyze, but I am unable to make myself believe that a patriotic, appreciative, kindly character like Mr. Harding, big hearted, generous in his sympathy for suffering humanity, if in possession of all of the facts and circumstances surrounding perhaps 75 per cent of the beneficiaries under the proposed bill, would have given expression to such a sweeping condemnation of every item that the bill stands for.

This message portrays a gloomy picture; not a word of comfort, no expression of appreciation for those who so gallantly and effectively gave up everything under the leadership of Lincoln and Grant in order that this country might live and become a reunited people and Nation.

Let us analyze the contents of the message. First it says:

> If the act were limited to its provision in behalf of the surviving participants in the Mexican and Civil Wars and widows of the War of 1812, it would still be without ample justification. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates its additional cost to the Treasury to be about $108,000,000 annually, and I venture the prediction that with such a precedent established the ultimate pension outlay in the half century before us will exceed $50,000,000,000. The act makes no pretense of new consideration for the needy or dependent, no new generosity for the veteran wards of the Nation; it is an outright bestowal upon the Government's pension roll, with a heedlessness for the Government's financial problems which is a discouragement to every effort to reduce expenditure and thereby relieve the Federal burdens of taxation.

Under the present law now in force a Civil War veteran requiring an attendant may make application to the Pension Bureau and, upon proof, investigation, and approval by the bureau, may be given a pension of $72 a month. Of the number of Civil War veterans now on the pension roll, approximately 20 per cent—or, to be exact, 34,759—are drawing $72 per month; the remainder, 148,292, are drawing $50 per month. The reason for suggesting a uniform flat rate of $72 per month is that it is generally recognized that at least 80 per cent of the Civil War veterans are now practically totally disabled and incapacitated, and the number of totally disabled veterans is increasing daily. In this connection I quote an extract from the report of Commissioner Gardner, of the Pension Bureau, for the fiscal year ending 1922, on pages 2 and 3, which reads as follows:

> Of those now on the roll, 34,537 are in receipt of $72 per month because their condition of helplessness or blindness requires the regular personal aid and attendance of another person. When the advanced age of the Civil War veterans is considered, it can readily be seen that a large per cent of the 159,254 now drawing less than $72 per month will lapse into that condition of helplessness warranting allowance of said rate. In fact, claims for the $72 rate are coming into the bureau at the rate of over 3,000 per month.

Last fall I had the pleasure of attending the national encampment of the Civil War veterans held at Des Moines. There were several thousand veterans who attended the annual reunion, also several thousand widows and auxiliary organizations, such as the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic. I said to the national commander:

> You have only about 10 per cent of your membership here; where are the rest of your boys?

The reply was:

> Ninety per cent of them are at home either bedridden or incapacitated to make the journey.

It is a notorious fact that if there is anything on earth that a Civil War veteran will make a sacrifice to attend, it is the annual reunion of his organization, where he can meet his comrades who shared his sorrows, privations, and glories three score years ago, when they were all boys, talk over old times, relate and hear interesting incidents and stories about the things which happened between 1861 and 1865. Veterans came to that encampment who only had sufficient money to get there—no funds to purchase food or shelter. Be it said to the credit of the generous citizens of Des Moines, not a single veteran suffered for the want of either food or shelter or a return ticket home. The gates of the city were, in fact and in spirit, opened wide, and the welcome extended by Des Moines to this organization was one of generous welcome and hospitality. The testimony which I heard as to conditions generally with the membership and the widows throughout this country convinced me that the statement of the commander was true.

Many applications for increases have been filed; necessarily, delay is unavoidable in order to enable the Pension Bureau to obtain proofs and conduct its investigations in each individual case to justify approval. Hundreds of veterans have died during the interim between the time that application was made and before it was physically possible to obtain proofs, make the necessary investigation, secure approval, and place the veterans name on the roll at $72. These proceedings, as a rule, take up about three months.

For these reasons we believed that we were wholly justified in increasing the general roll of the veterans who are now alive and who served during the Civil War.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURSUM. I will yield later, if the Senator please.

To my mind, the increase of $22 is a new recognition and consideration of a rapidly increasing need and dependency, and to that extent it is a new generosity to the wards of the Nation.

I hardly think we can legitimately justify the word "generosity." Generosity and love of country may, in a measure, characterize the services which these veterans rendered the Nation, but what we propose to do now for the aged veterans, to my mind, is but a partial recognition of the national obligation which never can be fully discharged.

Now, as to the $108,000,000 increase. The message would have the country understand that if this bill becomes a law that it would take annually for 50 years out of the Treasury an additional sum equal to $108,000,000 or fifty billions ultimate outlay in 50 years. I quote the exact language of the message in this regard, which says:

> The Commissioner of Pensions estimates its additional cost to the Treasury to be about $108,000,000 annually.

This seems to be a one-sided picture and an argument by opposing counsel, so to speak, showing all of the objections which could, by opposing genius, be devised, and none of the circumstances favoring the other side of this question.

I do not agree that $108,000,000 even for the first year is a conservative estimate; secondly, net losses on the rolls through deaths have occurred at the rate of more than 40,000 annually—the last six months showing the following: 10,993 veterans and 10,386 widows. This death rate will increase as time goes on with its merciless claims of death upon the aged veterans and widows, and every time a veteran dies the Treasury outlay is reduced to the extent of $72 monthly, or $864 a year, and every time a widow dies the Treasury outlay is reduced by $50 per month, or $600 a year.

The total additional expense for the present calendar year on account of the Civil War veterans and Civil War widows now on the rolls, a monthly increase of $22 to the veteran and $20 to the widow, would in the aggregate amount to $88,386,958. From this sum may be deducted $15,778,290 on account of deaths during the year, leaving a net increase for the first year ending December, 1923, of $72,608,668.

Thus, for the succeeding year 1924, to begin with, there will be dropped from the roll during the calendar year 1923, 21,986 veterans who had been receiving $864 each per annum, making in the aggregate $22,975,904, and 20,772 widows receiving $600 each per annum, or in the aggregate $12,463,200, making a total of $35,439,104. Therefore, within two years the total increased demands over the present outlay upon the Treasury on account of increased pensions will have vanished, and within 10 years—and I am sure I am conservative when I say 10 years—the matter of Civil War veterans and widows' pensions, with the exception of a very limited number, may be compared to existing conditions relating to Mexican War pensions.

The prediction of a $50,000,000,000 outlay within the next 50 years, so far as it may be influenced by the enactment into law of this bill, would seem shooting far from the mark of reason. Indeed, if the proposed legislation was to be considered as a precedent for future policy it would mean, if it meant anything, that veterans and widows of veterans of other wars would be accorded similar treatment under like conditions. Until 1890 the pension of the Civil War veteran was $8 per month; the service pension of the Civil War veteran was fixed at $12 per month by the act of 1890. This was increased by several subsequent acts as the age of the veteran or widow of the veteran increased and their ability to earn decreased; the last increase, being under the act of 1920, increasing the pension of the veteran to $50 and the widow of the veteran to $30 per month.

Fifty-eight years have now elapsed since the Civil War ended. If the veterans and widows of veterans of other wars are required to wait 58 years before obtaining similar rates of pensions provided in the bill, there can be no justification to expect a $50,000,000,000 outlay unless we unfortunately become involved in other wars which are not now foreseen.

The chances are that the veterans of the World War will not demand service pensions until they have arrived at an age similar to those who have received service pensions subsequent to other wars. Whenever the time comes for the granting of a service pension to the World War veteran those who are now sitting in the legislative halls of the Government, and including those who now hold the reins of Government, will probably have little say in directing the policy of the country. Veterans will occupy senatorial and congressional seats, and very likely some veteran may be presiding at the While House. There is no reason to expect any greater extravagance from future generations than from the present or the past. There were 2,475,000 veterans at the end of the Civil War who if living to-day would have a pensionable status. All of the veterans of the World War, including the Army, Navy, and marines, number approximately 4,700,000, or less than twice the number of soldiers in the Civil War. Thus it may be reasonably expected that whenever service pensions are provided for the World War veterans we may expect a Budget of approximately double the amount which we have under the Civil War, and it will be increased proportionately with the age of the veteran and his ability to earn a livelihood.

The message further states:

> The more important objection to this act, however, lies in its loose provision for pensioning widows. The existing law makes the widow of a Civil War veteran eligible to a pension if she married him prior to June 27, 1905. In other words, marriage within 40 years of the end of the Civil War gives a veteran's widow a good title to a pension. The act returned herewith extends the marriage period specifically to June 27, 1915, and provides that after that date any marriage or cohabitation for two years prior to a veteran's death shall make the widow the beneficiary of a pension at $50 per month for the remainder of her life.

This portion of the message taken in connection with the statement "loose provision for pensioning widows"—and we all recognize what the word "loose" generally pertains to and its inferential meaning especially in this regard—in effect means that Congress has sought to legalize concubines. In other words, that a woman who has cohabitated for two years with a veteran prior to the veteran's death shall make the widow the beneficiary of a pension at $50 per month. This is a serious charge and unfortunate. If it were true, certainly the Congress would merit a severe censure for attempting to encourage loosening the morals of the country. No such provisions as quoted in the message is found in the bill.

I read the provision of section 3, which is as follows:

That the rate of pension for the former widow of an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who having so served for less than 90 days was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1915, or if legally married after such date shall have subsequent to such marriage lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, or marine for a period of at least two years and continuing until his death. * * *

Thus it will be seen that the purpose of this provision was in behalf of preventing fraud, the very opposite of what the message would seem to convey. The provision which I have just read requires an absolute compliance with the marriage vows. Under this provision a woman might marry a veteran and live with him faithfully as his wife for 20 years; if she left him prior to his death, she would not be eligible to receive a pension, even though such separation be no fault of hers. In view of the error contained in the message purporting to quote from the bill, it seems to me that some one has been "loose" outside of Congress.

In my opinion the President should correct this erroneous impression given the public, which has been broadcasted to the country on account of the erroneous quotation contained in the message. As evidence of this erroneous impression I received one letter from a poor old lady from New Jersey, in which, among other things, she says:

Do you think that clause, "woman living in open lewdness to be treated as a married woman," made him do that?

That is a sample of one letter. I have received a number of others which go to verify my statement as to the false impression which has been created and spread broadcast throughout the country by reason of an erroneous statement of fact contained in the message sent to this body by the President. I am sure that erroneous impression was not intentional nor intended to reflect upon Congress or the widows of veterans and the veterans of the Civil War. Somebody made a slip; somebody made a mistake; but nevertheless that mistake contained in the message is stated as a fact over the signature of the President and has gone to the country in that way.

Now, as to the proposed bill extending the time of marriage from 1905 to 1915, the only reason that may be assumed for extending the time is the very good one that nearly all such widows are now on the pension roll, having been granted pensions by special acts which passed both Houses. If there are widows who were married prior to 1915 and subsequent to 1905 who are not on the pension roll, it is because no Member of the House and no Member of the Senate has introduced bills to extend such pensions to them. I know that many thousands of bills have been passed since 1920, and that, as a practical proposition, nearly all of the widows who were married up to and including 1915 are now on the pension roll, and therefore no harm could come from extending the time until 1915 and no additional expense of any consequence would be involved.

The change with reference to the policy of pensioning widows was made by the House; the Senate bill provided for a limitation, applying the increase only to widows 62 years of age and over, and, as I recall, the remarried widows were left at $30. So far as the actual expense to the country is concerned, I do not consider it of any great moment; it is purely a question of policy upon which there may be honest differences of opinion. The salient fact, however, remains that, according to the report of the Pension Bureau, the average age of the widows on the pension roll in the month of February of last year was 73 years, and therefore it is fair to say that the average age of the widows of the Civil War veterans now on the pension roll is 74 years.

Reference is made in the message to a comparison of the Civil War widow with the widow of the World War. To my mind, the measure of relief should be in accordance with the established policy, namely, the ability of the beneficiary to earn and provide a livelihood. Outside of sickness, this ability is generally measured by the age of the beneficiary. The average age of the Civil War widow being 74 and that of the World War widow being nearer 24, it is manifest that a difference in rate may be justifiable.

Mr. President, I regret the fact that this bill has been disapproved, because it will disappoint so many aged veterans and widows who are undoubtedly in distress and in great need of the increase which this bill would have given them.

It may be true that the bill in its entirety is not all that it should be; of course it is not perfect; it is the product of compromise, which is usual with most legislation. I do not intend to attempt to secure its passage over the veto of the President; such course would not result in any accomplishment; but I do sincerely wish and hope there may be some legislation enacted at the present session which will grant an increase to the older veterans and the older widows who are now in distress, who are in great need, and whose allowance from the Government will not provide fuel, shelter, food, and medicine. I also hope that legislation may be enacted to make a more liberal and uniform allowance to minor children. It seems to me that the allowance for minor children should be uniform and equal as to all wars.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURSUM. I do not yield at this time, but will yield later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico declines to yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, we have appropriated $20,000,000 for the starving people of Russia; I agree we did right; it was a humane thing to do. Those unfortunate people were starving, and this country was in possession of a surplus of the resources which would save millions of women and children in Russia from starvation, and under the same identical humane policy it seems to me that we will be derelict in our duty if we fail to adequately provide, during the present Congress, for the aged veteran, and especially the aged widow, to the end that fuel, food, shelter, and medicine may be available to this class of our citizenship to whom the Government is obligated.

There is one thing we may count on, Mr. President, that the general who fails to feed and care for his troops will not win much of a victory when the battle is on. The successful functioning of a government depends upon patriotism; patriotism itself depends upon willingness to sacrifice. If you would have the people at all times stand four square for the Government, the Government in turn must show its appreciation of service and sacrifice by standing four square in return.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator what pension the old soldier draws who lives in one of the Government soldiers' homes?

Mr. BURSUM. There is no distinction on that account. Not a very large number of the men live in the homes—only about 15,000 of them—and some of them have families to take care of.

Mr. DIAL. How much pension do they receive a month?

Mr. BURSUM. I think they receive the same as the other ex-soldiers; I do not know that there is any difference.

Mr. President, I should like to call attention to a few cases to show the conditions that exist. I might present as evidence 5,000 letters which I have received from all over the country. Here is a typical one from which I will read:

It is with a saddened heart I am writing to you in regard to the vetoing of your bill. My mother, who is 89 years of age and blind and also an invalid in bed, was praying for the passage of this bill and that it might be signed by the President. To be obliged to provide the necessities on $35 per month, with coal at $16 per ton, wood $22 per cord, and then no money to buy either.

That is merely one of the letters I have received; I have hundreds more, showing beyond any question that the majority of the aged widows are in dire need and suffering from the lack of means with which to procure shelter, food, fuel, and medicine. I submit, Mr. President, to permit such conditions to exist beyond the term of the present Congress will be a disgrace to the Congress and to the American people.

Mr. President, I am going to introduce another pension bill, which will be much more restricted than the former one. I am doing it for the reason that I conceive that an emergency, a great necessity, exists, and in order that there may be no reason for any delay in the passage of the legislation, the bill which I propose to introduce I will send to the desk in a few moments. I can not find it just now. It provides that the increase of pension shall be given to the veteran who has attained the age of 78 years or more and to the widow who has attained the age of 68 years or more, and also makes a slight increase as to minor children. The portion as to minor children, of course, would not affect the aged widows, but it would affect the younger widows who are charged with taking care of minor children of veterans of the war.

The bill (S. 4305) granting increase of pension to certain soldiers of the Mexican War and Civil War and their widows and minor children, widows of the War of 1812, Army nurses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement as to early pension legislation, and some statistical matter bearing on the subject which I have discussed.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EARLY PENSION LEGISLATION.

It will be of interest to know that the foundation of our present pension system is older than the Declaration of Independence.

The first national pension law was passed August 26, 1776, before our independence was established. But prior to this, early in the history of colonial legislation, many of the English colonies in America had provided for the relief of wounded and maimed soldiers.

In 1636 the Pilgrims at Plymouth enacted in their courts that any man who should be sent forth as a soldier and return maimed should be maintained competently by the colony during his life. This was probably the first pension law passed in America. In 1676 a standing committee of the general court of Massachusetts Bay held regular meetings in "Boston toune house" to hear the applications of wounded soldiers for relief. After the union of Massachusetts Bay and Plymouth colonies under the charter of 1691 the Province continued to make provision for the relief of disabled soldiers out of the public treasury.

In 1644 the Virginia Assembly passed a disability pension law, and later provision for the relief of the indigent families of soldiers who should be slain. Similar acts are found in the colonial statutes of Maryland and New York in the latter part of the seventeenth century. In 1718 Rhode Island enacted a pension law which provided that every officer, soldier, or sailor employed in the colony's service who should be disabled by loss of limb or otherwise from getting a livelihood for himself and family or other dependent relatives should have his wounds carefully looked after and healed at the colony's charge, and should have an annual pension for the maintenance of himself and family or other dependent relatives. The law further provided that if any person who had the charge of maintaining a wife, children, parents, or other relatives should be slain in the colony's military service these relatives should be maintained while unable to provide for themselves.

The above shows that the custom of pensioning soldiers is as old as the English settlement.

The first national pension law, that of August 26, 1776, promised half pay for life or during disability to every officer, soldier, or sailor losing a limb in any engagement, or being so disabled in the service of the United States as to render him incapable of earning a livelihood.

On August 24, 1780, a resolution was adopted extending the above half-pay provision to the widows or orphan children of such officers as had died or should die in the service. This was the first national pension law in behalf of widows and orphans.

On April 23, 1782, Congress provided that soldiers who were sick or wounded or unfit for duty should receive a discharge and be pensioned at the rate of $5 per month. It is further shown that history is repeating itself, as Congress was as unable at that time as at the present to enact pension laws that were in all respects satisfactory to the masses. The money was not always in the Treasury to pay the pensions after the same had been granted, much being promised but little realized. Many were paid in commutation certificates payable to them or bearer and drawing interest at 6 per cent, but no provision was made for paying either. Many of these were compelled to part with their certificates as low as 12½ cents on the dollar.

TABLE OF RATES.

TABLE I.—For simple total (a disability equivalent to the ankylosis of a wrist) provided by section 4695, Revised Statutes, United States.

Act Apr. 19, 1908	12.00

From and after July 25, 1866, a widow is entitled, under the provisions of section 4703, Revised Statutes, to the sum of $2 per month additional on account of each legitimate minor child of the deceased soldier or sailor (in her care and custody, if by his former marriage) until such child reaches the age of 16 years. Where the widow has died, remarried, or has no title, the minor children under 16 years of age succeed to the widow's rights.

In claims under the act of June 27, 1890, both in its original and amended forms, the additional pension of $2 per month is granted. In addition, provision is made in said act for the continuance of pension granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise physically or mentally helpless minor child, during its life or during the period of disability. This proviso is applicable to minors' claims under any statute.

DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

Section 4707, Revised Statutes, in its original form, and as amended by sec. 1, act June 27, 1890, same rates as in Table 1.
Act Mar. 19, 1886	$12.00

RATES FOR OFFICERS, SECTIONS 4692 AND 4693, REVISED STATUTES.

Rates for officers in claims under sections 4692 and 4693, Revised Statutes, shall be one-quarter, one-half, three-quarters, and total. Officers below the rank of first lieutenant may receive rates in fractions of 18 in excess of their total.

Section 4699, Revised Statutes, provides that the rate of $18 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision, thus fixing the highest rating provided by existing laws which can be allowed by considering disabilities separately and compounding so as to allow the full amount which the disabilities so considered would aggregate.

The act of March 2, 1895, provides that all pensioners now on the rolls who are pensioned at less than $6 per month for any degree of pensionable disability shall have their pensions increased to $6 per month; and that, hereafter, whenever any applicant for pension would, under existing rates, be entitled to less than $6 for any single disability or several combined disabilities, such pensioner shall be rated at not less than $6 per month: Provided also, That the provisions hereof shall not be held to cover any pensionable period prior to the passage of this act, nor authorize a rerating of any claim for any part of such period, nor prevent the allowance of lower rates than $6 per month, according to the existing practice in the penion office in pending cases covering any pensionable period prior to the passage of this act.

WIDOWS.

The widow of a soldier or sailor who died of a disability incurred while in the service and in line of duty is, under the provisions of section 4702, Revised Statutes, entitled to the rating to which he would have been entitled for a simple total disability, as shown in Table I; and under the provisions of section 4696, Revised Statutes, the rank of the soldier is determined by the rank held by him when death cause was incurred, without regard to subsequent promotions.

From and after March 19, 1886, by the act approved on that date, the widow of a private or noncommissioned officer is entitled to $12 per month, provided that she married deceased soldier or sailor prior to March 19, 1886, or thereafter married him prior to or during his term of service.

WIDOW'S INCREASE.

From and after July 25, 1886, a widow is entitled to $2 per month increase for each legitimate minor child of the soldier or sailor in her care and custody.

MINOR'S PENSION.

Same rates and increase as in widows' claims, except that in cases of children of fathers below the rank of a commissioned officer the rate is increased to $12 per month from March 19, 1886, without regard to date of soldier's or sailor's marriage.

MOTHERS, FATHERS, BROTHERS, AND SISTERS.

Same rates as provided in minors' and widows' claims in cases of commissioned officers, and $8 per month to March 19, 1886, and $12 thereafter in other cases.

Pensions based upon service performed since March 4, 1861 (act of June 27, 1890, as amended by the act of May 9, 1900):

	Per month.
Survivors	$6 to $12
Widows and minors	8

To widows' and minors' rate add $2 per month increase for each legitimate minor child of soldier under the age of 16.

(Act of August 5, 1892.)

Female nurses	$12

(Act of March 2, 1867 (Navy only).)

For 20 years' naval service, entitled to one-half the pay he was receiving at date of discharge.

Ten years' service, whatever rate may be allowed by a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed rate for total disability.

If in addition to service pension sailor is pensioned for disability, the service pension covering the same time shall not exceed one-fourth the rate allowed for disability.

NOTE.—Claims under this act should be filed with the Secretary of the Navy.

Pensions based upon service performed prior to March 4, 1861:

Widows	8

Acts of February 6, 1907, and March 4, 1907.—By the terms of these acts any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, is entitled to a pension at the following rates, irrespective of rank: At 62 years of age, $12 per month; 70 years of age, $15 per month; 75 years or over, $20 per month. Pension commences from the date of filing claim in the Bureau of Pensions, subsequent to February 6, 1907, after attaining the specified age.

The bases of title under these acts, except as herein otherwise stated, are the same as under the act of June 27, 1890, as amended by the act of May 9, 1900.

Act of May 11, 1912.—By the terms of this act any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, is entitled to a pension at various rates, irrespective of rank, based upon age and length of service, as follows:

Age.	90 days.	6 months.	1 year.	1½ years.	2 years.	2½ years.	3 years.
62	$13	$13.50	$14	$14.50	$15	$15.50	$16

INCREASED RATINGS TO CERTAIN SURVIVORS OF THE CIVIL WAR; AMENDING ACT OF MAY 11, 1912.

(Act of June 10, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 603).)

That the general pension act of May 11, 1912, is hereby amended by adding a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $30 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 72 years and served six months, the rate shall be $32 per month; one year, $35 per month; one and a half years, $38 per month; two years or over, $40 per month."

(Act of September 8, 1916.)

This act increased the pensions of Civil War and Mexican War widows and widows of the War of 1812 to $20.

(Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. L. 408).)

That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the war with Spain, or the Philippine insurrection, now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month.

(Act of May 1, 1920.)

This act increased the rate of pension of Civil War soldiers who served 90 days and were honorably discharged to $50 a month, and if helpless to $72. The widows of such soldiers were given $30 a month.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate a resolution adopted a few days ago by the Ford County Farm Bureau of Kansas. It is very much the same as many others I have received from farm organizations in the West which want our Government to call an economic conference.

The resolution reads:

The Ford County Farm Bureau members, assembled in annual meeting, believe that everything necessary should be done to restore the farmers' market. For our surplus production this market is overseas.

We can not recover those markets till Europe recovers stability. We therefore urge that the President of the United States at an early date summon a financial and economic conference at Washington, especially inviting those nations of Europe that are natural customers of the American farmer.

We realize that the question of the German reparations to France, Belgium, Italy, and England and the allied indebtedness to the United States are inextricably interwoven. We can not hope for a return of financial and political stability to Europe and a return of prosperity to the farmer until these questions are adjusted. We therefore urge a review of those questions and the submission of such concessions as will promote tranquillity and stability in Europe, and thereby restore those markets to our farmers.

We demand the repeal of the foreign debt funding law or such amendment as will give the President liberty of action to make necessary concessions to our customers.

We direct the president of the Ford County Farm Bureau to send a copy of these resolutions to President Harding and Secretary Hughes, to Senators CURTIS and CAPPER, and to Congressman TINCHER.

Then I have a letter from the American National Live Stock Association, signed by the secretary of the association, as follows:

AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Denver, Colo., January 6, 1923.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER:

* * * I am firmly convinced that to-day the live-stock and agricultural producer of the West does realize the importance of an export business and is firmly of the opinion that the most speedy approach to the solution of the surplus agricultural production question in the United States is through an economic conference, held in the United States, at which the United States should be represented by its ablest statesmen, financiers, and business men. If, in connection with such a conference or growing out of it, a solution of the reparations problem in Europe could be found, I believe there is no doubt in the minds of those of us in the West that a very great and immediate change would come in agricultural prices.

We must all face the fact that America is a surplus agricultural producer; and the sooner Europe can be put in a position to buy our agricultural products, which she so sorely needs, so much sooner will the proper equilibrium between agricultural and manufactured goods be reached here. On the establishment of such an equilibrium must any permanent prosperity rest.

With kindest regards, believe me, yours very sincerely,

T. W. TOMLINSON, Secretary.

Then I have a letter from the American Cotton Association, signed by its president, J. S. Wannamaker, of St. Matthews, S. C., as follows:

AMERICAN COTTON ASSOCIATION,
St. Matthews, S. C., December 29, 1922.

Hon ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER:

* * * I learn that Senator BORAH'S amendment has been withdrawn, with the understanding that similar steps are being taken through official circles. Longer delay of this matter is dangerous; and should the efforts which it is stated the administration is making fail to promptly bring about a restoration of peace and the opening of these markets, I sincerely hope that you will use your very best efforts to have Senator BORAH'S amendment for an economic conference reintroduced, or some similar measure for the same purpose. We can not hope for relief of these distressed conditions now existing throughout the Nation until these markets can be opened. Neither agriculture nor business can proceed with any degree of intelligence or safety. The farmer fears that there will be a repetition of his experience of past years and that there will be no market for his product except at a price far below the cost of production. Various divisions of industry extending credits on these uncertainties fear to extend same, as they are already loaded with a vast amount of unpaid obligations as a result of the fearful losses for the last several years.

There is nothing so important to American agriculture and commerce to-day, in fact, to our civilization and the commerce and civilization of the entire world, than a full reestablishment of our foreign markets, which can only come about through a reestablishment of a world's economic peace. There is nothing to which the Senators can give their attention that is of greater moment to the American people in a practical way than the creation of international relations that is precedent to the reestablishment of foreign markets. There is nothing in the world that affects our credits so much as the shrinking of foreign markets for our products.

* * * * * * *

It seems to be the consensus of judgment of those who have given thought and study to this problem that the only possibility of restoring peace and opening the markets and bringing about these conditions will be by America taking an active part in a world's economic conference; and aside from this, the absolute failure to bring about restoration of peace on the part of the other nations plainly shows that it would only be possible to bring about such conditions by America taking an active part in a world conference for this purpose.

The entire world has already paid a fearful penalty as a result of the failure to bring about these conditions. While our entire Nation, with the world at large, has been made to suffer, no section of our entire Nation has been made to pay a more fearful penalty than the agricultural sections, and the appalling conditions existing to-day should impress everyone with the fact that this problem is nonpolitical and nonsectional. The restoration of peace and the opening of foreign markets is a world-wide necessity.

I sincerely hope that you can take an active part in supporting the movement started by Senator BORAH for this purpose.

* * * * * * *

Very sincerely, J. S. WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

Then I have a letter from Clarence Poe, an agricultural leader in the South, head of one of the leading farm organizations and president and editor of the Progressive Farmer, in which he says:

THE PROGRESSIVE FARMER,
Raleigh, N. C., January 5, 1923.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I believe the people of North Carolina, farmers and all, want to see the United States Government participate in the proposed economic conference and do everything else in its power to get Europe on a sound industrial basis.

It looks to me that France, if let alone and permitted to adopt the most extreme measures in dealing with Germany, will bring virtual ruin on herself and involve all the rest of the world besides. She is likely to kill the goose that lays her golden eggs by forcing Germany into virtual anarchy, with consequent industrial disaster for a long time. This will hold back the prosperity of the world. Moreover, if she takes over the richest portion of Germany she will create another Alsace-Lorraine, and sooner or later this is likely to bring another World War, and the United States may be called on to lose more, both in blood and treasure, than in the last war.

I am extremely gratified, Senator CAPPER, to find you giving serious thought to this entire situation. I am also gratified to see that President Harding and Secretary Hughes seem to be getting ready to do something.

As I see it, delay means economic disaster and not unlikely the seed sowing of another war.

Yours sincerely, CLARENCE POE,
President and Editor.

Mr. President, at the beginning of another year, four years after the Great War, we find Europe sinking deeper and deeper in the pit dug by her war lords, while it becomes increasingly compulsory that all nations rededicate themselves to thrift and industry.

The big question forcing itself upon our attention at this moment is, Shall we try to help Europe settle her economic troubles; shall we do all we reasonably and properly can to save Europe from financial and commercial smash, and ourselves from the consequences of such a disaster; shall we see what further may be done through conference, through further reduction of armaments, and through other means to deliver Europe from the quicksands of inflation and our farm industry from a crushing depression; or shall we let the situation grow steadily worse, while we look about us unavailingly for some means to protect ourselves from serious injury when the grand smash comes?

With two facts made unmistakably plain, I think we can and should do something. The first is that Europe's war loans shall on no account be canceled; the other is that we shall make no political alliances nor assume any obligations of the treaty of Versailles protecting Europe's territorial boundaries. It should be well understood from the beginning that the United States will not consent to be made the burden bearer of European indebtedness, nor will we sponsor European obligations. If this country is to have any part in the financing of Europe, it must be done through American business men and not through the United States Treasury.

On a firm basis of such an understanding American good will and American common sense might well go the limit to uphold America's traditional policy of peace on earth, good will toward men and nations. I believe we have everything to gain and nothing to lose by such a course.

Mr. President, we have been trying to do something here to place American agriculture on a firmer basis than before, and among these things to help the farmer in his greatest problem of all, which is not production but marketing his products. We have done something and we can do more, but we recognize that farm marketing is not entirely a domestic problem. For important American farm products a foreign market which is dependable is vital to the farmer's prosperity. We do not need to say that where the farmer produces a surplus over the consumption of the United States it is this surplus that determines what he receives even for the portion consumed in the United States and so for the whole; and American farms during the entire history of the country have produced the main part of our export goods and have given us our favorable balance of trade. This has always been the case and is to-day. The farmer's foreign market is not in the new parts of the world. These newer countries are his competitors. We do not ship farm products to Australia, but to those countries that are becoming more and more industrial and relatively less and less agricultural.

The industrial countries of northern and western Europe are in large measure dependent upon us for food. These are the countries that to-day, after three years of repeated efforts, have not been able to reach a settlement of the terrible problems left by war. Their people can not pay for the food supplies which they required prior to the war. They can not become the dependable market that we were accustomed to before the war until these problems are settled, so that they may return to something like a normal industrial life.

The nation-wide interest in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] proposing a world economic conference, indicates a number of things. In the first place, it indicates a growing realization that our material prosperity, particularly that of the farmer of the Middle West, depends to a large degree on the economic health of Europe. As long as the reparations question is unsettled, and as long as budgets are unbalanced and currencies are depreciated, the rehabilitation of Europe is impossible and our prosperity will lag. We have come to recognize that economic distress in Europe means the absence of prosperity in many quarters of the United States. The economic life of the world is interrelated, and what happens in one country affects in a greater or less degree conditions in another. There are undoubtedly certain things which European nations must do toward putting their own houses in order before the United States can be helpful in a fundamental way, but there are certain things which can be done now to contribute to the solution of the perplexing European problem.

The second thing indicated by the public interest in the proposal of the Senator from Idaho is that the American people have a deep-seated interest in cooperation with other nations in the settlement of essential international questions. The American people are interested in a program which will contribute to world stability and peace. Their support of the work of the arms conference is adequate proof of this statement. They rejected the League of Nations chiefly because it was associated with a dictated and unjust peace, and their position has been amply justified by the experiences of Europe during the years which have intervened. Their rejection of the League of Nations, however, does not mean that they are opposed to the principle of cooperation in the settlement of international issues which contribute to war. They are willing to play a part in any program which looks toward the establishment of peaceful and just relations among the peoples of the earth.

Mr. President, I do not say that we have any specific solution for Europe's economic difficulties. Unlike the armament conference, we may have no definite program to offer at the outset. We have our good will and our disinterestedness. These are recognized. We have no selfish interest to serve. Our interest is the recovery of Europe. We look for no advantage that is not primarily dependent upon Europe's economic stability and prosperity. The fundamental problem of the amount and period of payment of German reparations is one in which we are only indirectly interested. We are not asking payments out of German reparations, and are concerned in this question only to the extent that it is an underlying factor of Europe's prostration. If the President calls a conference it will be as the friend of Europe and it will be so recognized.

Mr. President, any plan looking toward the solution of the European economic tangle would probably benefit the farmer sooner than any other American producer. His markets are demoralized most by existing situations. For more than two years Europe's disturbed state has been increasingly felt on this side of the Atlantic in our persistently demoralized markets. Something must be done to restore Europe's purchasing power. Something must be done to make a market for American products. Fifteen per cent of our farm output must find a market outside of the United States if we are to save our farm industry and properly maintain our own food supply. There can be no permanent solution of our own production and marketing problems until something approaching our normal trade relationships with foreign nations is restored. Our "trade circle" is at present deadlocked. A revival of export demand would be of immense and immediate benefit to the agricultural West. Now Europe starves, our surplus products rot, and without an adequate outlet for them no other practicable means can be devised to reestablish the one industry upon which our national well-being so certainly depends. It is as necessary to take care of and to dispose of this 15 per cent surplus as it is to market the 85 per cent which makes our existence possible. We must keep in mind at all times that the price of the surplus sets the price of all.

Mr. President, seemingly, at the beginning of the new year we have arrived at another one of those epochal moments in history when a wavering, uncertain world either chooses to do what is right with a prescience and unity almost God given, or fails to grasp the golden opportunity and afterwards atones for that failure by long years of hardship and suffering.

"Be sure you're right, then go ahead," is a time-proved American axiom; an American policy which came out of our experience in dealing with the warring red man. Paul Jones and Farragut proved it on the seas; Washington and Jackson and Scott and Sherman and Sheridan and Grant on the battle field; Monroe and Webster and Hay and Roosevelt and Hughes in shirt-sleeve diplomacy—the strictly American kind. This sort of American boldness has won peace greater victories than any ever won by war.

Secretary Hughes's speech and immediate announcement of the American program at the opening of the disarmament conference is a recent example of this traditional straightforward boldness, which, being sure that it is right, dares to go straight ahead. Europe's diplomats gasped when the American Secretary of State proposed out of hand to scrap more than a score of this country's warships; then they accepted the terms he laid down.

What took these veteran and seasoned diplomats off their feet was the straightforward sincerity of these proposals and their own knowledge that this program was not inspired by either purpose or desire to gain an advantage. The arms limitation conference of last year convinces me that the nations can get together here at Washington and actually agree on major economic questions. As I ardently welcomed the first proposal of the disarmament conference called by the President a year ago to consider the reduction of navies and naval programs, also to discuss the problems of the Far East and of the Pacific, I now welcome this further step for the reconstruction of Europe and the betterment of our own and world conditions, believing the time is ripe for such foresighted action and the need of it most pressing.

Mr. President, we have seen at the disarmament conference how this frank courage and common sense again got results. As a direct consequence of that conference we have good reason to hope there will be no war in the Pacific such as was previously declared inevitable between this country and Japan. In good faith Japan seems to be making all her pledges. And while Japan goes right ahead carrying out the Washington disarmament pact, the Japanese representative at the Lausanne conference rises to his feet to second the American ambassador's demand for the "open door" in all settlements between Turkey and Europe.

Mr. Hughes's New Haven address on December 29 contains suggestions which, if followed, will prepare the way for a world economic conference. The address also is important in that it indicates the willingness of our Government to be helpful in the solution of the perplexing problems of Europe.

It is idle to say—

that we are not interested in these problems, for we are deeply interested from an economic standpoint, as our credits and markets are involved, and from a humanitarian standpoint, as the heart of the American people goes out to those who are in distress. We can not dispose of these problems by calling them European, for they are world problems, and we can not escape the injurious consequences of a failure to settle them.

Referring to the problem of the debts of the allied countries to the United States Government, Mr. Hughes has this to say:

There has been a persistent attempt ever since the armistice to link up the debts owing to our Government with reparations or with projects of cancellation. This attempt was resisted in a determined manner under the former administration and under the present administration.

Referring to the present situation in Europe, Mr. Hughes's words are these:

We have no desire to see Germany relieved of her responsibility for the war or of her just obligations to make reparation for the injuries due to her aggression. On the other hand, we do not wish to see a prostrate Germany. There can be no economic recuperation in Europe unless Germany recuperates. We should view with disfavor measures which instead of producing reparations would threaten disaster.

But the situation does call for a settlement upon its merits. The first condition of a satisfactory settlement is that the question should be taken out of politics.

The fundamental condition is that in this critical moment the merits of the question as an economic one must alone be regarded.

Why should they not invite men of the highest authority in finance in their respective countries—men of prestige, experience, and honor—that their agreement upon the amount to be paid and upon a financial plan for working out the payments would be accepted throughout the world as the most authoritative expression obtainable? I have no doubt that distinguished Americans would be willing to serve in such a commission.

Mr. President, these words of Mr. Hughes embody a first step in a program which will be constructively helpful to Europe. They show a sympathetic attitude.

The United States in a world-wide economic conference should be the most powerful influence for world-wide, and especially European disarmament. With disarmament would come a tremendous reduction in governmental expenditures and a corresponding increase of ability among European nations to pay the debts they owe the United States.

It may be said that if the nations of Europe can not see that it would be to their advantage to disarm, they would heed no suggestions from the United States. Such reasoning is not sound. These nations are obsessed with the hate which is born of fear. They profoundly distrust each other, but they instinctively trust the United States, because they know that we have no part or lot in their feuds, nor are we concerned in their boundary disputes or selfishly affected by the righting of their wrongs, real or imaginary.

Armaments exist because economic and political problems are unsettled. Peace will not come until security is established, and security will not be established until just means are found for the settlement not only of the problems of Europe but of the greater economic problems of the world. Sooner or later the nations of the world will have to sit around a table and discuss, just as they did in the arms conference, the great underlying economic issues which, if allowed to remain unsettled, become political issues and lead to conflict and war.

All of the best minds of Europe know that real prosperity is contingent upon peace and good will, but none dare to offer the hands of friendship for fear their neighbor will take advantage of the fact that the hand is not the gun; so prosperity waits, while fear rules, with hate and suspicion as her handmaidens.

A world economic and armament-limiting conference to be called at an early date seems to be the only practicable means to be invoked for preventing war-wrecked Europe from going on the rocks and plunging us all into economic chaos. No country, however well circumstanced, could hope to escape with much more than its life from the tidal wave of such a catastrophe.

The world over, the problem is the reduction of tax burdens, the restoration of fiscal sanity to Europe, the settlement of the German reparations, the further reduction of armament and of military personnel—a complete return to the settling conditions of peace, industry, economy, and thrift. Europe knows this as well as we know it. Another international conference at this time would do much to bring this about through helpful understanding.

It is said that all these questions are for Europe's statesmen and not for America, and if conference after conference of European premiers has failed to find a solution of German reparations, which are said to be the underlying difficulty, it is for Europe's statesmen to reach agreement, and if they fail at home they will fail at Washington.

Mr. President, I have a hope that the atmosphere of Washington of American disinterestedness will prove helpful. I am willing at least that we should invite such a conference in the hope that with America present there will be a new and needed element that with no self-interest to serve, timely suggestions will come out during the conference that will help to compromise rival interests and bring about a basis of settlement. I do not know that the presence of Ambassador Child at the Lausanne conference has prevented disagreement or been a great factor in holding that conference together and preventing its breakup in failure, but I believe it has been helpful, and that a conference called by the President and held in Washington will in some way, but to a much greater extent, enable American wisdom, the best we have, to promote agreement where there is disagreement growing apparently more intractable rather than less as time goes by.

Mr. President, we can not imitate the ostrich and maintain either that there is no grave crisis to ourselves and the world growing out of European unsettlement, or that Europe is making slow but steady progress in working out her own salvation. We can not close our ears to the reports we hear on every hand that Europe is slipping down into an abyss, that a final crisis may at any time occur, when such an effort as we are now debating may be too late. I say nothing of a duty of idealism to come to Europe's rescue for its own sake alone. A policy of prudence, if nothing more, commends this proposal to me. But as an American I would welcome action on the part of our Government which in the outcome might, as I believe it has more than a fair prospect of doing, prove the turning point of the recovery of Europe, and so of the world, and again enable our country to fulfill its destiny of disinterested service to all countries and all peoples.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment intended to be proposed to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the very able address of the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. I am reminded of an occasion when I was Governor of the State of California, and an application was made by an individual for appointment in that State, an individual whom I did not know. I wrote to a mutual acquaintance and asked him concerning the individual who was making the application, and asked whether or not he possessed the requisite qualifications for the position to which he aspired. The reply came that, aside from the fact that he was dishonest, untruthful, and disreputable, he was a very excellent gentleman.

I have listened to the reasons which were given by the Senator from Kansas for favoring an economic conference and what he said would not under any circumstances do or permit to be done. As I recall his remarks, he said that he would not tolerate any cancellation of the debt, no alliances would he permit, no foreign commitments of any sort, nor would he tolerate incurring any obligations of any kind or of any character. But he would hold a conference.

What remains? There remains only that of which we are always prolific—there remains good advice—that and that alone; for if we hold a conference wherein we forbade cancellation of indebtedness; wherein he forbade, as the Senator said, any further obligations of any kind or character; wherein we would permit no alliances of any sort, and wherein we would tolerate no foreign commitments at all, nothing would remain for us to do except that which we are at liberty to do to-day. I will unite with the Senator from Kansas in utilizing the cables across the Atlantic to convey his advice, or that of any other Member of the Senate, or of any other American, to any court in Europe. That is the suggestion, I think, of the address of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the controversy between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I am not intimately concerned. The Senator from California, it seems, charges that the Senator from Kansas is willing to hold an economic conference; indeed, that he is anxious to do so, provided it be stipulated in advance that no economic questions shall be discussed and no action taken respecting any subject at issue. The Senator from California says that he is heartily in favor of Senators and others, representative of the Government of the United States, communicating their advice to European courts, provided it be understood that the advice be rejected, and that if rejected we take no action and make no further recommendation, and in that respect both propositions, of course, must fail of any useful purpose.

It may be significant to remark at this time that a proposal for an economic conference was pending in the Senate a few days ago, submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Upon assurance from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and perhaps other Senators that the adoption of the amendment providing for an economic conference would embarrass the administration and interfere with its plans for dealing with foreign problems the proposal was withdrawn, and no question of that nature is pending.

The press of the country reported this morning that it is the policy of the State Department and of the President to ignore the resolution recently adopted by the Senate advising or requesting the President to withdraw from German territory American troops now stationed there. The policy of maintaining an American Army on the Rhine, while avowing the purpose not to interpose in threatened ruptures between European nations, is incomprehensible to the finite mind. It must be that unpublished circumstances and facts unknown to the Senate and the rest of mankind generally underlie the course in which Secretary Hughes is drifting. Not only to the general public but, apparently, to the best-informed citizens who are not in the Secretary's confidence, aimlessly marching up the hill and down again is far more hazardous and likely to bring trouble than the announcement and pursuit of a definite and frank policy.

I call now upon the champions of the policy of nonparticipation in European problems, I call upon those who advocate that the United States shall stand aloof while with measured tread the armies of Europe again advance to conflict, to explain why the United States should maintain in the storm center a small military force, and thus invite conditions and actions which will render it difficult if not impossible for this Government and our people to escape involvement in threatened European war.

Manifestly, if we were not to take part in the settlement of acute European disputes which grew out of the war, we ought to have withdrawn our troops when we refused to ratify the treaty of Versailles and adopted the policy of nonparticipation in European affairs. It is not sufficient to answer that either France or Germany, or both of them, were gratified at the presence of American troops on the Rhine, for these nations preferred that our Government become a party to the Versailles treaty and take membership on its commissions created to settle reparations and other disputes.

The policy pursued, if it can be defined as a policy, has been anomalous in the extreme. After refusing for two years to go in we decline to come out. Having declined to interfere, or even to intercede, in threatened clashes between European governments, we have kept an Army in the storm center, and now, as the French advance into the Ruhr, the "best mind" in American diplomacy declares we must hold our little Army on the Rhine in the position where it will most likely become involved in hostilities. The President in his letter to the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, impliedly requested permission to appoint an official representative on the Reparation Commission. That request has not been acceded to, for the reason that Secretary Hughes has announced in the public press that the proposed action by Congress comes too late to afford relief, if, indeed, at any time heretofore it would have been advisable. No longer than three days ago, Saturday, the 6th of January, the Senate, by almost a unanimous vote, adopted a resolution requesting the President to withdraw American troops from Germany, which action manifestly should have been taken long ago, in view of our pretended desire not to take any part in European controversies. In this morning's press it is announced, upon the alleged authority of the State Department, that the resolution requesting the President to bring home from Germany American troops now stationed there will be ignored to avoid antagonizing France before that Government ratifies the five-power naval treaty and the four-power pact negotiated through the Washington conference. France has refused the only plan proposed by Secretary Hughes for averting pending conflict between France and Germany—that is, the creation of an international commission of high financial authority to adjust reparations.

The Borah amendment proposing an economic conference was withdrawn from the Senate. The bill granting the President authority to appoint official representatives of the Government to serve on the Reparation Commission has not yet been disposed of. The President impliedly requested the Congress to grant him that authority. The press reports indicate that the Secretary of State does not want the President of the United States authorized to take that course even should the President find it necessary or advisable now or in the future to appoint an official representative of the Government on the Reparation Commission.

Here let me say, passing over the question as to whether this Government should have representation on the Reparation Commission, as necessarily answered in the affirmative, because both the present and the former administration have taken that view, that if we are to have any representation it ought to be official. The personal agents of the Government or the President should not receive compensation from Germany through the Reparation Commission, and our Government stands unwilling to take any responsibility either to approve or to repudiate the course which those representatives may find it wise to pursue. Moreover, everyone should desire if the Government has representation on the commission that representation should be effective, and this can not be if our delegates are denied official status.

With no definite plan of action in mind, we seem to be pursuing what is at once the most dangerous and least promising course possible. The ship of state is drifting without chart or compass, the helmsman apparently asleep at his post.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The proposal of our State Department, I believe, is that there should be a commission of experts to consider the reparation question, and I believe France declines to accept that plan?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I made that statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. In those circumstances where are we?

Mr. ROBINSON. We are adrift.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are practically where we were at the beginning?

Mr. ROBINSON. The situation is constantly becoming more critical. The Executive insists upon maintaining upon the Rhine a small army, and at the same time announces a policy of nonaction out of respect to France. Of course, Mr. President, if we recognize these difficulties as no part of the responsibilities of this Government, then we have no right to dictate or suggest to the European Governments what course they shall pursue. It is said that we have informed France we are not pleased at her advance in the Ruhr; that notwithstanding the fact that it is none of our business and wrong for the United States to take part in solving the problems which threaten disaster in Europe, we have notified France that we do not like the attitude she has assumed; and it is also stated that France pays no attention to that notification; and yet, out of respect for France and fear of giving offense, we insist upon keeping our flag and our troops in the area where the storm must break when it comes.

Mr. President, as a part of my remarks I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the Washington Star of Monday, December 8, 1922, by Frederic William Wile, on the subject "Three big American agencies to sift international affairs."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Monday, December 8, 1922.]

THREE BIG AMERICAN AGENCIES TO SIFT INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS—FOREIGN PROBLEMS WILL BE CONSIDERED BY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, CIVIC FEDERATION, AND FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE.

(By Frederic William Wile.)

While the Harding administration, Micawber-like, is waiting for something to turn up, no fewer than three great private American agencies are at work on the problem of constructive American cooperation in European rehabilitation. They are:

1. The United States Chamber of Commerce.
2. The National Civic Federation.
3. The Council of Foreign Relations.

By the end of January the activities of each of these organizations in the direction of concrete action will be in full swing. They constitute an amalgamated volume of public sentiment that can hardly be without influence upon the administration's foreign policy. They are nonpartisan and bipartisan in their personnel and programs. The president of the chamber of commerce is Julius H. Barnes, a Progressive Republican. The president of the Civic Federation is Alton B. Parker, one-time Democratic candidate for President of the United States, and the chairman of its executive committee is Elihu Root, perhaps the most distinguished Republican in the country. The chairman of the Council of Foreign Relations is John W. Davis, Democrat, formerly American ambassador to Great Britain.

ALL THREE TO ACT.

All three of the above-mentioned bodies are about to launch activities designated to bring order out of European chaos. The chamber of commerce's foreign affairs committee will meet in Washington on January 12 to deal with the reparations question. The chamber is not discouraged by the courteous rebuff it has suffered at the hands of the administration in respect to its proposal of a "business men's inquiry" into the reparations tangle. The chairman of the chamber's foreign affairs committee is A. C. Bedford, one of the Standard Oil Co.'s foremost executives. He is an avowed advocate of the "right" of the world's business men to take a hand in adjusting the international economic situation.

During its meeting in Washington the chamber of commerce committeemen will entertain M. Albert Thomas, former French minister of munitions and now in charge of the labor office of the League of Nations at Geneva. M. Thomas will detail the reparations position from the French standpoint, and doubtless reiterate his expressed view that France is ready to consider sympathetically any definite plan America has to offer for unraveling the reparations puzzle. The United States Chamber of Commerce will send a strong delegation to the Rome conclave of international chambers in March. The delegation will advocate there the scheme recently put forth by the American chamber in favor of a world business commission on reparations.

NOTED MEN TO SPEAK.

On January 16 and 17 the initial meeting of the National Civic Federation's committee on foreign relations and national defense will be held in Washington. Elihu Root is chairman of the committee, which includes 100 of the most distinguished men and women in the country. The Washington meeting has been called to consider the questions of "How far, and in what manner should the United States participate in international affairs?" and "How far is it wise at this time to reduce our Army and Navy?" Alton B. Parker will preside at the meeting and Mr. Root will deliver the opening address. Other speakers will be: Robert Lansing, John Hays Hammond, Oscar S. Straus, Samuel Gompers, Mrs. George Maynard Minor, Prof. Jeremiah W. Jenks (who has recently returned from four months' study of conditions in Europe), James Brown Scott, Mrs. Horace Mann Towner, and Col. Alvin M. Owsley, national commander of the American Legion.

Within a week or 10 days the Council of Foreign Relations, whose headquarters is in New York, will open a series of important "round tables" designed to elicit public opinion and direct popular sentiment on the outstanding foreign problems of the hour. The council's first "round table" will appropriately deal with reparations. It will be presided over by Norman H. Davis, former Undersecretary of State.

WOULD ENTER LEAGUE.

Mr. Davis is a firm believer in the doctrine that reparations are essentially a political rather than a purely economic question, taking issue on that score with the views of the Harding administration. The financial adviser of the American peace mission at Paris is understood to feel that the surest path leading to European rehabilitation is by way of the League of Nations. An initial step in that direction, according to the Davis view, is America's entry into the league on her own terms, but under conditions that will at least signal to Europe the readiness of the United States to be of actual, tangible help. Mr. Davis is spokesman of a body of opinion that sees the prime need of the hour in some form of American action that will soothe Europe's shattered nerves, encourage her to practice common sense and induce her to quit playing international politics.

The three national agencies herein under discussion, while probably not at one with respect to the form of American cooperation in Europe, are undoubtedly in agreement on the general principles that action, and not inaction, is incumbent upon the United States. When White House spokesmen on December 15 announced that America could no longer hold itself aloof from the distressed concerns of Europe, "cooperationists" of all parties in the country took heart.

In the further statement emanating from the White House that even "the most irreconcilable" of Americans could hardly affirm the disinterestedness of the United States, "cooperationists" thought they detected a healthy, if tardy, decision upon the part of the administration to fight the JOHNSON-REED-LA FOLLETTE "nonentanglers" to the death.

WAITING ATTITUDE ADOPTED.

During the intervening three weeks the apparent December ardor of the administration anent Europe's chaos has evidently undergone a January chill. At the White House and the State Department the attitude immortalized by Herbert H. Asquith in British politics—the policy of "wait and see"—has been adopted. The Cabinet assembled last Friday, but held no meeting, for the stated reason that there was nothing urgently requiring discussion.

The three national organizations which are moving this week and this month toward a mobilization of public sentiment regarding world affairs are obviously of different opinion. It is not unlikely they will find ways and means of bringing their views effectively to competent attention in Washington.

On January 26 a prominent Republican, former Gov. Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, will address the Council of Foreign Relations' dinner in New York. The strong contender for the 1920 Republican presidential nomination is a League of Nations man. He has recently returned from Europe a devout believer in the necessity of America's distinterested participation in Old World affairs.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read for amendment only and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for printing and binding, on page 6, line 9, after the word "direct," to insert "but not including work done at field printing plants of the Weather Bureau and the Forest Service authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, in accordance with the act approved March 1, 1919, or emergency field printing and binding authorized by said joint committee," so as to make the paragraph read:

For all printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services, located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $760,000, including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the Joint Resolution No. 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $250,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, but not including work done at field printing plants of the Weather Bureau and the Forest Service, authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, in accordance with the act approved March 1, 1919, or emergency field printing and binding authorized by said joint committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for "General expenses, Extension Service," on page 11, after line 4, to strike out "There is hereby appropriated the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for paying for the interpretation, translation, and transcription of discussion and the printing, binding, and distribution of the proceedings of the World's Dairy Congress, including the payment of postage, to foreign countries and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary to accomplish these purposes," and in lieu thereof to insert:

For the interpretation, translation, and transcription of discussions and the printing, binding, and distribution of the proceedings of the World's Dairy Congress, including the payment of postage to foreign countries and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary to accomplish these purposes, to be immediately available, $30,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why there should be a change of the House language in that clause of the bill and an insertion of new language?

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator indicate more exactly to what he refers?

Mr. FLETCHER. As to the committee amendment on page 11, I desire to inquire the reason for striking out the House language and inserting that amendment?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Florida the provision in question was adopted on the floor of the House. The only change recommended by the Senate committee is the insertion of the words "to be immediately available." That is the only difference between the Senate committee amendment and the provision as it came from the other House. The clause concerns the publications to be issued at the coming World's Dairy Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. When is that congress to be held?

Mr. McNARY. It is to be held at a time cotemporaneous with the National Dairy Exposition; but the time and place have not as yet been determined. In order that the money may be available during the present fiscal year, if necessary, it was thought best by the committee, at the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture, to insert the words "to be immediately available." That is the only change which is proposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that the amount of the appropriation is the same?

Mr. McNARY. It is exactly the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for general expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, on page 27, at the end of line 13, to increase the appropriation for applying the methods of eradication or control of the white-pine blister rust, etc., from "$200,000" to "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 18, after the word "originate," to insert "and $200,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, by proper authority, provided an equal amount: Provided further, That $10,000 of the said sum of $350,000 may be expended for investigations concerning rust resistant wheat," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $622,505: Provided, That $350,000 shall be set aside for the location of and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate and $200,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, by proper authority, provided an equal amount: Provided further, That $10,000 of the said sum of $350,000 may be expended for investigations concerning rust-resistant wheat.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators have expressed the desire to be present when this item was reached. I did not expect that we should reach it this afternoon, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over at this time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McNary	Smith
Bayard	Gerry	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Harris	New	Sutherland
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Townsend
Bursum	Heflin	Oddie	Trammell
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Cameron	Kellogg	Phipps	Warren
Capper	King	Poindexter	Watson
Caraway	Ladd	Pomerene	Williams
Couzens	La Follette	Ransdell	Willis
Curtis	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard
Fletcher	McCormick	Simmons

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent from the Senate because of a death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, is an amendment in order now to the provision on page 29 appropriating money for the extermination of the barberry bush?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments are first to be considered.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment I desire to offer is to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment on page 29 was passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggested a few moments ago that, perhaps, the committee amendment should go over on account of the absence of a number of Senators who are interested in the item. I had in mind particularly the author of the amendment, the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from North Dakota, who had spoken to me about this item. They are now all present, and, therefore, I desire to proceed with the consideration of the amendment at this time and ask a recision of the order by which the amendment was passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 29, line 18.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 29, it is proposed to strike out all after line 8 on that page, down to and including line 24, and in lieu thereof to insert the following words:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $772,505: Provided, That $500,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate and $350,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, through State or local appropriations or through contributions of organizations or individuals, provided an equal amount: Provided further, That $10,000 of the said sum of $500,000 may be expended for investigations concerning rust-resistant wheat.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the only change from the committee amendment is to increase the total amount from $350,000 to $500,000, leaving $150,000 to be expended only in the event the States or municipalities or private individuals by subscription equal the amount so appropriated, $150,000. In other words, $350,000 would be subject to be expended in the various States, and the other $150,000 added to the appropriation by this amendment could be expended only upon the States, municipalities, or private individuals putting up an equal amount.

Mr. President, I think the committee are fully familiar with the fact that a great deal of good has resulted and really great work has been done in the States in exterminating the barberry bush. It is stated to me—and I believe all of this appears before the committee, although I have not had an opportunity to read all of the hearings—that in some 475 counties the survey has been completed; that is, they have been over those counties, surveyed them, and exterminated the barberry. In 391 counties the work still remains to be done. That is, these are the counties where the barberry bush is most prevalent, and where wheat raising is one of the principal industries of the farmers.

I take it, from an estimate made by the head of one of the organizations having to do with this work, that it will be cheaper to appropriate this money now than to appropriate a smaller sum for a longer term of years. It is estimated by the gentlemen having to do with this work that if $500,000 is appropriated in 1924 and $300,000 in 1925 the work can be completed in one and six-tenths years; while if only $350,000 is appropriated in 1924, $350,000 in 1925, and $260,000 in 1926, it will require more money, and will take two and seven-tenths years to do the same work as though a larger appropriation were made this year. In other words, it would require $960,000 in three years to do the work which could be done with $800,000 in two years.

There is another reason why this work should be done as rapidly as possible. There is no question that in exterminating the barberry bush a resurvey has to be made. It is found impossible to eradicate the barberry entirely by going over it once. Sprouts from roots or seedlings will come up, and the territory has to be gone over again, so that the quicker the work can be done the more economical and the more beneficial to the country.

A great deal of testimony has been given to me, and I suppose to the committee, of practical experiments in the various States as to the extent of the spreading of the rust by the barberry bush. It has been demonstrated that not only have the spores been found in the air at several thousand feet height but in the neighborhood of the barberry within a few miles the rust has been much worse than farther distant; so it seems to me that it would be a matter of economy, and not only economy so far as the money expenditures are concerned but tremendous economy in the protection of the growth of wheat, to have this survey carried on as rapidly as possible, and completed at the earliest date consistent with reasonable appropriations.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me the proposition would be somewhat confused and ambiguous if we should adopt it in the form proposed by the Senator. He proposes to appropriate for the investigation and improvement of cereals, and other things mentioned in the bill down to line 16, $772,505, instead of $622,505, provided, he says in this amendment, that $500,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate, and $350,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sums shall be expended in any State until local cooperation contributes an equal amount. He sets aside $500,000, and then he says that $350,000 only shall be spent unless local cooperation contributes $75,000 more, the Government contributing $150,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars more.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides an equal amount. The language is:

Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, by proper authority—

The language is changed by the Senator to read "through State or local appropriations," and so forth—provided an equal amount.

That is, an equal amount of $150,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be $75,000 by the Government and $75,000 by local subscription.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; $150,000 by the Government and $150,000 by local subscription or State authority.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would make $650,000, then.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; that would make $500,000 altogether.

Mr. LENROOT. No; $650,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars altogether.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would make $650,000 altogether.

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, yes; including the contributions by the States; certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is not what was contemplated, as I understand. As I understand, the Senator contemplates that $500,000 shall be devoted to barberry investigation.

Mr. KELLOGG. By the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. But only $350,000 by the Government, and beyond that there must be equal contribution to make up the other $150,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would be $75,000 for the local organizations and $75,000 for the Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I think the Senator is wrong—$150,000 by the Government and $150,000 by private subscription or State authority.

Mr. HEFLIN. Making $500,000 in all, as I understand.

Mr. KELLOGG. Making $650,000 in all.

Mr. HEFLIN. Five hundred thousand dollars by the Federal Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. Five hundred thousand dollars by the Federal Government and $150,000 by the States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Making $650,000 in all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why would not the Senator have it read in this way:

Provided, That $500,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate, and in addition to said sum $150,000 shall be set aside for expenditure in the States affected, provided local organizations contribute one-half thereof.

Mr. KELLOGG. That would be entirely satisfactory to me, but that would appropriate $150,000 more than we have asked for.

Mr. SMITH. That would make the total, then, $800,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; $350,000, and then $150,000 more, provided local organizations contribute one-half of that.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; provided they contribute an equal amount.

Mr. FLETCHER. An equal amount.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is, $150,000 more.

Mr. HEFLIN. That would make $650,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the amendment is perfectly plain.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me it is a little confusing as it is.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that the subcommittee did have it at one time as the Senator now suggests; but the difficulty was that if the whole $150,000 additional should not be appropriated by the States, none of the $150,000 of Federal appropriation could be used. Therefore we have put the language as we have so that as to any sum appropriated by the States—whether it be $150,000 or $75,000—there will be at least that much additional money allotted by the Federal Government to meet it.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, the local interests will not be obliged to contribute $150,000.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. Whatever they contribute, the Government will appropriate an equal amount.

Mr. LENROOT. The Government will match it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is that the purpose?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps that language will cover it then. I had in mind the possibility that the local interests might not contribute anything.

Mr. SMITH. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, if he wants to increase the appropriation, that he leave as it is the language of the present amendment as to the mutual contribution between the States and the Government, and increase the amount of the straight appropriation that he desires the Government to make.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think that more than the amount asked for in this amendment ought to be appropriated. I think that is a fair amount.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the committee gave this item careful consideration this year, as it has done for the last three years. The committee realize that splendid work is being done in the eradication of the barberry and its destructive force. The amount allowed last year was $200,000. The House increased that by $150,000, making a total appropriation of $350,000, which we thought a very generous increase over the estimate and over the amount appropriated last year. The committee felt it could not go much further and treat that item more liberally, because there is not sufficient cooperation by the States in which the infestation occurs.

A number of the States are doing fairly well in this matter, aiding the Government in this good work, but some of the States are not contributing in accordance with the extent of the infestation, and the committee thought the proper way to start would be to require that the amount appropriated by the Government be met by an equal portion from the States or the communities. Consequently we have changed the House provision, devoting $200,000, what might be called "free" money, to be expended in the various States, 13 in number. The $150,000 remaining must be matched by a like amount from these communities and these States, which, if done, would give a grand total of the $500,000 which they are asking to do this work. The committee thought if they would appropriate the amount proposed by the House and require this excess sum to be paid by these States, they would have the amount which is required to be expended, namely, $500,000, with which they will bring about the eradication of the barberry bushes in 1.7 years, or, if $350,000 is appropriated as suggested by the House, it would be 2.7 years.

So it is now up to these States and communities to meet the Government only a portion of the way, and if they do they will have all the money they can properly expend. The committee thought they were dealing very generously with them, and it is the desire of the whole committee that the item stand as presented to the Senate in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand the Senator to object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Senator in charge of the bill, so far as he can speak as such, prefers the provision embodied in the bill as reported to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do the estimates permit of this increase of $150,000?

Mr. McNARY. I stated to the Senator from Florida that the estimate was $200,000. The House increased it by $150,000, thereby arriving at the sum of $350,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. The estimate was for only $200,000?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Was the Budget allowance $200,000?

Mr. McNARY. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the difference between the amendment of the committee and the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McNARY. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota would carry $150,000 more than the committee allowed?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is true that all the States have not made appropriations equal to those of Minnesota. I am informed by the gentleman in charge in Minnesota that in 1921 Minnesota spent more money for this purpose than the Federal Government spent in Minnesota, and in 1922 almost as much as the Federal Government spent. I am informed that in North Dakota they appropriated $25,000 for two years. The Senator from North Dakota can correct me if that is wrong. They report that this sum has been requested by the legislature and by the governor, with the support of the commissioner of agriculture of North Dakota, the farm bureau, and the State experiment station. Other States have not appropriated as much, but Wisconsin appropriated $15,000 a year, Illinois $10,000, and Michigan, I think, $11,000. In the State of Minnesota, however, the northern part of which is a large wheat-raising section, we have spent almost as much as the Federal Government has spent. This money has been raised very largely by private subscriptions. In 1921 we spent more than the Federal Government spent. So far as Minnesota is concerned, the work is nearly completed, but in other States it is not; and, of course, there is no use having the work completed in one State when in the States surrounding it the barberry bush still exists, because it will spread again.

It does seem to me as though an additional $150,000 ought to be allowed if an equal amount is put up by the States, because the importance of this matter is the time in which it shall be done. The shortest time possible is not only the cheapest for the Federal Government but far the best in protecting the grain crop. It is a question, in my judgment, whether Congress will make a reasonable appropriation now or two years from now. Why not make it now and finish this work? There are estimates of the damage done to the wheat crops. I will not stop to read them, but the loss in many States is appalling, directly attributable to the barberry bush in the immediate neighborhood where it is discovered. The losses in the wheat crop of this country are tremendous.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true; but can the Senator explain why in those States where it is of such tremendous importance the States do not make larger appropriations?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, I can not. In Minnesota we have raised the money by private subscription and equaled the Government appropriation. I suppose the difficulty is in getting the people to realize that the barberry is the cause of the rust. The Federal Government knows it. The Federal Government is experimenting, and it has demonstrated that fact beyond question. I have no doubt the reason the States have not taken it up and made greater appropriations is on account of the fact that there is a good deal of skepticism about the cause of the pest. The Senator from North Dakota is present, and he knows what is being done in his State and the necessity for the continuance of the work.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, the most destructive agent for our wheat crop in North Dakota has been the rust which has come from the barberry bush. In 1916 it was predicted that North Dakota would have the largest crop of wheat it had ever grown, the largest crop before that being 156,000,000 bushels; but in four days in July the rust struck the crop of North Dakota, and as a result they had only 39,000,000 bushels.

North Dakota has become deeply interested in this question of the barberry eradication. I think it has made its fair share of appropriations, and the bush is largely eradicated from that State. The experiment station of the agricultural college and the extension division of North Dakota have led in the State in carrying on the work of the eradication of the barberry bush. I think it is money well expended. European experiments indicate that the barberry bush can be eradicated and through that the rust held in control.

Some of the States may not have sessions of the legislature this year, and other States may fail to make appropriations; and if we appropriate only $200,000 and, for example, eradicate the barberry bush only from my own State, it is not going to protect North Dakota, with the States south or east or west of it having barberry bushes within their borders failing to make appropriations to help to eradicate it, because it is well known that the spores are carried for long distances, probably thousands of miles, and can do their work of infecting a region where there are no barberry bushes.

Personally, I feel that it is a wise move to make an appropriation of $350,000, so that the work can go on in the same order in which it has been going on, so that we can destroy the barberry bush as rapidly as possible. Then we should add the $150,000 for the benefit of those States which desire to take advantage of this and secure additional appropriations, either through the interest of the people of the State or through direct appropriation. I hope, therefore, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee. After that has been voted on the question will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LENROOT. May I suggest that the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota in part amends the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct; but in part it does not.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that, by consent, the vote be taken first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, which is partly in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. FLETCHER. And if the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is adopted, that will close the whole case.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be voted on first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is to strike out something that is not in the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. It could be done by unanimous consent, could it not?

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent for a vote on my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator proposes to strike out all after line 8 on page 29 of the bill as reported from the committee and to insert:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $772,505: Provided, That $500,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate and $350,000 of said sum shall be allotted for expenditure in the States affected, and that no additional sum shall be expended in any State until it has, through State or local appropriations or through contributions of organizations or individuals, provided an equal amount: Provided further, That $10,000 of the said sum of $500,000 may be expended for investigations concerning rust-resistant wheat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I give notice at this time that I shall ask for a separate vote on this item when the bill reaches the Senate.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 33, line 13, at the end of the items for general expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, to strike out "$2,756,450" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,806,450," so as to read:

In all, general expenses, $2,806,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. At this time I ask unanimous consent that the clerk of the committee may make such alterations as may be necessary in the totals throughout the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 14, to strike out "$3,241,470" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,291,470," so as to read:

Total, Bureau of Plant Industry, $3,291,470.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for general expenses, Forest Service, on page 38, line 13, before the name "Tennessee," to insert "Pennsylvania," so as to read:

In national forest district 7, Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Oklahoma, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, New Hampshire, Maine, Porto Pico, $146,073.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 14, page 48, the last items read being for general expenses, Bureau of Soils.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the total appropriation carried in the bill with reference to the investigation of soils?

Mr. McNARY. It is the same as was allowed last year, $168,200.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement from the Ohio experiment station relative to the matter.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION,
Wooster, Ohio, January 3, 1923.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I wish to call your attention to a cut of $48.000 in the appropriation for soil-survey work of the Department of Agriculture, as reported by the Budget Bureau, which vitally concerns the soil-survey work in Ohio. The Bureau of Soils, which has charge of the Federal end of this work, has been cooperating with Ohio and 34 other States that are engaged in soil-survey work on a 50–50 basis. It will be absolutely impossible for the bureau to continue this cooperation unless the appropriation is set back to $168,000, where it was for the current year.

If Ohio can not have the usual Federal assistance the coming year its soil-survey work will have to be considerably curtailed. As a matter of fact, we had hoped to expand it. This soil survey will do for agriculture what the Geological Survey has done, to furnish reliable information regarding our mineral resources. Ohio's greatest mineral asset is its soil. The value of the products of Ohio's farms and orchards is many times the value of all its mines of coal, oil, gas, stone, and clay products.

The work of the Ohio experiment station is showing the possibility and the economic practicability of greatly increasing the crop yields of the State. It is also showing that different soils require different treatments, and before the farmers of the State can receive the full benefit of the station's work on its 14 different experimental fields scattered over the State there must be accurate knowledge of their soil conditions, which can only be obtained through a detailed soil survey. In 1912 this station made a reconnaissance survey of the entire State, dealing in a broad way with the general soil features. We are now conducting careful detailed surveys of the individual counties, visiting every farm in a county. If the Federal appropriation is cut as proposed our Ohio work can not help but suffer. I hope that you can get this cut restored.

Sincerely yours, C. G. WILLIAMS, Director.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 64, line 19, to strike out "$426,400" and insert "$700,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $700,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is now five minutes after 5. How long does the Senator in charge of the bill propose to continue to-night? I have an amendment to offer to the amendment which has just been stated, and it would take a little time to present it. I would like to have the committee amendment passed over.

Mr. McNARY. We are working on committee amendments only at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know. I propose to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Let the committee amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment will be passed over, together with the amendment on page 64, line 20, in the total.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Enforcement of the United States grain standards act," on page 65, at the end of line 19, to strike out "$536,223" and insert "$546,223"; so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain standards act, including rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $546,223.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, at the end of line 1, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics from "$3,727,253" to "$4, 010,853."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 23, after the word "travel," to insert a comma and the words "including travel at official stations"; so as to make the paragraph read:

MILEAGE RATES FOR MOTOR VEHICLES.

Whenever, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the expenses of travel, including travel at official stations, can be reduced thereby, he may, in lieu of actual traveling expenses, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the payment of not to exceed 3 cents per mile for motor cycle or 7 cents per mile for an automobile, used for necessary travel on official business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Center Market, District of Columbia, on page 79, line 7, after the word "claims," to insert "for damage to goods while in storage in Center Market that have accrued or may accrue at any time during the operation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than $500 may be used for the payment of claims for damage to goods while in storage in Center Market that have accrued or may accrue at any time during the operation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Special items," on page 80, after line 14, to strike out "Forest roads and trails: For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, $3,000,000, to be available until expended, being part of the sum of $6,500,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, by paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, immediately upon the passage of this act, to apportion and prorate among the several States, Alaska, and Porto Rico, as provided in section 23 of said Federal highway act, the sum of $6,500,000 authorized to be appropriated by said paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act approved June 19, 1922: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall act upon projects submitted to him under his apportionment and prorating of this authorization and his approval of any such project shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost of such project"; and in lieu thereof to insert:

Forest roads and trails: For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, and as authorized by paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922, to be available until expended, $6,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, at the end of line 15, to increase the total appropriation for the Department of Agriculture from "$69,068,053" to "$72,901,653."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. The first amendment passed over is, on page 64, line 19, to strike out "$426,400" and insert "$700,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $700,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is the amendment to which I had reference a moment ago. It relates to a very important service. I proposed an amendment a few days ago to the effect that the appropriation be increased to $1,100,000. The committee increased the House provision from $426,400 to $700,000, which, of course, is a very great improvement over the House provision. At the same time I think it is inadequate.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator from Florida read the Senate committee hearings on the item?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have.

Mr. McNARY. If I may say to the Senator, I think perhaps he is misinformed. The service did not extend to the Pacific coast. The farthest western point was Lincoln, Nebr. It did not go into the Southeastern States, including Florida and adjoining States. The Bureau of the Budget estimated the cost of nationalizing the service at the time of the hearings would be $152,000 to carry it to the Pacific coast and $118,000 down to the Southeastern States, including Florida. The total sum has been increased from $426,000 to $700,000, to include all the States of the Union and make the service national in its character. I think this sum of money covers just what the Senator would have done respecting the enlargement of the service.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the situation pretty well. I put in the RECORD the other day, on January 5, a letter to me from the Secretary of Agriculture which explains the whole situation, and in which the Secretary said:

With the appropriation provided for the current fiscal year it is possible to maintain news service over leased wire at the following points: Washington; Boston; New York; Baltimore; Philadelphia; Pittsburgh; Cincinnati; Columbus; Chicago; Waupaca and Fond du Lac, Wis.; Minneapolis; St. Paul; St. Louis; East St. Louis; Kansas City; Omaha; Fort Worth and Austin, Tex.

Those are the points where it is possible to maintain the service on leased wires with the appropriation provided in the House bill. Of course, that leaves the whole region of the country south of Washington and east of St. Louis without any service of this kind at all.

The Secretary went on to say:

Under cooperative agreements with various States, whereby such States pay the cost of the leased-wire extensions from the Federal circuit, offices are being maintained at Trenton, N. J.; Harrisburg and Lancaster, Pa.; Columbus, Ohio; Madison, Wis.; Jefferson City and St. Joseph, Mo.; and Lincoln, Nebr.

The Secretary then went on to describe when this work was instituted, as follows:

During the period from August 10, 1917, to June 30, 1919, a very complete market-news service was built up in the department, financed largely from the war-emergency funds provided under the food production act. The service in operation at that time included a leased-wire circuit which covered the Pacific coast region and another circuit which included the important market centers of the South and East. It was necessary to discontinue both the western circuit and the southern circuit on June 30, 1919, however, on account of the great reduction in available funds. Since that time it has been possible to maintain only a "skeleton" organization, which, of course, must include the large eastern markets and the points of heavy shipment in the Middle West.

As you are doubtless aware, a bill has been introduced in the Senate which provides for the appropriation of $500,000 for the extension of the present leased-wire service to Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, and other cities upon the Pacific coast.

Many requests have been received by the department also for an extension of the leased-wire service into the important producing sections of the Southeastern States. We have made a careful estimate of the cost of this extension, and have found that with an additional appropriation of $200,000 a leased-wire circuit could be arranged to include Atlanta, Ga.; Jacksonville and Orlando, Fla.; Birmingham, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn.; and New Orleans, La.; and probably a few other points for short periods during the year.

The accompanying map (No. 2) shows the principal leased-wire circuits which were in operation while funds were available under the war-emergency appropriations.

Map No. 3 shows in general the leased-wire circuits which would be necessary in order to extend this service to the principal producing sections of the West and the South. In order to conduct the news services on this basis an appropriation of approximately $1,100,000 would be necessary.

That is what the Secretary said in his letter to me and that is what I am governed by in offering the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is a very important service and ought to be kept up and kept up properly. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that it was testified before the committee that it would not require the sum of which the Senator speaks to restore the service, but it was estimated that if the service was restored or extended there would follow a demand for the gathering of additional information that is not now being gathered, and that is what makes the difference between the amount the committee recommends and the amount requested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Am I to understand the Senator to say that the service could be put into operation carrying the same information that is obtained now?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; giving the same information that is given now.

Mr. FLETCHER. And that could be done with the increased amount proposed by the committee?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. The $1,100,000 was intended to cover additional information.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; for instance, information concerning grapes in California, which information they are not gathering at all now, and matters of that kind.

Mr. FLETCHER. I, of course, was controlled entirely by the letter showing that $1,100,000 is required to put this service in operation as it should be, and I was governed largely by testimony before the committee. I obtained a copy of the hearings. On page 75 Mr. Marquis testified—and I read from the printed hearings—as follows:

Senator McNARY. That is a very, very important service and there is a very great demand for it that seems to be national in its character. I have a letter here from Prof. C. A. Lewis, of Chicago. He is known to me personally as being one of the most reliable of editors, having the best knowledge of the subject of anyone I know. He is urging it. There is no amount given. He just discusses the value of the service wherever it has been inaugurated. He believes it should be general if it is to be done at all. I have numerous letters from along the coast, and from the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg.; and then Senator JONES has a bill urging its extension to Washington, and Senator KING, of Utah, has a bill asking that it be extended into Utah. Of course, I want it in Oregon, and every other fellow I know wants it in his part of the country.

I believe you know that it has been through the Atlantic States as far as Boston, and it goes into Chicago and Cincinnati, and all through that country. It goes up to St. Paul in the Northwest, and then runs to Omaha, and then to San Francisco.

Last year we extended it into Texas. It went to Fort Worth and on to Austin. There is no leased-wire service to any other points than those I have named. There is no connection to the Southeastern States or farther west than Lincoln, Nebr.

Now, this service is one that I think has greater value than any other service that the Agricultural Department gives with regard to market conditions. There is nothing more helpful to the farmer, particularly as the products raised in the West are so diversified and so perishable in character. There is no other place where they suffer as much now. It seems as though, if we have the service at all, it ought to go into every part of the country rather than a few localized districts; and what I want to know is the cost. I feel deeply in this matter.

What would it cost to extend this, to give the same service to the southeastern section, and the far Western States, as the other States in the country get?

Mr. MARQUIS. I might say that this question was asked of the department, and in reply to a letter from Senator NORRIS the Secretary of Agriculture presented a tentative estimate on the cost of restoring what we would regard as a fairly satisfactory national service. Since this letter has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget as not in conflict with the financial program of the President, I think I am at liberty to use it as the basis for a reply to that question.

Senator JONES. You said he made an estimate. What was it?

Mr. MARQUIS. The estimate involved for restoring an entire national service is $1,100,000, which would, of course, include the present amount of $405,000, which is in the estimates.

That was his statement before the committee. Mr. Marquis further said, at page 77:

Senator JONES. Supposing that we raised this to $500,000, what could you do toward extension to the Pacific coast?

Mr. MARQUIS. We could do comparatively little, for the reason that that amount would provide only for the leased wire. This plan is laid out in order to make a reasonably national service. One problem involved is the question of a long leased wire. In this case it would be from Kansas City westward to either San Francisco or the Northwest.

Following the inquiry made by your chairman, we separated out from this estimate of $1,100,000 the estimate of what it would cost to extend the service direct to San Francisco and thence to Portland, or direct from Kansas City to Portland, going through Salt Lake City and then northward. This involves more than merely the cost of the wire station, because when you go, for instance, into the apple region of the Northwest you must serve those people with the kind of information they want. In many instances we are not collecting the specific kind of information they want; consequently it puts a greater load on our eastern bases for the collection of that information and involves additional cost for the collection of that information that will be wanted in that area—

And so on through the hearing.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will turn to page 77 of the hearings, which he has before him, he will see that Mr. Marquis testifies as follows:

This involves more than merely the cost of the wire station, because when you go, for instance, into the apple region of the Northwest you must serve those people with the kind of information they want. In many instances we are not collecting the specific kind of information they want—

And so forth. The statement goes on to show that $1,100,000 in addition to furnishing the present service involves furnishing and securing many kinds of information which is not now being secured at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, possibly, the Senator from Wisconsin is correct in that statement, but at the same time I am a little bit doubtful that the amount proposed will cover the service that is desired. Mr. Marquis also testifies at page 80. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] asked him:

What would it cost to put the service into the Southeast? You have not included that?

Mr. MARQUIS. No; I have not put in any estimate for the South. The southern branch which we would suggest restoring would be a wire from Washington to Atlanta, with a leg to Jacksonville and Orlando, Fla. That would be the main line to the citrus region, and that is estimated to cost $69,000; another branch to Birmingham and Memphis would cost $27,600, and the extension direct from Atlanta to New Orleans would cost $21,432. That is merely for the wire and the offices.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, I think, foots up about $117,000 or $118,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; it foots up $118,032.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee took that amount and the $152,000 to extend the service to the Pacific coast and then added some $30,000 or $40,000, making a $274,000 increase. We came to the conclusion that that amount would give pretty good service to the West and South, at least for the first year. Then, next year, we can expand it. We felt that we were making quite a liberal increase in the appropriation, and that it was a reasonable provision to take care of the needs of those two sections of the country.

Mr. FLETCHER. The question in my mind is whether that will properly provide for the service, for in his statement Mr. Marquis says:

That is merely for the wire and the offices.

I am afraid we are simply going to provide some facilities, but that we shall not get the full service.

Mr. LENROOT. If I may make a suggestion, this appropriation will provide for the dissemination to these new points the information which is now being collected by the department, but, of course, it will not provide for any additional information.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I was going to state. The department assured us that we would get the same service in the South and the extreme West that is now being supplied to the Middle West and other sections.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to state to the Senator that I introduced a bill in the Senate to extend the service into the Southeast. The information I had was that the additional sum carried in the bill would give us the wire service and disseminate identically the same news that was now being carried in the other sections.

Mr. HARRIS. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH. As a member of the subcommittee, I accepted this appropriation upon the statement that we should have the same service in the South and in the West that was afforded in the other sections.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am hopeful that that interpretation is correct, and I hope we shall get that service. I have in my hand here map No. 1, which was furnished me by the department, showing the service extending from Washington east and north and west down as far as Austin and Fort Worth and Kansas City and St. Louis, but east of those points to the Atlantic and south of Washington there is no service at all—not a wire.

Think of the great region in the South that is sending products to the market all the time. From Florida alone 84,000 carloads of citrus fruits and vegetables move every year; one carload every six minutes the year around. The cost of the transportation of the products of Florida alone amounts to $24,000,000 a year. Are we not entitled to some facilities with regard to market reports? Are we not entitled to this service? It has been taken entirely away from us. Now, I understand that the appropriation now proposed is, perhaps, sufficient to give it back.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; it gives it back.

Mr. FLETCHER. But it has been canceled; it has been taken away; and I am showing Senators that even as the provision stands it will afford rather a meager service. I am very glad, however, to get what I can. A line will be run from Washington to Atlanta, and from Atlanta to New Orleans, with branches to Birmingham and Memphis and Jacksonville and Orlando. Florida will be reached by way of Atlanta, and in that manner the service will be very helpful and very important. I can not conceive of any sort of a system that would deny this service to that section of the country, and particularly the region where we are producing and shipping and supplying the whole country with perishable products.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD, Mr. President, a letter from the acting chief of the bureau, dated January 8, giving a statement as to the additional market news service, and also a further statement furnished me a few days ago with reference to the market news service. The latter statement, together with the one from the department, will give a comprehensive view of the whole situation. I think the statement underestimates the production and the extent of the shipments from this region. I know it does as to Florida. For instance, it gives the number of cars at 38,200, whereas the shipments out of Florida are 84,000 carloads a year, or one carload every six minutes.

There being no objection, the statements referred to were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS,
Washington, January 8, 1923.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: In response to a telephone request from your secretary this morning, I am inclosing a statement which gives a detailed estimate of the cost of additions to the market news service to cover the Southern and far Western States as are outlined in a general way by the Secretary of Agriculture in a letter to you.

I desire to call particular attention to the fact that the extension of the leased wire into the Southeast or into the far West will increase the load upon our present wire and offices in the Central and Western States and make necessary some additions to these offices if we are to be able to render a complete service. Estimates of the costs of these additions are given in the attached statement.

Very sincerely yours, LLOYD S. TENNY,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am very much afraid we will not secure the service to which we are entitled under the committee amendment. I am glad the committee saw fit to increase the amount carried in the House bill; but I still feel like asking for a vote on my amendment to make the amount $1,100,000. I offer that amendment—to substitute "$1,100,000" in lieu of "$700,000," as proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the chairman of the committee that there are some facts which I have in reference to this matter which I obtained in connection with the bill which I introduced and which formed the basis of my activity in the subcommittee in agreeing to the proposal. I should like to present those facts. If the chairman contemplates taking a recess at this time, I can do so tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that we desire to conclude the committee amendments this evening, and then the bill will be open for individual amendments tomorrow.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I can make whatever statement is necessary. As I said a moment ago, I think that the amount proposed by the committee is essential to carry out the object that we have in view in gathering and disseminating the news as it has been gathered and disseminated under two legs of the service which have been in operation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, in support of the increase reported by the committee I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Representative TIMBERLAKE and also an extract from a telegram received from the Colorado Agricultural Association. I shall not take the time to read them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1923.

Hon. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS.
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR PHIPPS: I am inclosing herewith a telegram received from Mr. A. A. Edward, president of the Colorado State Board of Agriculture, Fort Collins, calling attention to the fact that Representative LANHAM, of Texas, secured an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill providing $25,000 additional for market news and service in Texas, and expressing a very great desire to have the appropriation increased so as to provide this beneficial service for Colorado.

This wire was not received until the bill had passed the amendment stage in the House. I advised Mr. Edward that I would take the matter up with yourself, as a member of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, so that you might determine whether or not it would be possible to secure an additional appropriation for this purpose for Colorado, as was done in the House for Texas. In discussing the matter with the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the measure, I was advised that this amendment was agreed to for Texas for the reason that there was already a line there and no additional expense on that account would be required. In view of this he was unwilling to oppose the appropriation asked for by Mr. LANHAM, but he doubted very much the advisability of increasing the appropriation which would permit this service as suggested in the wire from Mr. Edward.

I am submitting the wire to you, however, that you may use your judgment as a member of the committee regarding the same. I know Mr. Edward personally and well, and know that he is deeply anxious to secure this additional service for Colorado.

Very sincerely yours, CHAS. B. TIMBERLAKE.

FORT COLLINS, COLO., December 30, 1922.

* * * Dealers in many States not now served urgently need this market information. Our Colorado farmers and shippers have repeatedly urged Federal department to establish such service, which they replied could not be done on account of lack of funds. * * * Suggest you act in cooperation with other interested States to secure additional amount necessary for complete service. Colorado and States west last season shipped over 250,000 cars of fruits and vegetables, being about 40 per cent of total production of country, and located farthest from consuming areas, in addition to important grain, hay, live-stock, and other industries to be served. * * *

COLORADO STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE,
A. A. EDWARD, President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 64, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, from "$1,916,660" to "$2,190,260."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the committee amendments have now been disposed of.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a memorial of the seamen of the United States bearing upon the pending unfinished business. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable Members of the Senate of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: We, the representatives of the seamen of the United States, now in convention in New York City, respectfully submit this our memorial to you, praying that you read and consider it before you vote upon the bill known to us as the subsidy bill. It is a short review of the merchant-marine history of the United States. It is taken from statutes, hearings in congressional committees, court records, and from recorded proceedings of conferences held. It is easily verified. It is written to show why the United States has no merchant marine in the foreign trade and nothing but the shadow of the real sea power in any sense.

The United States has all the elements of real sea power. It has all the elements and conditions that should make real sea power not only possible but natural. We have the seacoasts, the harbors, the natural resources and the wealth in the country back of those harbors, and the great bulk of our population belongs to that race which, through nearly the entire historical period, has furnished the world's seamen.

If it be true that sea power is the seamen—and this fact is not questioned by historians, nor has it been questioned by statesmen of the past—then it must be admitted that we have but the shadow of sea power. It is notorious that prior to the war we had such a small percentage of Americans at sea that they were negligible. Even among the officers the number of native-born Americans was in the minority, though our laws made citizenship of the officers compulsory.

That no nation ever obtained even a fair share of sea power unless such nation furnished the seamen, and that no nation was able to keep sea power long after its men had quit sea life, is another fact so well attested by history that it can not be questioned. In the colonial times and in its early history this country produced daring seamen and skilled shipbuilders in abundance. Why did this cease? Some there are who answer this question by pointing to the opening up of the West, the building of railroads, and so forth. To some extent this is of course true, but it does not explain why we did not furnish the men needed in the coastwise trade, the Lakes trade, and in the very extensive whaling operations. When we speak of the coastwise trade we must bear in mind that our coastwise trade is in fact ocean trade. With reference to the personnel, the coastwise trade includes the harbors and islands on the North American Continent, north of the southern boundary of Mexico on the Atlantic and the Pacific, together with the trade from the Hawaiian Islands and the trade from one coast to the other. It employs more than 60,000 officers and men. It is, so far as the trade between American ports is concerned, absolutely protected from all foreign competition. Why did the American youth refuse to enter this trade? Why did the American man leave it? Somebody was at fault. Who was it? The answer is: The American shipowner. In total disregard of modern human experience he insists that the basis of good service is "force and fear."

The American shipowner has always had the ear of Congress. Since the meeting of the first Congress the shipowners have been listened to with the greatest respect, and the recommendations submitted by them have in all but two questions been adopted. The two instances are their effort to prevent the adoption of the La Follette Seamen's Act and the effort to induce Congress to readopt ship subsidy after it was repealed because obtained by corrupt practices.

Notwithstanding the fact that this Nation was founded upon individual liberty, the Constitution permitted bondage—the ownership of men by other men. The shipowners asked the First Congress to make the seamen the property of the vessel during the period of the contract and Congress consented. Neither the shipowners nor Congress can be blamed very much for this. It had been the system all over Europe for some six centuries, and in southern Europe nothing else except slavery had existed prior to the adoption of the periodical bondage based upon contract. In the slave States the seaman felt himself as free, because he compared himself to those less free; but in the northern free States he felt his bondage with increasing force. He resented it. He felt that it stood in his way and prevented him from following the upward trend of society. His wages, equal to those of a skilled mechanic in the colonial times and in the early years of the Republic, remained stationary, while the wages of workingmen on shore doubled, tripled, and quadrupled. Rents and commodities rose in price until the seaman was unable to provide for a family, and this destroyed his social status. When at last all other bondage ceased, through the adoption of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, the shipowners took care that the seaman was not liberated. When the laws were revised to correspond with the thirteenth amendment, the seaman's status was not changed. It followed as a matter of course that he was ill-treated, and the literature and the court records furnish a terrible account of such ill-treatment from the earliest days of the Republic, and such ill-treatment is not altogether ended even at this day.

In the meantime the laws were, at the shipowners' request, sharpened and made more drastic. When the shipowner wanted the mutiny laws so extended as to be applicable in harbor, they were in 1835 so extended. When he wanted to reduce the number of citizens which at one time he was compelled to carry, his wish was, in 1864, complied with. When the shipowner wanted to be free to hire men from any race or any nation, with or without previous training, his request was granted.

When it occurred to the shipowner that the laws dealing with seamen ought to be brought together, systematized, and extended, Congress took some of the laws, which Great Britain had adopted as a protection to the seamen, added them to the shipowners' request, and in 1872 passed the so-called shipping commissioners' act. Within two years the shipowners found that they did not like the regulations and supervision provided for and so informed Congress, with the request that they be repealed in the coastwise trade, and in 1874 all the provisions of the shipping commissioners' act were repealed in the coastwise trade and in the trade to near-by foreign countries. When the shipowner thought that it would be better for him to prohibit the payment of wages in advance, such payments were prohibited in 1884. When the shipowner changed his mind about this matter Congress in 1886 so amended the law that advance wages could again be paid.

When the shipowner found that he could not hold the wages paid at American ports down to the figure paid by his competitor in foreign countries he requested permission to hire his seamen in foreign ports, to bring them to American ports, to hold them on the vessel through the imprisonment and compulsory labor clauses of the law, and to take them back to some foreign country without reshipping them in the United States, and Congress readily consented and made this part of the law of 1886. The shipowner thought that in this way it would be possible for him to get and keep men at the same rate of wages as the competitor—be such wages the rate in Japan or Europe. When the shipowners discovered that in 1874 they had obtained more than they expected or desired and that the seaman in the coastwise trade was able to quit work and could neither be imprisoned nor brought back on the vessel against his will, in 1890 they went to Congress to have the imprisonment restored, and again Congress consented to change the law in the manner requested.

When they sought freedom from responsibility to the traveler or shipper, they did not seek in vain. Congress in 1851, 1884, and 1886 perfected a limitation of liability, which left nothing but the freight money pending and the proceeds from the sale of the wreck. The Titanic, which under British law would have been compelled to pay more than $3,000,000, under American law escaped with the payment of less than $100,000.

When the shipowner desired to shed the risk arising from the dangers of the sea and from "acts of God," he was permitted to organize an insurance, under which all such risks have been transferred to the public. When such insurance did not cover all possible kinds of losses, he arranged another kind of insurance—the protection and indemnity insurance—to protect himself against the losses arising from smuggling and other illegal practices, which came into vogue through the kind of men carried. When he then came to the conclusion that he had nothing to lose by the loss of the vessel, he cut the crews both in number and skill until it became unbearable for the men employed. In short, the policy of force and fear originated and followed by the shipowner has driven the American from the sea. It has destroyed our sea power, and it is now preventing the growth of a personnel, which is the very soul of power on the seas.

The American was leaving the sea, and his place was taken, first, by the North European, then by the negro, then by the South European, then by the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Malays, or the Croman and the Hawaiian Islander. The only question asked was and is: "Will you sail at wages set by me and under conditions determined by me?" When the white seamen in desperation tried to organize and sought to get the benefit of such laws as Congress had passed for seamen's protection, they were persecuted in every way. The men had to learn to lie—to deny their membership—and when they, as individuals, undertook to bring their grievances before the courts every trick was used to so delay the trials that the witnesses were by hunger driven to abandon their cause. When these methods failed through the power of the mutual aid practiced by the men, the appeal was made to public opinion in order to so influence it that juries would fail to agree or find the accused not guilty. (See Red Record.) Such was the shipowners' policy up to the beginning of our participation in the World War.

The seaman's act was passed over their protest and they determined to cause its repeal. When the representatives of the Seamen's Union appealed to them, asking for permission to cooperate in building up a personnel, that manifestly soon would be needed, they cynically answered that they were going to have the act repealed. They did their best to accomplish that purpose by beginning, in cooperation with foreign shipowners, such a publicity campaign as seldom has been seen; it did not stop even during the war. Although it failed to repeal the law, it so poisoned public opinion that the statute has never been enforced.

When the United States entered the war and the Shipping Board was created, the shipowners were, for the period of the actual war, compelled to pretend to cooperate; but in very many cases it was pure pretense. When the seamen voluntarily surrendered advantages obtained prior to the war in order to help in building a personnel, the concessions were used in an endeavor to hurt the organization much more than was at all necessary.

When the war was ended and the shipowners could manage their vessels in their own way, they promptly returned to their old policy, and finding the union grown strong enough to hire first-class lawyers to fight the seamen's cases and to defend the law, they became more determined than ever to destroy the possibility of mutual aid, using for their purpose not only their own power, but also seeking legislative aid to accomplish their purposes. We find them appealing to Congress to pass laws that would assist them in driving skilled men from the merchant marine in total disregard of the harm that inevitably must flow from such policy. This appeal was by Mr. A. F. Haines, vice president and general manager, Pacific Steamship Co., Seattle. He was at that time an influential officer in the Steamship Owners' Association, and there is no doubt that he voiced their ideas before the Senate Committee on Commerce in the hearings on the Jones bill. Among the propositions which he brought before the Senate Committee on Commerce were, that the Government should establish a large naval reserve, and that the Shipping Board should continue the recruiting service and the schools for training of men (p. 435). The real purpose of these proposals appeared under cross-examination. On pages 481–482 of the hearings he complained that the men were unionized and specified that as a handicap. On page 484 he insisted on a reduction in the training time for able seamen to six months in order to get the American who, he stated, learns very quickly. And on page 485 he affirmed that these new men are better than the old-line sailors; and again he brought forward the necessity for continuing the training ships, the establishment of the large naval reserve, and a number of cadets. But on page 487 he insisted that the shipowners must have the privilege of employing Chinese, Malays, Filipinos, or Lascars in the fireroom to the Tropics. (English experience shows that the orientals can not stand the heat as well as white men.) He went on to state that the Americans cause trouble in the Tropics, meaning the foreign trade (same page).

On page 488 he again complained about the unions, and when asked by the chairman, "How would legislation help you out?" Mr. Haines answered, "You can legislate in favor of American citizens, and you can legislate in favor of the Shipping Board recruiting service, and in favor of carrying cadets, and in favor of the naval training ships, and in time we will work out our own salvation." On page 489, Senator NELSON asked, "How would a law compel you to run an open-shop ship?" Mr. Haines answered, "I would be in favor of that." On page 490, Mr. Haines stated, "If you give us the kind of men we will get—if you will legislate in favor of the naval training ship and the Shipping Board recruiting service and the cadets, we will get that kind of men; we will change their habits." The chairman asked, "That is, you will largely get men whose habits do not need correcting?" Mr. Haines answered "Yes."

The foregoing testimony—and nearly all his testimony is in this vein—ought to satisfy anybody that the shipowners were at that time, just after the war, eager to substitute another personnel—one that would tolerate their policy of "force and fear." The committee, however, did not recommend any legislation such as was asked for by Mr. Haines. It is quoted here to show that the shipowners wanted to get rid of the men who had some skill and, therefore, some self-respect, and who had faced the submarine; that Congress refused it, but that the Shipping Board, as shall be shown later, assisted the owners to accomplish their purpose. We do not pretend to know all the purposes of the shipowners. We know their policy and we know the result, which we are here trying to convey to you. We now ask, Is it safe to follow the advice of men who have proven themselves wrong for a period of more than 100 years? The answer may, of course, be that the recommendations now come from the Shipping Board; but if it is proven that the Shipping Board is just another name for the shipowners, that the Shipping Board takes the shipowners' policy not only with reference to the personnel but also in other important items, would it not then be well to stop, look, and seriously think before you make up your mind? If it be true that the seamen are the merchant marine—the sea power—would it not be well to look into these facts before acting? Is it not true that the congressional mind has come to question not only the wisdom, the real knowledge, the disinterestedness, but even the perfect frankness and honesty of some of the shipowners who appear before committees to give evidence about maritime affairs? Was it not some such feeling that caused the repeal in 1895 of the imprisonment adopted in 1890, that caused the amendments to the law governing seamen in 1898, that caused the enactment of the La Follette Seamen's Act in 1915, and then caused the creation of the United States Shipping Board, with its duties and powers, materially increased from time to time since? Be that as it may, the Shipping Board was created and Congress ought to be able to rely upon its reports, and any recommendations from such board ought to be treated with great respect. Decidedly true; but if the board has adopted and if it is following the policy of the shipowners, should not its recommendations be considered with the same care that would be bestowed upon recommendations coming from owners as such?

In its earlier existence, and more especially during the war, the board disagreed with the advice brought to it by the shipowners, and under the actions then taken and the rules then established with reference to the personnel a large number of skilled men who had quit the sea came back and the purely American element of the personnel, exclusive of licensed officers, increased in less than four years from between 5 and 10 per cent to more than 51 per cent. The policy of "force and fear" had for a time been abandoned.

When President Wilson was about to go to Paris, the board, thinking it likely that the seamen's act might be a question raised, and wishing to furnish the President with reliable information as to whether the law did or did not equalize the wages of seamen on foreign and American vessels, sent a representative to some of the eastern seaports to investigate and report. The investigator was, when entering on his duties, hostile to the act. He did not believe that it did equalize. He came back and made a report that it did. The report was taken to France by the President. That is, it was recognized as reliable, and yet the present board repudiates that report.

When, in 1919, the seamen asked that the preference which had been given to the members of the union in shipping be continued and that the working rules be recast, in the interest of all parties, the shipowners refused, and the board followed their example to the extent of laying up the vessels. When the shipowners offered an increase in wages in lieu of recasting the rules and of recognition, the board followed suit. When the shipowners finally agreed to the eight-hour day for sailors and adopted sundry other amendments in the working rules—some of which were bad for the service—the board did the same. And the board again followed the shipowners in permitting the officers of the union to visit the men on the vessels. When, in 1920, there was a question about whether the agreement of 1919 was to be continued for one more year, the board again followed the shipowners. Some members of the board wanted to restore the preference to union men, and when that could not be obtained these members of the board were willing to give preference to American citizens, but the shipowners refused, and the board accepted the shipowners' decision.

When, in 1921, the slump in shipping came, the board had the chance to build a first-class personnel. Somebody had to be dismissed, and the board could have selected and kept the best among the Americans and among the foreigners who had declared their intentions to become citizens. It could have adopted examinations in seamanship for deck officers, in practical operation of marine engines for marine engineers, and could have made use of the law to disrate such members of the crew as were unskilled and showed no willingness to learn. Thus by selection based upon skill it could have sloughed off the inefficient and unsuitable. The chairman of the board was advised to do this, but he did not. Instead, the board followed the policy urged by Mr. Haines, already referred to.

On January 25, 1921, the shipowners and the board wrote to the seamen's union on the Atlantic suggesting and insisting, notwithstanding that the agreement had three months to run, upon an immediate reduction in wages and abolition of all overtime pay.

On the 31st they were answered that the union was willing to meet and confer, with the purpose of complying with the request, but that such agreement as might be arrived at ought, by agreement, to be continued until April 30, 1922. There was no answer until late in April, when a conference was called. The conference met in New York and the shipowners proposed a decrease of 25 per cent in wages and the abolition of all overtime pay. The union was willing to confer on the lines laid down, provided that the following was tentatively accepted:

1. Abolish the sea-service bureau.
2. Enforce section 13 of the seamen's act, especially the language clause.
3. Enforce section 14 on foreign ships strictly.
4. Enforce section 2 on American vessels.
5. Preference in employment to union men, for the purpose of developing efficiency.
6. The union to examine the men and not to admit to membership anybody for ratings for which they are not reasonably qualified; this for the purpose of assisting that efficiency.

This counter proposal was rejected by the shipowners, who stated that they were opposed to the enforcement of the seamen's act.

The seamen then rejected the proposals of the shipowners and the conference ended, but was called by the chairman of the Shipping Board to meet in Washington on the 27th. At this meeting the chairman of the board, Admiral Benson, stated that the board had determined that there should be a reduction of 15 per cent in wages, and that overtime pay should cease. With reference to the seamen's proposals he made the following statement:

"Taking up first the six points above noted, I would say that the Shipping Board can not consent to the abolition of the sea-service bureau for reasons which have been expressed in recent press statements, nor can it assent as a Government institution to points 5 and 6 involving union preference. The Shipping Board, as a Government institution, must stand for that equality in its relations to the Government which is guaranteed to every citizen by the Constitution of the United States. So far as points 2, 3, and 4 are concerned, it is my opinion that any act of Congress, until definitely repealed or modified, so long as it stands upon the statute books, should be enforced by the department charged with such enforcement."

The shipowners were opposed to the law being enforced and the board was of the opinion that laws should be enforced by the department charged with such enforcement. The fact that both the shipowners and the Shipping Board were living in the United States, that each were responsible for the operation of vessels under the American flag, and that, as good Americans, they were expected to obey the law without compulsion, did not seem to occur to either. That the shipowners and the board had come to some agreement about what was to be done with the seamen was too plain for doubt. The representatives of the seamen did, however, ask whether the sailors would be permitted to keep the three-watch system at sea. The prompt and united answer was "No." When the seamen asked whether the right of the seamen to be visited by officers of the union on the vessels and whether the officers of the union would be permitted to represent the men in the owners' offices in cases of dispute, the answer was again "No." (This answer was the more astonishing, because the right of ships' crews to be visited by the union officials had obtained in the United States practically since the adoption of the seamen's act, and was in operation in nearly all countries.)

Since preference of any kind had been refused to the members of the union, the officials of which were then in conference with the representatives of the shipowners and the board, and since the refusal was "because that would be discriminating against American citizens," the union representatives suggested that, subject only to the skill and experience, the American should have the first chance of employment, and that the foreigner, who had declared his intention to become an American citizen, should, subject to skill and seniority of papers, have the second chance of employment, and that the question of unionism should be completely waived. There was some hesitation on the part of the admiral; but from the owners came the response "No," in which the admiral then joined. The union representatives then offered to refer the whole question at issue to the President of the United States, with a guaranty to work for one year at such wages and conditions as the President might determine. Again the answer was "No," whereupon the representatives of the unions left, stating that they would appeal to the President, which they did in the following letter:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29, 1921.

"MR. PRESIDENT: This is a report and a prayer. All the agreements and arrangements between shipowners organized in the American Steamship Owners' Association, the United States Shipping Board, the organized marine engineers, sailors, firemen, marine cooks, and stewards, these last three constituting the International Seamen's Union of America, will cease with to-morrow night.

"The shipowners offered us a reduction amounting to 25 per cent on wages and subsistence and the abolition of all pay for overtime work. This took place in the month of January. We wrote them a letter offering to meet them to do the utmost possible to come to an understanding, to take effect immediately, and to run until April last, 1922. There was no meeting until the 19th of this month. Then they offered us conditions that were utterly impossible for us to accept. We countered with certain propositions which we deemed of absolute necessity for the upbuilding and preservation of the personnel of the merchant marine of America. They refused. We met them again on the 25th and they refused to consider our proposals. This ended the meetings in New York.

"Admiral Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, called everybody interested to meet here in Washington on Wednesday the 27th. There was a 10 per cent reduction in the cut proposed to us here, making it 15 per cent of the actual wages signed for on the articles, but the total cut would, under the rules proposed, be from 40 to 60 per cent in the actual income of the men employed; but no other change in the other things, except that in so far as the carrying out of the law was concerned, the admiral declared himself entirely in favor of the carrying out of the law, and that he would do what he could to have the law enforced.

"We submitted as a proposition that in the matter of employment the American citizen would have the preference for any rating which we would be qualified to fill, and that men with intention papers should have the next chance of employment, basing their preference amongst them upon the length of time that such intention papers had been held. This was refused. There were several other propositions made and refused.

Whereupon we made the offer to submit the entire question to you, declaring ourselves willing to accept whatever you should deem most advantageous to the building up of a merchant marine for the United States, and that in order to prevent any stoppage at all the present condition should remain until you had an opportunity to act upon the situation. This was first refused by Admiral Benson, stating that he would not burden you with this matter. It was then peremptorily refused by the shipowners. We renewed our offer and again were refused. Whereupon it was stated by us that we felt that we did not burden you by submitting our judgment to yours. We felt that we were doing our duty to you and to the merchant marine.

"We now respectfully submit the matter to you in the firm faith that you will act for the development and maintenance of the merchant marine.

"Most respectfully,

"To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
"The White House, Washington, D. C."

On May 1, 1921, the seamen all over the country were given the choice of signing shipping articles at the wages and on the terms laid down by the board and indorsed by the shipowners or to quit their employment. They quit. Some may call this a strike; but if there ever was a lockout, it must have looked something like this.

The vessels had some difficulty in finding men with which they could go to sea, even though no respect was paid to any laws about efficiency, and some of the shipowners entered into agreements to continue to pay the wages and to observe previous conditions; but upon threats from Admiral Benson, the chairman of the Shipping Board, that the vessels would be taken from them, those who operated Shipping Board vessels canceled the agreements at once and those who had agreed for their own vessels canceled theirs after the struggle was over and the men defeated. Defeat, of course, could not be avoided when the shipowners had the power and the resources of the Government to draw upon.

The shipowners having, under the circumstances, no need of risking their own ships, tied up their good vessels and induced the Shipping Board to run the vessels belonging to the people. The Shipping Board took the risk both of sabotage and inefficient men and, by a low estimate, wasted more than $10,000,000 in winning for the shipowners a struggle that had no excuse at all for existence and the real cost of which can not be measured in dollars. The men fit for and accustomed to the sea do not take kindly to any policy based upon "force and fear," and the American least of all. The real American in spirit and blood began at once to leave the sea, and he left with curses on his lips and hatred in his mind. Coming home he freely distributed both. This will surely not assist in making the American ship minded and ready to invest money in shipping, the necessity for which was so persistently urged during the hearings on the Jones bill. The worth-while foreign born, who had taken out intention papers, are leaving in the same way, except that many of them left to sail in the vessels of their own or other European countries. And the exodus is yet on. If in the coastwise and foreign trade together there be at this time 15 per cent of native American and 10 per cent of foreigners worth while left, the United States is fortunate indeed. The representatives of the seamen who attended the Washington conference on the 27th and 29th of April, 1921, knew what was to be the result. They gave expression to their knowledge when they proposed the reference to the President of the United States and offered, on behalf of the seamen, to sail one year for such wages and under such conditions as the President might determine. The chairman of the Shipping Board and some of the shipowners evidently could not understand, but we believe that others did and adopted the policy as a means to the end which they sought. Men worth while left the sea; men worth while are still leaving. Nothing short of an absolute change in policy will stop the exodus or bring back any considerable number of those who left or bring others worth while in their places.

There are no indications of any such change. Rather the indications all point the other way. The Shipping Board has reduced the crews in numbers and efficiency until the work that can not be postponed has become unendurable. The board has again reduced wages, so that they are now in purchasing power about what they were prior to the war.

The shipowners have officially reduced wages until they are equal to the English, but less than the Danish or Swedish. Unofficially they are now paying less than the English, and they are compelling the men to carry a shipowner's black list in form of a continuous discharge book and exhibiting it before they can get employment. The shipowners are getting men accordingly. Some men are sailing in order to smuggle—anything from lewd, prohibited pictures to narcotics and prohibited immigrants, Chinese and others—others because they lack the energy to quit, or because they are made to move by the police. Of course, there are some men yet left who refuse both to quit and to take the book, because they have not quite given up the hope that a change is coming. A change certainly must come if the United States are to have any share in the world's sea power.

Sea power is not for sale by shipowners at any given price. In a sense it is a flower, but it can not be grown in a hothouse. It grows in freedom and in soil made up of courage, skill, and honor, watered by sacrifice and death.

We respectfully submit the foregoing to your kind consideration. We beg that you defeat the subsidy bill and that in lieu thereof you repeal the shipbuilders' monopoly; that you take the departmental supervision over seamen from the Shipping Board and the Department of Commerce, and give it under proper regulations to the Department of Labor; and that you so amend the laws passed to promote safety and human decency at sea that they will be enforced. It is by such legislation that a merchant marine and sea power can be built for America.

On behalf of the International Seamen's Union of America.

Most sincerely and respectfully yours,

ANDREW FURUSETH, President,
K. B. NOLAN, Secretary.

ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, a few days ago there was published in a trade journal an editorial making charges against the Federal Trade Commission. I asked the chairman of the commission for the facts and I have a letter from him, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, December 28, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your memorandum transmitting editorial from the December 20, 1922, issue of the Tobacco Record. This editorial is an attack on the Federal Trade Commission entitled, "How long are the people going to permit the gigantic waste of public funds to support the spies and sleuths of the Federal Trade Commission?" The editorial professes to deal with the activities of the Federal Trade Commission and the commission's expenditures since its date of organization in 1915. The statements in the editorial are as obviously wide of the facts as the whole animus of the attack itself is upon its face unfair.

It has been recently the duty of the commission, under its organic act, to issue 11 formal complaints charging unfair methods of competition in the tobacco industry.

Among other things, the editorial says: "The Federal Trade Commission is constantly clamoring for larger and larger appropriations." I am indicating below the annual appropriations available and the amount expended by fiscal years since the commission was organized in 1915, together with unexpended appropriation balances for each of the fiscal years, which shows that in most of the years of its history the commission has returned money to the Treasury, and that its present annual expenditure is far below that of former years.

Fiscal year.	Appropriation available.	Amount expended.	Unexpended balance.
1915	$108,052.15	$90,442.05	$17,610.10
1916	355,000.00	351,999.73	3,000.27
1917	519,080.00	456,950.96	62,129.04
1918	1,572,920.00	1,505,163.90	67,756.10
1919	[1] 1,477,540.00	1,477,540.00	.....
1920	1,055,000.00	1,040,424.35	15,575.65
1920	150,000.00	.....	150,000.00
1921	955,000.00	882,943.91	72,056.09
1922	955,000.00	890,213.36	64,786.64

[1] There was actually available to the commission for this fiscal year $1,677,540, reduced $200,000 during the fiscal year by act of Congress, which following cessation of war covered many war-year appropriations back into the general fund of the Treasury.

In addition to the appropriations and expenditures enumerated above the commission has expended the amount of $75,964.08, which represented the unexpended balance of the appropriation of the Bureau of Corporations for the fiscal year 1914, which became available under a decision by the Comptroller of the Treasury. These expenditures were incurred during the fiscal years 1916 to 1923, inclusive, the final unexpended balance being used during the month of July of the current fiscal year.

In connection with the appropriation of $150,000 for the fiscal year 1920, which, you will note, was not used, you are advised that this amount was provided for in the deficiency act approved November 4, 1919, to cover the expense of the commission's investigation in connection with the high cost of living. This work was stopped by a court injunction which made it impossible to continue with the same, and the small amount expended in connection therewith before action was taken by the court was charged to the commission's regular appropriation for the fiscal year 1920.

The increase in expenditures for the fiscal years 1918, 1919, and 1920 arose from the fact that during these years the commission was engaged in special war work, or work that developed as result of the war, and a larger force, also appropriation, was necessary. During the fiscal years 1921 and 1922 it will be noted that the expenditures for each year amounted to less than $900,000, while for the current year the expenditures will not exceed $868,000, the total appropriation available.

The editorial says: "By the end of the fiscal year 1920 the number of employees on the pay roll had practically doubled to 418, and it is still growing." The commission had 638 employees during the war; it had 418 employees on June 30, 1920, but by December 31, 1920, this number had been reduced to 316, practically the same number now employed. On June 30, 1922, the commission had 100 less employees than it had on June 30, 1920, and 320 less employees than during the war year 1918. Here is a table showing the number of employees carried on the roll at the end of each fiscal year, a casual glance at which will show how ill-founded the ill-tempered editorial charges are:

	Number of employees.		Number of employees.
1916	224	1920	418
1917	210	1921	315

As you well know, the commission does not maintain a secret service or send sleuths and spies out to harass the business men of the country but restricts its efforts to the work it is called upon to do by law or as a result of congressional resolution. During the fiscal years 1915 to 1918, inclusive, the commission did not investigate any phase of the tobacco industry. In 1919 the commission expended $3,759.59 and in 1920 $4,887.47 in doing work requested by the War Industries Board in connection with war contracts on tobacco and cigarettes, information being necessary upon which to make contract claim adjustments. During the fiscal year 1921 the commission expended $11,094.10. The work involving this expenditure was done in connection with the determining of the prices paid growers for various types of leaf tobacco and the cost and selling prices of manufactured tobaccos, as required of the commission by House Resolution 533, Sixty-sixth Congress. During the fiscal year 1922 the commission expended $24,950.81. This covered the expense of the commission's investigation to determine the prices, profits, and competitive conditions in the tobacco industry, as required by Senate Resolution 129, Sixty-seventh Congress, adopted August 9, 1921.

These figures indicate that the commission has expended comparatively little in connection with its investigation of the tobacco industry, and most of the amount involved expenses connected with work directed by Congress.

I note that copies of the editorial were sent to all of the Senators, and if it should be used as a basis for an attack upon the commission I will appreciate it very much if you will use the facts contained herein to show up the inaccuracies contained in the editorial.

Yours truly,

VICTOR MURDOCK, Chairman.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 10, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Heavenly Father, that behind the whole of life, with its experiences of sunshine and shade, there is a divine hand marking and shaping our destiny. Let the consciousness of Thy sympathy, love, and care make cheerfulness abound with industry. In quiet and in confidence may we live the good life and in loyal obedience to Thy precepts follow the paths that lead to peace and rest. Ever bring us toward the full understanding that he who is learning each day to do better and to be better is abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7658. An act to amend the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the Post Office and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 966) for the relief of the Tacoma Tug & Barge Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 250. Joint resolution to donate to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War;

S. 2822. An act to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia;

S. 3364. An act for the relief of W. O. Whipps;

S. 3244. An act to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department;

S. 4137. An act to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard;

S. 4029. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto;

S. 419. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esperanza;

S. 420. An act for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co.;

S. 421. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington;

S. 3503. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co.;

S. 3668. An act for the relief of Gertrude Lustig;

S. 1016. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; and

S. 3384. An act authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the second deficiency appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference on the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, is that satisfactory to the Democratic conferee [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee]?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is right there. He can speak for himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. MADDEN, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

ADJOURNMENT OVER FROM FRIDAY UNTIL SUNDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday it adjourn to meet on Sunday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday next it adjourn to meet on Sunday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FOREIGN DEBT.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. I could take the time, perhaps, in general debate on the next appropriation bill, but I would like to get through with my remarks now, so as to take up some other work.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for 10 minutes following the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my attention was called on yesterday to a statement purporting to come from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with reference to a very important matter now being considered by the executive branch of the Government, or rather by a commission created by this body, pertaining to the $11,000,000,000 owed to us by foreign countries.

If Doctor FESS is correctly quoted, I think it is a matter that the House is entitled to have some information on. I read from the Washington Post's Sunday issue, January 7, and I presume it is as great an authority as we can get as to what the policy of the administration is likely to be on any particular subject. Among other things, in speaking before the Republican Club in the city of New York, Mr. FESS said this, alluding to the limitation placed on the Debt Refunding Commission:

Congress made a very serious blunder when we tied down the commission to a time limit within which the debts were to be paid and withholding from that body the right to modify the rate of interest on those debts.

"We must give that body some freedom," he added. "That must be done, and I am not telling tales out of school when I say it will be done."

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if any deduction at all can be drawn from that statement, it is that Congress is to be called upon, if, indeed, arrangements have not already been made by the leader of the majority and the steering committee—because Mr. FESS says it will be done—for Congress to yield its power, or rather its control, over $11,000,000,000 of the people's money. I do not believe that the commission that has been created by Congress will ask for that power. Three of those gentlemen have had occasion to know what it means to appeal to the electorate of this country and to have their confidence and responsibility given by the votes of the people.

I refer, of course, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], formerly Senator, and to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the present Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes. I can not believe that it is possible that you could induce those gentlemen to attempt to take from the hands of the legislative body the entire control and direction of $11,000,000,000 of the people's funds. I would undertake to deny—and I am glad the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has 10 minutes to correct it if it is not correct—I undertake to deny that the Congress has made arrangements by which it will take its hands off the control and direction of this $11,000,000,000, although Mr. FESS says he is not telling tales out of school when he makes that assertion. There is no other place where he can come for that relief except to Congress, and I ask the gentleman from Wyoming to tell the House of Representatives whether Doctor FESS was speaking by the card—even if he is telling tales out of school—if you propose that the commission shall relieve the House of Representatives and the Senate of the responsibility of remitting $11,000,000,000 owed by foreign governments, or, if necessary, to remit the payment for 50 years, or 100 years, or a thousand years, then I am against you——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In just one moment.

Because, gentlemen, if you take off the limitation of interest and the limitation of time, you can extend this debt for a thousand years without the payment of a single dollar of interest during those thousand years. So that it is tantamount to giving power to this commission to remit the debt owed us by foreign countries.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that nobody can commit me, and I am opposed to remitting the debt. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. I am glad to hear that, because I could not believe that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] could speak authoritatively, although he did undertake to speak it, and told it in a manner to indicate that he was on the inside, and, being on the inside, a Senator elect from Ohio, he imparted the information to the country that we are going to take our hands off, run away from our responsibility, and that we are going to give this commission a free rein to do as they please.

I repeat that I do not believe the commission would ask it, and I say nothing but a cowardly Congress—yes; almost a criminal Congress—would surrender the trust placed in their hands to the extent of $11,000,000,000 without having gone before the electorate and received authority to that effect. I can understand why certain so-called statesmen in this country are clamoring for the initiative and referendum even for the Supreme Court when you have men of the standing of Doctor FESS in the Republican Party on the Rules Committee in this House who go to New York and tell a Republican organization of that State "We propose to commit to five men the destiny of $11,000,000,000 of the people's assets." Now I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. I should like to ask my friend from Texas whether he takes the position that under no circumstances would he be willing to extend the time of payment now fixed at 25 years.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, nobody but a foolish man would say that. Why, I made the calculation this morning as I ran over here after the Ways and Means Committee had stayed in session until 12 o'clock, and I had to hasten, and I made the calculation in my mind as to what the difference would be in changing the rate of interest with reference to England alone, based upon $5,000,000,000, from 4½ per cent to 3½ per cent, and it made a difference of $37,500,000 a year.

Mr. MILLS. Will my friend yield there?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. It is possible that Congress ought to take that discretion, though I am not so certain about it, because the contract made with England and other countries by this Congress was that they should pay the exact rate of interest that we pay on the bonds which the American people bought, thereby raising the money that we loaned to those countries. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLS. In view of the negotiations that are going on, I think it is important that the gentleman who speaks here as the representative of his great party should make his position clear. Do I understand from the gentleman from Texas that if it could be demonstrated that this great debt of $11,000,000,000 could not be paid within 25 years, and the facts were laid before Congress, he then would be willing to grant the authority to extend the time of payment?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let me correct the gentleman from New York. I do not speak for any great party. I only speak for myself. I have no more right to speak for the Democratic Party than the gentleman from New York has a right to speak for his district when he undertakes to take the people's property and transfer the control of it to some commission like these five men that we have created. I have no authority to speak for this side of the House any more than I have authority to speak for my constituents without having referred the matter to them and having discussed it with them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Let me answer the question first. I was preparing to say when the gentleman asked me the question that the only difference between 4½ per cent for 25 years and 3½ per cent for 50 years is the $37,500,000 a year. As I told a gentleman yesterday who made the same inquiry in private, I am not certain that Congress would not look with some sympathy upon a suggestion by the commission stating the fact that it was impossible to make this arrangement with the limitations that are upon them. But, Mr. MILLS, you will not and I believe not 10 per cent or 5 per cent of the membership of this House will dare go so far as to take off all limitations. Would you dare do that?

Mr. MILLS. It has not been suggested, has it?

Mr. GARNER. Would you?

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. GARNER. I did not think the gentleman would; but Mr. FESS, speaking to the Republican Club in New York, says:

> I am on the inside. I can tell it. It is not telling tales out of school, either. It is right on the verge of being done. Therefore I impart the information to you that we are going to do that identical thing.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. I wish to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask this in an entirely friendly spirit. Would not this whole problem have been vastly simpler if the law had been followed when these loans were made?

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman; but the gentleman from Ohio undertakes to indict the Democratic administration for the reason that the arrangement was not made based upon the statute at the time the loan was made. Now, the gentleman from Ohio knows, and every intelligent man knows, and he will not deny it, that in the various legislative bodies when the loans were made it was impossible to get anything other than their I. O. U's. Is not that so?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know that.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman think it is so?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I doubt it very much.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do know, however, that the law was not followed.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that. Our administration took their I. O. U's at that time; and if the Democratic administration was derelict in administering that law, is that any reason why you and I should surrender the power of this Congress to control $11,000,000,000 of assets of the people?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I stand absolutely with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad to hear it; and the only object I had in taking the floor this morning was, if I could, to bring out the very statements that have been brought out from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]; and I imagine that even Mr. FESS and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and a few other leaders on that side could hardly overcome the strength that has been developed so far on that side in opposition to this proposed policy.

Why, gentlemen, I do not know how you feel about it, but I feel so intensely on this subject of surrendering the power of the legislative body to commissions and executive branches of the Government that perhaps I am not entirely sane on the subject.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think you are.

Mr. LAYTON. You are sane all right.

Mr. GARNER. I know that we have a wonderfully big, cumbersome Government. It is very difficult to administer it as the fathers intended—that is, to have each branch of the Government keep within the bounds of its power.

As a result of that, you see almost hundreds of reports being made to Congress by commissions and various branches and departments of the Government, because Congress gave them power that it was not contemplated would be given and that would not be given if it were not for the cumbersomeness of the Government; so that we have required them to make reports to Congress in order that Congress may keep a check on them.

It has got so great in that particular that in the transaction of the business of the committees of the House they can not look over their own reference documents. I had occasion to look at the docket of the Ways and Means Committee, and I was surprised at the number of documents referred to that committee under various laws of Congress. I have not had a chance to look them over, and it is impossible to do it. So I want, as far as I can, to retain the control of the Government in the legislative branch of the Government, as the Constitution contemplates. I am willing to go as far as it is possible in giving this debt commission power. I was glad that the President appointed a man from the House and a man from the Senate. I had hoped long before this that the country might be informed as to the progress of this commission; but I thought it might be embarrassing, and so I never raised the question upon the floor of the House. I do not intend to do it now, although I see the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] here. But I again repeat that that commission, in my opinion, will never unanimously ask this House to carry out the policy suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to the Republican Club of New York. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not read the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] very carefully, but my recollection of what he said differs quite widely from the recollection of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. My interpretation of what the gentleman from Ohio said is quite different from the interpretation of the gentleman from Texas. As I understand it, the gentleman from Ohio did suggest that it might be necessary—of course, the action would have to be taken by Congress—to somewhat modify our legislation relative to the foreign debts, both as to the matter of time and of interest. I understand that the gentleman from Texas admits that it might be wise on a proper showing to do that. So I do not think that the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio are in fact very far apart. The gentleman from Ohio, as I recollect it, very definitely said that he was not in favor of relieving our creditors from their obligations either as a whole or in part.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I know nothing about what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said to the Republican Club of New York, except as I quoted it from the Washington Post.

Mr. MONDELL. I think what the gentleman quoted from the Washington Post will not justify his interpretation of it. Of course, if one wants to make an argument, there must be something to fire at; and so the gentleman, following the time-honored custom, erected a straw man, and then shot at it. [Laughter.] My position in this matter has been clearly stated at various times, and I have not changed my opinion. I do not believe that in justice either to the American people or to the people who owe us that we ought to consider wiping out the debts or reducing the totals. I think we should look forward to a full and complete payment of the sums due, and that should be our attitude.

I am of the opinion, and I so stated when the legislation was before the House on two occasions at least, that we did unduly and improperly restrict the commission. I said then that I thought it was unwise to fix a hard and fast rule of 4½ per cent interest. My opinion has not changed, and my view of the matter has been strengthened by the developments since that time. These people owe us; they should pay; but we realize that it will be very difficult for some of them to pay, and that they must, at least some of them, have a liberal adjustment as to time and interest under which it will be possible for them to meet their obligations. I do not think that anyone contemplates removing all restrictions as to time and interest by amendment of the act under which we created the commission. I think it is quite possible that the gentlemen of the commission may find it necessary to report to the Congress as to the difficulties they find in the way, and to make recommendations as to some modification of the period of the loan and of the interest rates. I think the gentleman from Texas and other gentlemen will agree that we must give to such a suggestion, if made, careful and thoughtful consideration. As I said a moment ago, I have believed, and very clearly stated when the matter was before the House, that the interest rate fixed as a minimum was too high. We certainly will never be justified in asking these people to pay us a greater interest rate than we are likely to be called upon to pay in the running of the years. I think it will be agreed that when the world gets back to anything like normal conditions and international finances become reasonably adjusted the interest rate on first-class international obligations is likely to be considerably below 4½ per cent, and, as to the period of the loan, I know of no reason why it should not be extended beyond the length of time heretofore fixed.

I think it must be apparent to all that it would be impossible for some of our European creditors, at least, to pay what they owe us within the period of time fixed by the Congress. It might well be a hardship for any of them to do so, and in such a case I know of no good reason why the period should not be lengthened.

I have very serious doubt whether any of the nations indebted to us will find it possible without serious difficulty to meet their obligations within the time fixed. All these are matters for adjustment. The commission, as I understand it, has had its first meetings. I am quite certain that the members of the commission could not themselves at this time give the House any clear idea of what their difficulties are likely to be, but in due time I should not be at all surprised if the commission should feel called upon to make a statement to the Congress in proper form as to the difficulties in the way, with suggestions as to what in their opinion might properly be done to clear the situation. That would not be an extraordinary happening, and I am very glad to find that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] takes the view that such suggestions and recommendations would be entitled to serious and respectful and in all probability favorable consideration. I have very great confidence in the commission. I am satisfied they will protect our interests, that they will endeavor to carry out the expressed will of Congress. I am very sure of that; but if it should develop—and I shall not be at all surprised if it should develop; I anticipated such a development—that the commission finds it impossible to come to a fair adjustment and settlement under the law, we shall be here to receive any suggestions they may have to make and to render an opinion on them after due consideration. We shall have in mind all of the time—and I do not think there is any difference of opinion on that subject—that we expect the payment of these obligations in due time, taking into consideration the financial condition of the peoples who owe us and the fact that it will probably be necessary to be very liberal in our treatment of them as to time of payment and interest. Our attitude as to the payment of these obligations is not born of the spirit of a Shylock demanding the pound of flesh but because it is the best policy in the long run from the standpoint of all the interested parties. Some of those who are indebted to us may not take that view of it now, but I think ultimately they will. We shall all of us get along together best if we look forward to the final extinction of the debt through payment on terms under which the nations indebted to us may find it possible to meet their obligations without undue hardship. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, unfortunately I was not in the Chamber when my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] began his address. It was my fault, because he stated to me yesterday that he was going to make some remarks and he would be glad to have me present. I regret that I was not here when he first began. I have asked Members of the House what was said to which such serious opposition was taken by my friend. The report from them is that I had taken a position in New York that would lead to a complete surrender of the powers of Congress over the foreign debt to the authority of the commission. If that is the statement, of course it is entirely without foundation. Fortunately, I handed to the press of New York the manuscript which I now have in my hand, and I am going to ask unanimous consent, in the interest of every Member here, that I be permitted to extend this address in the RECORD so that every Member may know where the newspapers got their authority for whatever they said. My cursory examination of the report of the speech did not reveal anything of the character referred to. The manuscript was handed in six different copies to the New York newspapers. Anything that they printed from the manuscript, of course, could not be subject to the charge that it is not true.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Ohio be willing to take off the limitation as to either interest or time and give that authority to the commission?

Mr. FESS. No; I would not.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman would still retain the power in Congress to fix the rate of interest and to limit the time within which the debt might be paid?

Mr. FESS. I stated my position in respect to that in answer to a question asked me by ex-Ambassador White, who sat to my right, when I was discussing the impossibility of our canceling this debt and why it would not be canceled. He asked whether there should be any latitude given to the commission on the funding of the debt, and I answered immediately there should be latitude given to the commission on both the question of interest and the time of payment.

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman mean by latitude?

Mr. FESS. That instead of our binding the commission to a minimum rate and to a maximum time of payment, the commission should have some latitude to make the best terms possible, from the viewpoint of the interest of the people of the United States rather than that of Europe.

Mr. GARNER. That is the exact point. What limitations, if any, what freedom would the gentleman give, that he speaks of?

Mr. FESS. I would not do the foolish thing that we did do of binding them to 4½ per cent and 25 years. I opposed that proposition at the time, and it was unwise, and I stated in New York that we are going to modify it without a doubt.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman would not fix a rate——

Mr. FESS. Oh, I do not yield to the gentleman any longer. Let me state to the membership of the House what this organization is which I addressed. It is a Republican club that conducts nonpartisan discussions three months in the year. At all of these discussions, which begin on the first Saturday of January and continue three months, both parties were invited to address the members. This is the fifth time that I have addressed this club on its opening day. I have never addressed it when there was not present some Democrat to speak on the same program. The subject selected this time was our foreign relations, our relation to the foreign problems. I was asked to speak and Mr. Morgenthau, the former ambassador to Turkey, was asked to speak for the Democratic side. I repeat that these discussions are all always upon the basis not of partisanship but from the standpoint of both sides of the question presented, always. It was upon this occasion that I delivered the address the manuscript of which I have in hand, which was very carefully prepared and which was handed to the press in New York. I was discussing the question of the obligations of Europe to the United States, stating that we could neither extend further loans nor consider under any circumstances the cancellation of the loans, nor could we consider the proposition of exempting American capital from taxation that would go to Europe, all of which has been proposed in various circles.

While I was speaking on that subject—and I might say that at the table sat the consul general to France as well as former Ambassador White to France—I was interrupted by being asked whether the Government should give to the commission now funding the debt any latitude and my reply at once was that it was a mistake for the Congress to handicap the commission by fixing a minimum rate of interest and a maximum time of payment, and that that should be modified.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I decline to yield.

Mr. GARNER. For a question?

Mr. FESS. I yield for a short question.

Mr. GARNER. If the Congress does not fix a minimum rate of interest and the maximum time of payment, are we not taking off the bridle?

Mr. FESS. It was argued here when we were discussing this question before, just by such argument as the gentleman uses now, that, if we did not bind this commission, they might remit the whole debt, which was perfectly silly, because when you appoint a commission to fund a debt that does not mean that the commission can cancel the debt.

And yet that is the sort of demagogy which was practiced here on the floor of this House, when we authorized a commission to do a piece of work and then made conditions which made it impossible for them to do the work we authorized them to do. Now, that I insist must be modified, and so far as the question goes as to whether I have ever suggested that the Congress should not have any authority over the collection of the debt, certainly I never did anything of the sort. But on the other hand my colleagues here in Ohio, and I know there are a number sitting here who heard my addresses in Ohio in which I have always taken the position that we could not under any circumstances consider with any favor the suggestion of the remission of the foreign debt. So far as my friend is concerned in his reference to my speaking for the Republican Party, and the administration that is purely gratuitous. I am somewhat surprised that my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] should with a peculiar insinuation that almost approached innuendo, refer to me as being on the inside, and that I even spoke as if I wanted the public to know that I was on the inside. That is not quite in keeping with the genial character of my friend.

I happen to be a Republican, an administration Republican, and I happen to be from the State of the President, and if newspapers decide to use that feature and say that I am close to the administration when they have no authority whatever other than the usual liberty employed by a newspaper, I am not inclined to pay any attention to it. Frequently such statement is interesting to print, no matter how embarrassing it might be to the one about whom it is said. It is not necessary for me to get up here and try to reply to my friend. I think the whole thing is a matter of play with him. The real fact is, I expressly stated that I spoke for myself alone.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question simply for information?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have very great respect for the gentleman's opinion. Now, assuming that the statute of February, 1922, may be amended so as to give much greater latitude to the commission in the way indicated by the gentleman, would he favor allowing that discretion to be exercised without requiring the commission to make any report to the Congress?

Mr. FESS. No, indeed; I would not. The Congress should keep its hands upon whatever the commission does, but the commission ought not to be told that they can not make a deal short of a certain rate or of a certain time at least, and the commission ought to be permitted to report back here the situation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand the idea of the gentleman would be to give this further latitude and require the commission in exercising its discretion to make its report to the Congress, and that report be subject to ratification or approval by the Congress?

Mr. FESS. If my friend from Texas takes the interpretation from what has been reported in the newspapers, it will not be found in the manuscript, because I did not deal with that question at all in the manuscript. It was the result of a question asked me by the ex-ambassador, and if the gentleman takes the view that I want to surrender all the power of the Congress to a group of men to the extent of making it 100 years or otherwise, certainly I would not agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in 8-point type the address delivered by me in New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type the address he delivered in New York. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

THE OLD WORLD AND OUR RELATIONS TO IT.

[Address delivered by Hon. S. D. FESS, January 6, National Republican Club, New York City.]

"Each year has a paramount issue. Just now it is our duty to Europe. Europe's problem and the remedy are the chief topics of conversation among the public men and press of the world.

"So far as it is affected by national, racial, or religious rivalries our country's attitude against participation is well known. That attitude will not be modified and little effort will be put forward to change it.

"In the degree that the problem is economic it is held by many that our own welfare is involved. That phase of the problem involves trade—exports and imports—tariff legislation, European debts to the United States, reparations, general European rehabilitation, and immigration. All of these problems are viewed by this country in the light of what is best for the people of the United States. Our trade is still spasmodic, but is steadily growing toward what will be normal for the country. Exports are now more than double what they were before the war. Our tariff has been revised and our revenues from customs duties under present indications will increase fully one-third over what they were before the war.

"Europe's chief concern to-day is fiscal.

"The Washington conference set at rest the naval rivalry which removes many serious economic and political problems. It also adjusted the Far East problems and set up the machinery to insure against complications in that section.

"In addition we set Europe the example of sane recovery by immediately dismantling the war machine and reduced our armies to a pre-war basis, the only solid foundation for economic recovery.

"The acute situation of the Near East problem led to the Lausanne conference, to which we were invited. Our Nation, vitally interested in peaceful adjustment and yet determined not to become umpire of the world's age-old controversies, made known its willingness to be helpful where it could properly do so, agreed to advise with the delegates; the wisdom of this decision is demonstrated by results thus far achieved. The influence of this country in reaching definite decisions is widely known, and is suggestive of the proper channel of our influence on world matters. We will enter where vital American interests are to be discussed and final decisions to be reached. We will not refuse urgent invitations to attend as observers where European interests are discussed, if our presence can be made helpful to the nations involved. We only decline where our presence may not be of value to the world but might be of jeopardy to the best interests of our people.

"The most important phase of the European problem is economic. Important because its solution is not a matter of good wishes or even diplomacy. The inevitable results of economic law point the way of national destiny. The rise and fall of nations can be traced by these signposts throughout history.

"It is interesting to trace the course of nations on the sea to the present time. In 1492 the Portuguese were the world's greatest seafaring people, and that nation led the world in discovery and colonization. In due time she gave way to Spain. In turn Holland took an important position, and then France became the world's greatest overseas nation. In 1688 the duel between France and England began, which continued until 1815, a period of 127 years, during which 64 years were spent in actual warfare in at least seven great wars between the two countries. England took the sea and has held it. Now, for over 100 years England has been growing to her present dimensions upon the sea.

"The British merchant marine doubles the next largest. Her coaling stations are conveniently located throughout the civilized sea. Her flag of commerce is admitted in almost every port of the world. Her control over cables gives her control of ocean communication. Her navigation laws and marine-insurance system are designed to give her superior position as a carrier. All this, up to the arms conference meeting, is backed by a navy double the size of the next largest navy. For the past century this great sea power gradually sought and secured the complete domination of the overseas commerce, while other nations, including our own, permitted the trade to seek the British flag. Other countries devoted themselves to activities domestic rather than overseas. To-day Britain stands economically in sharp contrast with all others—France, for example.

"Eighty per cent of the activity of the French people is agricultural. France has become a people of domestic rather than overseas national interest. Her chief concern is absorbed with her home people engaged in work that does not look across the seas. She is not greatly dependent upon either selling to or buying from her neighbors. The prosperity or adversity of her neighbors is not so poignant to her own welfare as in the case of Britain.

"This latter country is 80 per cent overseas trade. Not over one-fifth of her activity is domestic. Her concern is foreign markets in which to sell her products of industry and from which to buy her needs which she can not produce. Germany during the war often boasted of her ability to starve Britain in three months if she could employ the submarine unhindered. This is but an observation of the dependence of the United Kingdom upon the outside world.

"The period of the war saw an almost complete overturn of industry, and when it closed markets did not revive. The Central Powers prior to the war active in industry, whose markets were largely supplied by British trade, at least trade carried in British bottoms, have not revived since the war. No country feels this failure of buying power more than Britain. Because of it, Britain's overseas commerce does not return to normal, and as a result her unemployed in 1923 reach at least one and a half millions, who must be partially supported by Government doles. No nation can be prosperous on such a basis. England's remedy is a revival of markets; hence her concern in the revival of German industry and Russian prosperity. This concern has led her to take steps both for relief of Germany from the impending danger of collapse from too heavy indemnity and the recognition of the present régime in Russia. Her request for a reduction of the burden of Germany is not an excuse for Germany's guilt nor a lack of appreciation of France's just claims. It is not a desire to relieve Germany for her own sake nor to deprive France of needed reparation, but rather a selfish demand to assure relief to British commerce and the employment of her unemployed. The economic necessity of Britain calls for a rejuvenation of the industrial world, including the Central Powers and Russia. Hence Lloyd-George's insistence of an agreement to revise the reparations; hence the first economic conference at Cannes. Britain's willingness to recognize the Russian régime is not a commendation of the soviet system of government nor an excuse of the crimes committed under its administration, but rather a possible condition of revival of Russian trade.

"Germany's fiscal situation baffles the world. Her fatal policy of financing her needs by aid of the printing press has driven from her borders all her gold. Her payments are made in gold marks, which continue to decline until our dollar, which would originally buy 4 marks, will now buy over 8,000. German workmen, who receive from 8,000 to 10,000 marks per month, can realize not over 50 cents to $1.50 per month. At such values a pound of meat would cost 400 marks and coffee at least 600 marks. A suit of clothes will cost close to 50,000 marks. This derangement is rapidly insuring total destruction of business. It will in time not only drain the nation of its wealth, but it will destroy its labor as it has already driven out its capital.

"Germany seems to face not only an inability to meet the reparations requirements but is rapidly reaching a position of inability to sustain herself in the needs of her own consumption. England believes that in case Germany is not given an opportunity to revive, her collapse is inevitable, in which case no indemnity will be forthcoming to any nation and there will be set loose a spirit of Bolshevism that may overrun all of western Europe with the fate of Russia; hence Britain's concern about an unwise policy looking to preventing Germany's industrial revival.

"France, on the other hand, sees only the work of devastation, of war's hideous destruction, of the terrorism of German militarism, and demands that Germany be made to make good what the treaty of Versailles specifically gives her the power to collect, by aid of her army if necessary. France, acting upon the good faith of Germany to pay, confident of her ability to pay, proceeded to repair her ruins by advancing the costs of reparation, depending upon using the indemnity to reimburse the treasury, has seen her public debt increase from $33,000,000,000 in 1919 to more than her total wealth in 1922. She can not contemplate the alternative of German failure to pay. France sees financial bankruptcy in case of German default, and, worse than financial collapse, she fears inevitable revolution in case she agrees to the default when the treaty gives her the authority to collect it by military force. Such is the case when stated by France.

"England, on the other hand, fears business and industrial prostration not only for herself but for Germany, and in that case all of Europe, in the event that the claims against Germany are pushed to the point of collapse, which may not be improbable. This would mean that no nation would receive any indemnity. Plainly stated, France sees financial bankruptcy and national revolution should she forfeit her indemnity rights secured to her by the treaty of Versailles. England fears general wreck of all Europe if ability to pay is not regarded. The abstract rights in the case are not in dispute. The controversy turns not on the law, but, rather, the facts in the case. What is best to be done is the issue that Europe must decide.

"Quite naturally Europe seeks American assistance. Our financial ability makes this assistance an inviting topic for Europe. The important question with us is, What can we effectively and safely do? It has been suggested in some quarters that we should take steps to supply Europe with the needed funds by further loans. This is impossible. Europe already owes this country $12,000,000,000, on which all the nations except Britain are pleading their inability even to pay the interest. And Britain fears her ability to continue payments.

"Here is an interest-bearing debt which Europe owes and upon which she is not paying interest, and because of which our own Government is paying an annual interest charge of nearly one-half billion dollars, while the actual debtor protests her inability to pay, and at the same time even asks us to cancel the principal. Many Americans are asking, Was it not enough for us to supply her the armies with which to win the war? Are we to be asked to pay for it in addition? Nations which gathered up the spoils of war from all corners of the earth, after having borrowed billions from this Government under the solemn obligation to repay it, now not only ask us to cancel it but her press shamefully allude to us as Shylock, because this Government, which sought no spoils, no territory, no indemnity, but intends that the money collected from the American taxpayers to be loaned to Europe, under the most solemn promise to repay it, must be paid. In the face of such a situation the talk of further European loans is nonsense. This proposed remedy must therefore be dismissed at once. A Nation that asked nothing from Europe and is to receive even less than it asked will listen to no such proposals.

"The suggestion of exempting American capital from taxation as an inducement to enter European investments for the rebuilding of industry is properly a European rather than an American problem. This Government can not exempt American capital that goes to Europe to rehabilitate those countries, because such policy is not workable, since capital can not be segregated so as to confine its investment in Europe to such industries as do not come into competition with our own industries here. If this could be done the suggestion might be favorably considered. We would not protect American industry from European competition and then persuade American capital by tax exemption to enter Europe to compete with us.

"The hopeless fiscal situation in Germany demands drastic remedies. Her debased mark drives from the borders of the nation all specie, not to return until a better system is adopted. The suggestion of an international bank with power of currency issue is good if the governments can agree on a basis of operation. Capital will avoid European channels until a sound basis of investment is reached.

"What must be done in Europe, as I see it, is a reorganization so as again to capitalize the energy of the people—make capital investment safe to employ the labor of the nations in productive industry. Europe has her basic elements of production, her resources, her labor, and her management. What she needs is capital which has been excluded by the pressure of war. Germany's obligations to pay and her attempt to pay in marks run off by the printing press which has driven all the gold from her limits has permanently blocked all return of the precious metals to her borders. So long as this situation obtains her one great need, that of capital, will not flow to that country and her industries will inevitably become prostrate.

"The countries of Europe must take steps to adjust their claims upon terms mutually helpful, and such as can be met by sound business methods, when capital, both European and American, will at once respond to the demands of European industry. Capital seeks profitable investment as readily as it avoids channels of too great risks.

"The question immediately arises whether this adjustment between Europe's leading powers should not be undertaken by and under the direct leadership of the United States. We think not. The adjustment must be made. There is no relief without it. It is best that it be made by mutual agreement of the powers in dispute rather than pressure from America. If Europe's needs are not sufficient to compel it, surely our recommendations will not be willingly accepted if at all. No further comment need be made than that daily heard in European circles.

"It has been suggested in many and important circles that an economic conference be called by this country for the purpose of reaching European adjustments. The history of the various conferences at Cannes, Genoa, and The Hague is fresh in mind. The sharp issues between the nations which prevented decision in either conference is still the sharp issue. If these nations can not agree on matters so vital to their well-being, what can be accomplished in a conference called by this Nation? What can be done by an economic conference called by us that could not be done by one called by them? Thus far every economic conference has failed of agreement on several points of dispute. Reparations were the most acute point of difference.

"The proper attitude toward Russia was another point of difference. The manifestation of seriousness growing out of these disputes gave small promise of adjustment, and would not invite this country to enter the controversy which, while economic in character, was always treated as political. Another issue discussed by the conferences was the cancellation of the interallied debt. It was not agreed upon as was announced because the United States was not represented, and no one to speak for her on the cancellation of the debt Europe owes her. If, in the light of this situation, we lead in calling an economic conference, we can not plead ignorance of the purpose of Europe. Are we prepared to meet Europe's proposal to cancel the debt? Cancellation of the interallied debt is the one proposal of easy agreement if our consent can be secured, since the European creditor countries are also debtors, while we owe no nation. It will be the one specific item Europe will expect us to agree to if we sponsor such a conference. This Nation should not even consider such a proposal. If we lead in a revision of the reparation question, France will remind us that she is ready to excuse a portion of what Germany owes her, the moment we are ready to excuse France for what she owes us. This is logical, and Europe will embrace the opportunity to request it, as all Americans must see before it is done. If we umpire the dispute and fix upon the figure, of course it will be expected in Europe that we will see that it is made good. No thoughtful American can overlook the inevitable result to us of our intrusion on the European economic situation. The world will know that we would not call a fourth economic conference after the failure of three preceding ones unless we were ready to consider the proposals discussed in former conferences but not agreed upon, because they involved American relations which can not be adjusted in her absence, viz, cancellation of her foreign loans. Many of the advocates of American intrusion are committed to the cancellation of these loans. Some of them openly, others covertly, but with an "open mind" which can have but one meaning. Men can not wade into the pool and still keep their feet dry.

"The international banking group absorbed in international obligations are and have been from the beginning attempting European commitments for the United States. No proposition has been too international to invite any objection from this group of our people. I fear that these people are sowing to the wind, and the harvest is in the future.

"The altruistic element, who are not concerned with taxes principally because they do not feel their burdens, see no reason why this country can not become Europe's perpetual Santa Claus. The professional propagandist, never at ease unless he is 'progressing,' and who thrives in new ventures, is eloquent over our duty to the Old World, not only to win the war but to pay for it as well. The latest phase of propaganda is cultivating the farmers' support for cancellation. He is assured that it will enable Europe to buy his surplus product, and thus increase the price of his crops, which will more than make up for the amount of the European loans.

"Then comes the selfish economist, the theorist, who pleads for the sake of America to step in and take direction of the Old World's troubles in order to save our country from Bolshevism. These are some of the voices Americans are compelled to hear coming out of Europe and reechoed here among our own people.

"The real question is whether we are ready to reverse our decision of two years ago to leave to Europe the settlement of her political disputes, not of our making nor of our concern, save the peace of the world where it can be secured. The immediate question, however, is whether we are ready to consider the cancellation of the debt. If not, we then have no choice of decision on the proposed intrusion. If we are ready to cancel it, then there still arises the all-important question, How do we propose to handle the collateral problems of European quarrels growing out of age-old differences, economic as well as political and racial, never more apparent than to-day?

"The trend in Europe is not toward unity of decision. France and Britain are tending in opposite directions. The real difference is economic, while the failure to reach agreement is political. Thus an economic verdict is delayed if not defeated from political fear. Britain contends the policy of France leads to industrial collapse and universal dislocation, while France contends the British policy leads to French bankruptcy and inevitable revolution. The immediate problem is reparations. It is European, and must be adjusted by the parties of immediate interest. The United States can not safely or effectually umpire the dispute.

"Europe's remedy is found in a mutual agreement of what can be done. When this point is reached, made definite, and certain, the first step to stability is assured. That opens the way for the flow of capital into Europe as a most profitable field of investment. This would enable the industries to revive in due time and would put all Europe to work again.

"In case the present political effort at Paris fails, as it now appears it has, steps may be taken by the United States to ascertain whether the countries in interest will consider the proposal to make a survey of the ability of Germany to pay, said survey to be made by an international commission of business men to be selected by leading nations, including the United States. The purpose would be to employ the most capable body to represent upon Germany's productive ability which would serve as a basis for fixing the amount of reparations. Of course, such report could not be binding upon any country, but serve only as a guide in attempting to arrive at a decision of the nations justified by the facts. Here would appear to be an open field for the United States in case the countries would welcome it. Otherwise this country will be closed out from offering any remedy for the Old World's woes, too much due to Old World rivalries, never more acute nor prominent than at the present time. The United States could render Europe no greater service, in my judgment, than to notify those countries once for all that so long as they refuse or delay to put their houses in order no assistance from us can be expected. This seemed an open way up to the recent break at Paris.

"The premiers' conference has bowed the United States out of Europe. France rather abruptly has closed the door in our face. She makes it known that she wants no advice, but guaranties and money and the sine qua non. To our announcement of our willingness to assist in a survey to establish Germany's ability to pay, she answers that she has the facts and intends to use her treaty rights to enforce her claims. Warnings against the certain prevention of economic stability of Europe to follow a policy of military occupation of Germany do not convince political France that concessions should be made. The outside world fears the consequences of the collapse of Germany, while France appears to fear the revival of Germany. Views so divergent have broken up the entente of Europe. The United States, sensing the points of divergence, suggested a possible adjustment. This suggestion has been spurned by public opinion in France. If this attitude is the course of the French Government, we will have our course made clear, and our next step should be to bring our troops home."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana rose.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to yield for a moment that I may ask leave to proceed out of order for five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, delicate negotiations have been and are now in progress in regard to the foreign debt, and I ask the House not to request of me to state at length what they are. I may say, however, that in the forefront is the question of the settlement of the debt of Great Britain to the United States. That debt assumes almost supreme importance. In the first place it is two-fifths of the whole foreign indebtedness, about $4,166,000,000 of principal out of a total of $10,150,000,000. Again, Great Britain is the only country in Europe which has balanced its budget, which has imposed taxation sufficient to meet its current expenses, and the people of that country are entitled to the greatest credit because they have stood, as it were, with their backs against the wall and with a desire to maintain their credit and meet expenses. It is entirely probable that in a short time some proposition will come before this House with reference to the settlement of that debt. I have always maintained, first, that the debt should be paid. I so expressed myself in a prominent foreign capital in the month of September last where the audience was made up mostly of those who were interested in the cancellation of the debt, and having so spoken there I certainly feel free to say here that it is not for us to cancel those debts. [Applause.] But with a full appreciation of international cooperation which should exist, with the remembrance of the frightful suffering through which those countries passed, we should make the terms as moderate as we can consistent with national interests. And I may call attention to the fact that it is not merely for the interest of our foreign debtors that leniency should be shown to them but even appealing to the selfish element here, it is of interest to us because our trade, our prosperity is very seriously hampered by financial conditions in Europe which I am afraid are going from bad to worse. I remarked in an address a few days since that when the financial history of this late collossal struggle and its aftermath is written by a master hand the most startling feature of that history will be that the worst inflation, the worst fiscal policies, the greatest blunders were perpetrated, not while the armies were in the field, but since the armistice of November 11, 1918.

Now, I do not pretend to speak for the commission; but I will say that if the proposition in regard to this English debt is to be made, it will not be made in the form of a request for a general revision of the statute. We do not wish to take the responsibility of making a decision which will be final in regard to this $4,000,000,000. [Applause.] I do not regard that as quite fair to the Congress and the legislative power. If there is a change in the terms fixed by the general statute, that change will be made here in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I know personally of the statement the gentleman made in Europe in regard to the cancellation of these debts. He was very frank about it, and there was some criticism on account of his boldness over there. But this is the question, and I think it is pertinent to the issue here: If a modification of the refunding proposition is made, I would like to know if the gentleman and his colleagues would agree to placing upon this commission, if such modification be made, Democrats, and make it a bipartisan instead of a partisan commission, as it exists today?

Mr. BURTON. Of course the commission would be glad, as a social matter, to have Democrats as part of it. This is an executive function. Three members of the Cabinet are on that commission, and the natural appointments are Republicans from the Senate and the House. I do not know that Republicans had any representation when the more than $10,000,000,000 was loaned to these foreign countries. [Applause.]

Mr. OLDFIELD. The Government service was filled with Republicans all during that period.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes. I have a question to ask him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the purport of the gentleman's statement, that this commission did not desire to take the responsibility with reference to the settlement of this debt, does the gentleman go to the extent of saying that he prefers that Congress should indicate its wish as to the rate of interest and the maximum time the debt shall run?

Mr. BURTON. No. Naturally, the commission would make a recommendation, and that recommendation would be presented to the President, and the President would present it here for the approval or disapproval of Congress. The questions involved are of such complication that it naturally belongs to an executive body in the first instance to make its proposition here, and then Congress can either approve or disapprove.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman referred to a speech that he made a few evenings ago in the city of Washington.

Mr. BURTON. I made reference to one that I made in the city of London.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the gentleman to say that he had made an address a few evenings ago in Washington. If so, I would suggest that if he would commit it to writing we will be glad to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. I am rather opposed to padding the RECORD with speeches made outside. Otherwsie I should be glad to comply with the gentleman's friendly request.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to whether there should not be some leeway given to the commission.

Mr. BURTON. I think so. This is the view I take of it: On this very important question of the settlement with Great Britain the members are not asking for further leeway, but there is a great variety of countries besides, of an unequal degree of solvency, where details would have to be worked out, and in those cases it would seem best that larger latitude be given to the commission as to terms and rates of interest.

Mr. FESS. That is precisely what I thought.

Mr. BURTON. But this matter as to Great Britain is of such supreme importance that while we might make a recommendation, I think it should be considered here. [Applause.]

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to announce that he is going to go away to-morrow for a few days and will designate the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to act as Speaker in his absence.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the appropriation bill for the executive office and independent bureaus. Does the gentleman desire to make any arrangement as to time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have had a number of requests for time. In considering the appropriation bills heretofore, little time has been given to general debate. Members seem to have been putting it off until this bill. I have two hours of requests. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that I would like to present my ideas about this bill. I think it would be a saving of time to touch upon some of the permanent features of it. I do not know how long it will take to do it. I will be just as brief as I can. I suggest to the gentleman the propriety of allowing me to present my ideas on this measure before we take up the question of the division of time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have a number of requests from this side, and I will be glad to accommodate all of them. I have no objection to what the gentleman suggests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Executive Office appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13696, the Executive Office appropriation bill, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Executive Office bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, in the preparation of this bill we have considered the appropriations for some 27 of the different independent offices and bureaus of this Government. In fact, this appropriation bill contains the appropriations for all the activities of the Government aside from the Cabinet officers and the legislative bill. The report presents very fully the details of what the bill contains and of its accomplishments. The appropriation for the year 1924 amounts to quite a material reduction below the current law. The total appropriations for the independent offices provided for the year 1923 amounted to $538,510,922.45. The amount recommended in this bill is $496,235,771. This sum, compared with the regular annual appropriation for 1923 and the estimates for 1924, is as follows: It is $42,275,151.45 less than the total appropriation for 1923. It is $12,105,242 less than the amount recommended by the Budget in the estimates submitted to this committee.

In opening my remarks I wish to say that the work of this committee has been largely lessened by reason of the previous work of the Budget and the estimates submitted by them, being a testimony in favor of the establishment and the conduct of the Budget.

I do not subscribe to the idea that in every instance we should be controlled by the recommendations made by the Budget, and there is a very important reason why that is true. The estimates submitted by these various departments are submitted many months before the hearings are had before the several subcommittees. The budgetry make their estimates upon the information that they have at hand at the time of their submission. Many things may occur after that submission and before the hearings before the committees which may necessitate alterations. It has been the purpose of this committee and its policy as nearly as possible to follow the suggestion and advice of the Budget in their recommendations. In some three or four instances, however, by reason of changed conditions since these estimates were submitted and the recommendations made by the Budget we have found it necessary, in our judgment, to vary from the recommendations made by the Budget.

In some cases we have lowered the amount recommended by them. In some cases we have increased the amount recommended by them. In order that you may have some idea of the work of this committee and the recommendations made, I think perhaps it will be a saving of time for me to give some little explanation of this bill as we have presented it. I will confine myself as nearly as possible to the changes that we have made—to the recommendations above or reductions below the amounts recommended by the Budget.

The first item to which I wish to call your attention is the appropriation asked for the maintenance of the Executive Mansion. We have recommended an increase of $25,000 in that appropriation above the current year's appropriation—$20,000 in one item and $5,000 in another item.

Of the $20,000 item that we have recommended $10,000 is to install a heating plant whereby the Executive Mansion, instead of being heated by an independent plant, as it is now heated, will be heated from the plant established for the heating of the State, War, and Navy and other buildings. This, according to the estimate made, will result in a saving of $2,100 per year in the heating of the Executive Mansion. So you will see that this is a pretty good investment, for it will not take more than four and three-quarter years to pay back all that we have expended in this investment. Besides it will relieve the necessity of hauling coal and the litter and dirt incident thereto in depositing coal into the Executive Mansion.

Four thousand dollars of this sum of $20,000 is for the purpose of establishing a refrigerating plant in the Executive Mansion. There never has been a refrigeration plant in the Executive Mansion, and in consequence all the ice necessary for the use of the White House has to be hauled along the walk leading from the White House to the Executive Offices. In the opinion of those who have this matter in charge, this change will result in a saving in a very short time that will fully warrant the appropriation.

Six thousand dollars is for remodeling the basement in the Executive Offices, for the purpose of making more room for the clerks who are now in such congested places that they can not work to advantage, and for the purpose of providing more filing space. Your committee is thoroughly of the opinion that this should be granted.

The other $5,000 is for the purpose of preparing and providing plans and the building of a fireproof roof over the White House. It is now a tinder box, and inspection has demonstrated the fact that the rafters have slipped from their moorings and away from their beams and are now resting upon the heavy walls that support them. The space beneath the roof is the garret, in which there are thousands and thousands of volumes of records pertaining to this Government and a great many relics that are of rare value that have been contributed to the various Presidents from time to time and that have been stored there. The place is now so inflammable that it would burst into flame if a spark should happen to light there and not be discovered. To me the amazing thing is that in the improvement of the White House which was made a few years ago nothing was done with reference to making the roof fireproof. The White House was burned at one time, not by the fault of anybody in this country, but it would be our fault now if it should burn again. It would be an everlasting shame if we did not insure its protection against such a catastrophe, and we can insure it by making this appropriation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The very thing the gentleman is presenting argues to me the necessity of an archives building. Is there any prospect of having a permanent housing of the records that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only thing I know of that points in that direction is a report submitted to the Senate a few days ago with reference to the necessity of it. There is no question of the necessity. It is an amazing proposition when we take into consideration the fact that the records of the Treasury Department of the United States are lodged in the basements and upper stories of 27 different buildings in this city. What we should have is an archives building.

In addition to that, inasmuch as we have combined all of the auditing into one office, is a general auditing building somewhere near the Capitol, so that all of these records that are very often called for by Congress may be in a general auditing building, so that the general accounting office which is responsible to the Congress could produce the desired papers on short notice.

Mr. FESS. The buildings where these records are stored are not fireproof, are they?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; and some of them are in cellars.

Mr. FESS. That ought to be corrected.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The next item to which I call your attention is the appropriation for the Alien Property Custodian. The request of this department was for $370,000. The recommendation of the Budget was $281,200, and your committee have recommended that appropriation. Two hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars of this sum is for the pay of the personnel and the rest is for traveling and sundry expenses. I wish to call the attention of the committee in passing to the fact that nothing has been done to wind up the affairs of the Alien Property Custodian's office. It is not the fault of the present administrator of this office; he has repeatedly requested that something be done, and before the proper committee of this House he appeared and made recommendation of what he thought should be done. There are 32,000 active trusts in the possession of this trustee; 93 per cent of that 32,000 represent trusts of $10,000 or less. We have in this country a great majority of those who are interested in the disposition of these trusts. All that they have in the world is tied up there, and some of the most pitiful examples and evidences of suffering in consequence have come not only before this committee but before the Alien Property Custodian. There is no reason why something should not be done to relieve that situation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand that a bill is now being considered and hearings are being had upon it before the Interstate Commerce Commission in which it is proposed to take care of 93 per cent of those trusts.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is that the bill has been pending for two years and no action has been had upon it. What we need is action. These people who are interested seem to find small consolation in the fact that there is a bill pending before the committee. Numerous petitions have been filed and numerous applications by individual Members have been made trying to get action from the committee, but it does not come.

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. Is the gentleman aware that the committee is holding hearings now and will take some action on the bill in the near future?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am glad to know it.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the gentleman that it is little short of an outrage that we do not get some action on this measure, considering the time since the war ended.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have long since determined that we are not going to do what we had a right to do—to confiscate the property because it belonged to alien enemies. If that is the policy we are to adopt, and I agree with it, we are derelict in withholding it from those to whom it is due.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. This is a little bit off from the subject, but I want to ask the gentleman if the hearings which are had before the various committees of Congress, in which there are many items of great importance, containing valuable information for the country hereafter—are those hearings kept in fireproof buildings, or are they simply kept in committee rooms?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As far as the hearings before our committee are concerned, they could be had at any time.

Mr. HICKS. That is not what I am asking. I am asking what means or methods are taken to preserve them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, there was a picture the other morning in which it showed how the papers were thrust and pushed into shelves and pigeonholes where the shelves were broken down with the weight, and that they had no protection at all. It is a crime and a shame the way most of those papers are kept.

Mr. HICKS. Then, in the future if some one wanted a copy of this bill or the hearings upon it they might not be able to get them, and yet the hearings contain facts of great importance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the Congressional Library retain full and complete files of these documents?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there would not be room enough in the whole Congressional Library building to keep them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have found old reports and documents in the Library of Congress.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; there are records a hundred years old which were deposited in moldy places long before the Library was dreamed of.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of the Alien Property Custodian, I understand that under our resolution ending the war we provided for an adjustment agency to adjust disputes; and to pass a general law turning back all the property would be a revocation of that act which we have already taken and would somewhat embarrass the State Department.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and that is the reason that was left open.

Now, as I have said before, 93 per cent of the 32,000 trusts represent $10,000 and under. Only 7 per cent are $10,000 and over. After liquidation of all the expenses incident to the trust there will be in the hands of the trustee $350,000,000. Fifty million dollars is sufficient to settle every one of these 93 per cent of trusts, giving to each one his trust that did not exceed $10,000, and all that is coming to him is an allowance of $10,000 to each trust above $10,000. So there is left no excuse and no apology that can be made for this delay.

Mr. THORPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. THORPE. Is there any hope of this being settled soon? I myself have some claims by constituents and I do not know just what to reply to them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The information has been given that they are now holding hearings on a bill and that action will be taken soon.

Now, as to the Bureau of Efficiency. The appropriation is $145,000, the same as recommended by the Budget. For the Civil Service Commission we appropriate $305,420 for administration expenses, the same as the current year. I wish to call the attention of the committee with reference to what has been done as to civil-service employees, both in and outside of Washington.

The number of employees in the District of Columbia June 30, or at the end of the last fiscal year, was 69,980, which is 30,000 more than was employed in 1916. The number of employees on June 30, 1921, however, was 77,865. So that the employees on the 30th of June last shows a decrease of 8,000. The employees outside of the District of Columbia on June 30, 1921, was 597,482. On June 30, 1922, there were 560,863, a reduction of 37,000.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman ever given any thought as to the reason why these employees increase proportionately so much faster than the population?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I have given a great deal of thought and study to that. Take the history of the increase of the civil-service employees in this country, and it will be found that there is an increase out of all proportion to the population occurrent and recurrent every time that we have a war. War seems to open up necessities incident to itself, and those necessities are kept up to some considerable extent after the war is over. While I had charge of the legislative appropriation bill I gave very much thought to this matter. At one time we had 117,000 of these civil-service employees in the District of Columbia. It is a mighty hard matter to release a person from the pay roll after he has been once attached to it, and during the war it was a mighty easy thing to get a person on the pay roll.

Mr. GARNER. Is not that probably the principal reason why there is this increase? The war brings on employees, and it is hard to separate them; hard to jar them loose from their positions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely true.

Mr. GARNER. Did not the gentleman have some hope that the appointment of the reclassification committee and the adoption of the Budget system, combined, might eliminate some of these unnecessary employees, both in the District and outside of it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have some faith in the Budget system doing that thing. In fact, it has resulted in a very large measure in making the decrease that we have here, to which I have called attention. I have very little faith in the reclassification relieving one of them. The reason that I am pessimistic upon that score is because of the fact that we were promised that under the retirement act, by reason of getting rid of the old employees who were not much good any longer, we would not only increase efficiency but that we would also reduce the number of employees. The fact is that it simply increased them by the number of those on the retirement list.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I notice the special increase in this whole Civil Service Commission appropriation is for a field force. Just what new activity have we undertaken there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am coming to that now. Heretofore there have been details in the various other departments of a great number of their officials who have rendered their service entirely to the Civil Service Commission, and heretofore they have been paid out of the appropriations for their respective departments. It was an awkward situation, and it divided control and responsibility. It has been a moot question for many years whether it would not be advisable to transfer these details to the Civil Service Commission. We do that under this bill. In consequence a reduction has been made in dollars amounting to $54,000 by reason of this combination. It will result in better efficiency; and I want to say in passing that in one of the instances where we exceeded the recommendation made by the Budget it is with reference to this item, where we have given $12,000 more than the amount recommended by the Budget, and we did so upon the evidence had that it would cripple them to a very great extent not to permit it and in view of the fact that they were saving $54,000 by reason of this reorganization plan.

Mr. SNELL. Then I understand that the gentleman's statement is that we are saving $54,000, taking enough out of some other appropriation for some other department to make up for the amount of the increase.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that has been done.

Mr. SNELL. Just what are the most of these people doing around the country? That is one part of the civil service that I never could understand. As far as I have known, I have not approved it. Perhaps I lack information.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know that I can explain to the satisfaction of the gentleman all that these people do. They have a field force that is keeping in constant touch with the civil-service employees, these half million outside of the District of Columbia. They make reports with reference to their efficiency. They are supposed to keep tab upon them. They have nothing to do with the examinations that are made, but they are inquiring constantly into the wants of the various localities and activities for which the Government has to supply civil-service employees. I expect they are rendering a very good service.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that inquiring into their wants usually gets us into trouble? I wish the gentleman would explain just what definite work they do that renders any good to the Government. What good could a man do by going around and spending three or four days to find out about their efficiency?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He goes, say, into the post office in the great city of New York, where there is an army of civil-service employees, and if he makes a proper investigation he can do invaluable service.

Mr. SNELL. Is not that the work of the post-office inspectors, people from the Post Office Department itself?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is not.

Mr. SNELL. Do not those people do the same thing?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is not that duplication?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There may be overlapping to some extent, and that is one of the reasons I hope there will be a reorganization of the activities of this Government, in order that this overlapping may cease, and that one department will be charged with entire responsibility for its particular work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman any figures showing the amount of the appropriation we voted some years back for this field service as compared with the amount that is voted now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall back four or five years ago, the appropriation amounted to $40,000 or $50,000, and I am now informed by the clerk of the committee that it amounted to $45,680. The total carried in this bill is $272,000. That is going some, even for the Civil Service, to multiply the appropriation sixfold in four or five years.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is only in keeping with our increased cost of government.

Mr. SNELL. Is not this one of the places where we could cut down?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. While the Civil Service Commission is no exception to the general rule in regard to increases, I think they have been very moderate, and that they are making the best of their appropriations. I do not know what may be the attitude of the Members here with reference to the Civil Service Commission. I have some very definite ideas about it myself. If I were instituting a Civil Service Commission I would not do it upon the basis that we now have it. I believe and have always contended that those who are at the head of a bureau, those who are at the head of a division, those who have to do with the administration of affairs, should be in sympathy with the administration at the time in power.

Instead of their tearing down that administration, they ought to be building up that administration. I believe in reference to the disposition of detailed work, clerical in its character, up to the bureau and division superintendents, that the civil service is all right. This Government could not last long if we discharged those and put in new men opposed to our political faith.

Mr. SNELL. I have no fault to find with the Civil Service Commission proper; they are probably doing very good work, but I think there is work there that could be cut down without in any way affecting the general efficiency of the Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On the other hand, it is the contention of the Civil Service Commission that greater appropriations ought to be made, although they do the very thing the gentleman from New York says he thinks they ought to be curtailed in doing, and they say that if they had a greater force it would result in a greater saving and greater efficiency. There is a difference of opinion.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me we are going to an excess on this civil-service proposition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, the transfer of the detailed civil-service men results in a saving of $54,000 annually. We allow $12,000 additional, an excess above the recommendation by the Budget. The Employees' Compensation Commission, $123,940 for 1923, $116,740 for 1924.

Mr. FESS. Before the gentleman enters on that, will he yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The country thinks we are derelict in not keeping this force here in the District below what it is now. It is nearly double what it was before the war, and it seems to me it ought to be made pretty clear. Look at the War Insurance Bureau and the Shipping Board and the increase for the Treasury Department, especially the enforcement of prohibition; there is a very large increase that never can be cut.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and I am glad the gentleman called attention to it. If you take all the employees who were necessitated by reason of the war and which would not exist now but for the war and deduct that number from the present civil-service list in the District of Columbia, the increase would not be above the proportion of the natural increase by reason of the increased business. There are practically some 5,000 in the War Risk Bureau that did not exist and no occasion for their existence before the war. There is practically the same number in the Shipping Board within the District of Columbia, and there are several other activities created by reason of the war, and if you deduct those from the list that existed before the war the increase is about 10 per cent.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman spoke of the War Risk Bureau. Does he mean the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman that there is no immediate prospect of the present force being materially reduced?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will be reduced somewhat, because there is a reduction now going on in the Shipping Board, because of the fact they are winding up some of the divisions there, some of the settlement divisions, and there is a material reduction being made there. I never expected to see the number of employees reduced anywhere near what it was before the war.

Mr. SNELL. Suppose we pass the ship subsidy bill, that will reduce it somewhat?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that might.

Mr. MADDEN. The number of employees in the Shipping Board is not large. It is in the Emergency Fleet Corporation where the large number are employed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is that those terms are used interchangeably with reference to the Emergency Fleet Corporation and Shipping Board.

Mr. SNELL. Half the Members do not understand which is which.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Federal Power Commission—the Budget recommended $50,000 for this activity. It is supposed to be operated, and at the time it was created it was supposed to be operated without any additional expense to the Government except the salary of the secretary, which was $5,000 a year.

The gentleman representing this activity came before your committee and asked for an appropriation of $50,000, the sum recommended by the Budget. It is his opinion that this should be another independent establishment. It is like all these other establishments. It is like a certain plant I have seen here in the Botanic Garden that puts out an upshoot from the root that does not look like the parent at all, but it is an independent entity. Nine-tenths of all these bureaus and divisions which are now independent establishments of the United States have sprung up just like this. They have been created within some Cabinet activity and have grown to such proportions that they have become an independent entity. This Power Commission was supposed to be a bureau under the direction of the Interior Department and the War Department and the Agricultural Department, and perhaps some other department, and that all of the details in reference to the conduct of the business were to come in equal proportions from those departments. It has been doing that, but now the gentleman comes before us and asks for an appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose of arranging a nucleus whereby an independent department may be established.

Mr. SNELL. When we grant that appropriation they ask are not we doing the very thing we do not want to do?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We always do it. We do not see beyond the end of our noses. We passed a bill for the control of the packing industry under the Agricultural Department, and before that session of Congress ended a deficiency committee appropriated more than $50,000 for the purpose of establishing an independent concern.

Mr. SNELL. I remember very well on the passage of the bill it was to be taken care of in the department. I think they ought to be pretty careful in this work they are doing and going to do.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And you will find in the next Congress that this will develop into a bureau.

Mr. SNELL. Why is not the time to stop it before it starts?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have cut the appropriation from $50,000 to $40,000. We thought we would cut it a little, at any rate.

Mr. SNELL. I know; but when you make a special heading, as is done in this bill, it gives it a foothold. It seems to me the only way you can stop it is to stop it in this appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. We thought we would call attention to it, and we did that by the manner in which we cut it.

Now, as to the Federal Trade Commission, the gentlemen representing the Federal Trade Commission appeared before your committee and made a wonderful representation with reference to the necessity of an increase in the appropriation. They said they felt that they ought to have $1,000,000. We listened to them for very nearly a day, and it occurs to your committee that instead of their expanding, they can better conserve the best interests of this country by contracting their activities. It has long since been a mooted question in the United States whether this trade commission is a liability or an asset. I had the good fortune of knowing one of the members of this commission a number of years ago under the Democratic régime, and he told me that he had discovered that instead of its being an activity for promoting legitimate business in this country, it was being conducted for the purpose of retarding it, and that their activities were in that direction, and if the policy was not changed he would get out; and he did get out. They have a great number of attorneys allocated to the different activities, to the different courts, and assigned to different lawsuits. It occurred to your committee that they were too generous in their allocation of attorneys, and that they should get along with the recommendation made by the Budget, and we did not see fit to increase it at this time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I have read carefully the reports of the Federal Trade Commission, and personally I think we would be doing a benefit to this country if we cut that appropriation down to $500,000 and insisted on their keeping within the limit. Then we would get better results, so far as legitimate business is concerned.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. What was the appropriation last year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The appropriation last year was $850,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. And this appropriation is what?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. $880,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. A little more?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Here is another institution that I wish to call attention to, although it is not of great importance so far as amounts are concerned. But it simply shows how the United States is imposed upon. The Budget recommended an appropriation of $99,000 for the Perry Memorial Commission. A number of years ago there was built at Put in Bay a monument commemorating the Battle of Lake Erie and the victory won by Commodore Perry. It cost something like $850,000; $250,000 of that sum was contributed by the United States. The remainder was contributed by nine States—the States of Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, Vermont, Rhode Island, Kentucky, and Massachusetts. After this monument was completed it was turned over to the United States with the understanding, as we were informed, that it should be self-sustaining. They charge admission to this monument. There seems to be a diversity of opinion with reference to what the surroundings of this institution should be.

In passing, I wish to say that this monument was located, with the assistance of the head of the Fine Arts Commission, Mr. Moore, in a swamp. He seems to have a penchant for locating monuments in swamps. It has been suggested by some that it was the original intention that it should be surrounded by water, and that it should rise up out of the water as a testimonial to the gallantry and the splendid victory won by Commodore Perry. But since that time there seems to have been a change in the dreams of these gentlemen, and they are now appealing to the United States Government and asking for an appropriation of $99,000 to take and fill up this swamp and to make it so that the land adjacent thereto may be of some real value. How much of a real estate scheme there is in it I do not know. But I did not feel, and the committee did not feel, that it was a project that should be shifted on the United States, especially when we were assured by these gentlemen that it should be self-sustaining. So we struck out the estimate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say this was located by the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman I referred to, representing the Fine Arts Commission, assisted in locating it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How far does the jurisdiction of that commission extend? All over the United States?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; all over the United States and over our island possessions. I think it is a power supreme in itself, as I will show you before I get through with this discussion.

The Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds since our last appearance before you has taken control over the Patent Office, the Interior Department Building, the Land Office Building, and the Pension Office Building.

This was a splendid piece of business. By reason of his taking over the Interior Department Building alone it has resulted in a saving of $90,000 in one year, and a saving in all the buildings, including the Interior Department, has amounted to $118,787. The estimate for the care and control of all the buildings under the Interior Department is $88,900 below the Budget recommendation, and the gentleman who is responsible for this is entitled to the commendation of this Congress for the splendid work he has done in this direction. This has been done very largely by reducing the overhead expense. One of the principal items in this reduction is the getting rid of a whole lot of unnecessary watchmen. For example, in the War, State, and Navy Building before the war we had 38 watchmen. They got so thick down there during the war that you could hardly get into the building, and could hardly get out of it after you got into it.

Under the present arrangement these have been reduced to 22 and a corresponding reduction has been made with reference to all these buildings.

The Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds asked that he might have a superintendent at a salary of $4,500 a year; and in view of the fact that he has made a saving of $118,000 in the conduct of these buildings in this one year by pressing into the service those whom it was possible to employ in this way we felt that he was entitled to that consideration.

Under a ruling of the comptroller all of those employed in these buildings must after the 1st of next July be paid in cash. Heretofore they have been paid in checks. There are some one thousand five hundred and more employees in the various public buildings under the control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. The pay roll amounts to a little over $2,000,000 a year, and as you know they are paid at different times. The ruling of the Comptroller General is necessitated because of forgeries and frauds that have been practiced through the issuance of these checks. In order to protect the Treasury from that the Comptroller General has required that these payments be made in cash. In order to do that there must be somebody of responsibility to handle the disbursement, and we gave him a disbursing clerk at $2,000 a year. Also we gave him an additional clerk of class 4 at a salary of $1,800 a year to act as appointment clerk to superintend the appointment of these 1,500 clerks.

Mr. SPROUL. Why did you change from payments by check to payments in cash?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I just tried to explain that it was because of forgeries and frauds practiced among these people, resulting heretofore in a loss to the Government, which would be obviated by paying these people in cash.

In passing I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that last year we appropriated $1,500,000 for the purpose of purchasing seven blocks of real estate down opposite the War and Navy Buildings, occupied by temporary structures built for the Government during the war for war purposes. That real estate has all been purchased, and it was purchased at a saving of between $180,000 and $200,000, so that there will be that amount of money to be turned back into the Treasury.

I wish to call the attention of the committee next to the item in which the Interstate Commerce Commission is interested. The appropriation for the operating expense of that commission allowed by your committee is $2,100,000, as against $2,250,000 for 1923 and as against a request for $2,300,000 estimated by the commission. The gentlemen representing this commission were very earnest in their request that this appropriation be increased by $200,000. They stressed the fact, which we know to be true, that duties are constantly being imposed upon this commission by resolutions asking for various investigations without any appropriation whatever to provide for the payment of the expense of these investigations. Within the last year an investigation was ordered of the Transcontinental Traffic Bureau and its transactions, which involved much time and the employment of a great number of investigators, without a dollar being provided for the expense. Also, an investigation was ordered by a resolution, not of this body, but of another body, from which most of these demands come, into the financial transactions of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, and there was a like resolution with reference to the Western Pacific Railroad.

I felt, and your committee feels, that we were not warranted in granting the increase requested, but that it was our duty to call the attention of this body to the fact, hoping that gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol will be cognizant of the fact that they should be slow in passing these resolutions imposing extraordinary duties upon the Interstate Commerce Commission without making some provision for the payment for these additional duties. We did not increase the item. We did, however, increase the item for policing the accounts of the various railroads. The recommendation of the Budgetry was $500,000 for this purpose, and we increased it to $550,000. The request was for $100,000 additional. I wish to call the attention of the committee to what this service is. Under the transportation act which we passed some years ago—and it was also their duty to some extent under the Hepburn Act—we required the Interstate Commerce Commission to police the accounts of the various railroads and common carriers of the country. We have in this country to-day 1,598 railroads, 312 electric roads, 1,059 telephone companies, 15 telegraph companies, 2 express companies, 32 pipe-line companies, and 114 carriers by water, making in all 3,133 common carriers; and it is made the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the law to police the accounts of all of these carriers. Up to date they have been able to police only the accounts of railroads of class 1, 198 in number, and a very few second-class railroads.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What does the gentleman mean by policing these accounts?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I suppose it is another term for auditing the accounts. They are supposed to keep in touch with the accounts of these railroads concerning their duties and relations to the United States Government and to the Treasury of the United States, and I may say in passing that by virtue of the policing of these accounts or auditing them or whatever term may be applied, there has resulted a saving to the United States Government of $9,000,000 within the last two or three years.

How much of a saving might result if all the accounts of all the different carriers were policed of course is problematic. But in order that the commission may have a greater latitude in this regard, and show a greater efficiency in the policing of these accounts, we felt that we were authorized in granting this additional appropriation of $50,000. That is the only increase that we granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A request was made for an increase of $280,000 for the valuation of the railroads of the United States. To me this valuation business presents a very dubious aspect. I believe that under the present arrangement it will soon terminate so far as it is possible for it to terminate. But in passing it is worth while to have a little résumé of what this thing has cost the United States Government. It was started in 1913 when it was estimated by those who were appearing in favor of the proposition that at the outside it would cost the United States Government not to exceed $5,000,000. A little more than nine years have passed since the commencement of this valuation and it is not yet complete, but it has cost the Government $23,675,000. The appropriation made this year for the completion of this work is $1,000,000. The gentlemen who are immediately connected with it claim that it can not be accomplished for that amount, and they asked for an additional appropriation of $280,000 with a promise of completion by July 1, 1924.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The authorization of this valuation was one of the first things done by Congress after I came here. I have not yet been able to be convinced that this work is going to be of any material value after it is done. I wish to ask the gentleman what is going to be the real substantial value when it is all done? How can we use it, and of what importance will it be to the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would be of this importance and there would be some benefit derived from it. The objection is to my mind that all the work done before the war will practically amount to nothing, and what is valuable is that which has occurred since the war. Of course, gentlemen may differ with me. But it will be of value in fixing the rates. It will be of value hereafter in the distribution of all the allowances which should be made by the Government, and in discrimination of rates it is not possible in a thickly congested and well-settled section of the country to require as great a freight rate or as great a passenger rate as the railroad ought to have in the more sparsely settled sections of the country. In fixing the value of their investment the valuation on their property must control. It is also of great importance with reference to taxation, and that is one of the things that it will be used for more than anything else, and not so much by the United States Government as by the several State governments. We had before our committee during the hearings a gentleman representing railroad commissions in independent States asking that there be a segregation of the appraisements so that each State may know what the valuation of a particular railroad property is within that State, and that that valuation be maintained on its returns through the future.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I admit that on the basis of taxation it will be of some substantial importance, but will the valuation have anything to do with fixing the rates?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will, and for this reason: If they equalize the rates as compared with the valuation and the amount of investment and cost of operation and a proper return that they should have for a business transaction, the valuation would be a thing entering into it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Would it not be important for the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing rates to have the actual valuation, and must they not know what the actual valuation is? That is the only way they have to get at it.

Mr. FESS. The only objection to that statement is that they have already fixed the rates without having the valuation, because it is not yet completed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but that was arbitrarily done. One of the duties imposed on the commission now is with reference to the policy of combining the railroads of this country into different systems. If that is adopted, then the valuation of the railroads would be a very important consideration with reference to the fixing of rates, and it occurs to me that any scientific fixing of rates and returns for investment made must be based upon the valuation of these roads.

Mr. FESS. If there is some value to be got out of it, I have no concern about the amount we are paying for it. Does the gentleman think we will ever reach a place where the roads that cost less to operate, and therefore make a greater profit, will be called upon to assist the roads that are not profitable? Will that ever be in the general system where the strong road will be called on to support the smaller roads financially?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, if I had a policy to carry out, I would combine the small roads with the larger roads—put them into different units for the very purpose of making strong roads help support the smaller roads.

Mr. FESS. That could be done under Government ownership, but can it be done under private ownship?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It can be done; yes. The railroads of the country are common carriers, quasi public corporations. We have adopted a policy that they are under the control of the United States Government. Now, for best serving their purposes and serving the people of the United States, I think it is clearly within the decisions of the United States courts and the policy of the commissioners that they may be combined.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the existing law governing the railroads provides that where the earnings of a road are over 6 per cent the excess must be divided between the Government and the railroad, and that part of the money which goes to the Government shall be used by the Interstate Commerce Commission to buy equipment and rent it to the weaker roads so that they will have such equipment as will enable them to function successfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana have one hour more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Now will the gentleman yield that I may ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether under the transportation act any strong road will be called upon to assist the smaller road until the 6 per cent limit has been realized?

Mr. MADDEN. After they have gone beyond the 6 per cent. Many roads are now earning more than 6 per cent, and the law requires them to divide the amount in excess of 6 per cent with the Government in equal proportions, and the amount turned over to the Government is presumed under the law to be under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which it is to use to buy equipment which may be rented on reasonable terms to roads that are not able to buy it themselves in sections of the country where there is no heavy traffic and conditions are not such as to enable the roads to be prosperous and to serve the people who live in that territory.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Indiana will pardon me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, if they put this money that is paid over by the railroads in a vault by itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I did not suppose they put it in a vault.

Mr. GARNER. Has the Government of the United States received one single 5-cent piece on that account?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it has.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman think that they will ever receive it?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I do.

Mr. GARNER. The Government will never receive one single dollar as the result of that law. The report of the Capper resolution in the Senate stated that there were 41 railroads that had earned more than 6 per cent, and not one dollar has been turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Then it is the business of the Government to see that they do receive the division, and I am in favor of urging in every way possible the administrative officials seeing to it that the law is carried out in its entirety.

Mr. GARNER. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] or the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] what methods, if they know, are being pursued by the administration to recover this money that the law says belongs to the people, and ought to be placed in the Treasury with which to buy additional equipment for the weaker roads. What efforts are being made to recover that money?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have already more troubles than I can take care of, and I am not inviting any more. I do not know anything about it. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to understand that this work, which we were promised would be done in a very short space of time, has dragged its weary way along for nine years. At one time there were 1,573 people engaged in this valuation work. This number has been reduced to 583, and we are told that the field work is done, that it is a matter of computation now, and that is being done within the District of Columbia. But this work will never be done, because the valuation of a railroad to-day is one thing and the valuation of a railroad a year from now is quite another thing. There will ever be the necessity, if there ever was any necessity originally for fixing the valuation of these railroads and machinery, to keep that valuation up to date, and in accordance with that idea a gentleman appeared before our committee representing the various independent railroad commissions of the United States asking that that thing be done, and that the various States be apprised constantly of what the valuation was of the different railroads in the respective States. However, we did not allow the $280,000 asked. We thought that we would see if they could get along with $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the present value of a valuation of a railroad property taken 10 years ago?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To me it would be very little.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then of what value would it be in computing rates? Of course it might give a very vague idea.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We entered into that feature of it in the hearings and it was contended then that by taking the property used and useful and taking the wear and tear upon it, they could form a reasonable idea of the present valuation. I am not an expert on that, however.

I wish to call attention now to the Government housing activity that comes within the jurisdiction of this committee. The situation with reference to the Government Housing Corporation is practically the same as it was when the committee appeared before you last year. During last year they sold about $900,000 worth of improved property. Many of these contracts were canceled by reason of the coal strike where these properties are owned, and by reason of the railroad strike. We reduced their appropriation $125,000 in the hope and under the promise that they might curtail their overhead expense so as to come within the recommendation of the Budget.

I wish to speak now at some length with reference to the Government hotels. I mean by the Government hotels these buildings occupied by the women employees of the Government, situated this side of the Union Station. That property cost originally, with the equipment, about $3,000,000. The appropriation for the maintenance of these Government hotels last year was $925,000. The Budget recommended for this year $750,000. We allowed an addition of $50,000, or $800,000 in all. We did that for this reason: Last year the management paid into the Treasury $86,000 more than it cost to run those Government hotels. They are providing to-day meals and rooms for 1,800 girls.

I know there is quite a disposition on the part of some to raze those institutions to the ground and destroy them and turn the 1,800 girls loose in this town to go where they may to find rooming accommodations. I am opposed to that; and I think that until some satisfactory arrangement may be made whereby they can be accommodated these buildings should be maintained, even though they may mar for the time being the esthetic taste of the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's idea of providing permanent dormitories for the women clerical help in the District, when these building are no longer available for that purpose, just as colleges do when the girls are housed for the period of time that they are at the college?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would be in favor of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am strongly in favor of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. And I will state another thing. I would be in favor of building a dormitory or something for the accommodation of the Members of this House and the Senate, in order that the Members of Congress might be protected from the insatiable maw of the real estate profiteers in the city of Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Volstead Act would interfere with that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that might interfere with it.

With reference to the Government hotels, we were wonderfully impressed by the attitude of the management. They were willing to try as best they could to meet the cut of $175,000 in their appropriation and proposed to do it by cutting out $59,000 in wages and $79,000 in provisions. If these buildings are to be maintained, they ought to be maintained properly, in a cleanly, respectable, sanitary condition for the accommodation of these girls. Taking into consideration the profit they made last year, with a probability of a reduction in cost, together with a proposition made by the superintendent in answer to a demand, a certain per cent, though small, that some of those occupying rooms be permitted to keep the rooms without board, thinking the experiment worth while, we felt that this appropriation of $800,000 might carry them through. Therefore we allowed the addition of $50,000 to the estimate of the Budget for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the director of the Housing Corporation ever made a report which has been printed as a Government document?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Well, I am told it is not available.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know why it is not available; it has been published. I have seen it myself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is advocating, at least temporarily, occupancy of these dormitories by these lady Government clerks. Does the gentleman advocate that as a permanent policy of the Government, in time of peace, that we should undertake to furnish domiciles for Government employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not say I would do that unless it became a necessity for self-protection. I do not think the gentleman from Alabama or any other gentleman here can commend the attitude of the real estate owners of this town and apartment owners in reference to their conduct and treatment of those who must of necessity be here in connection with their service with the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with the gentleman about that; but there is only a very small proportion, of course, of the female employees of the Government who are taken care of in this manner; and it seems to me the proposition in peace times—in normal times—of advocating the provision at Government expense of domiciles for just a small proportion of Government employees is a rather dangerous proposition as a matter of policy.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may be right about that, but it was a most fortunate expedient. This provision was made as a reservoir whereby this excess could be taken care of during the emergency which is not yet passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no quarrel. I think it was entirely proper; but we are not on that status now.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have not gotten very far away from it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Alabama spoke of a peace-time policy. As a matter of fact, while the war is actually ended, the great emergency created by the war may extend for a period of years beyond the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield, particularly as to the query propounded by the gentleman from Alabama on the matter of providing domiciles?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. We provide dormitories for cadets at the Naval Academy and for cadets at the Military Academy—a permanent force—and why should we not provide proper accommodations for the clerical help of this District where they can not get accommodations in private homes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do we do that as a matter of duty or Government policy?

Mr. STAFFORD. I should place it on humanitarian grounds, because there are not adequate quarters. Civilians do not provide quarters which are sufficient to accommodate these people at a reasonable price.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is true for a fraction of Government employees, we should make adequate provision for housing all employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would not go to the extent the gentleman suggests, but we should not compel young girls to come into the District to do the necessary clerical work of the Government and not provide them with proper housing accommodations, which are not provided by private capital.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say the gentleman from Wisconsin has evidently been affected by the socialistic philosophy so prevalent in the State of Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not been infected, I will say, by the socialistic philosophy of the gentleman from New York with whom I have served so long. I have advocated this proposal years back. I remember when I advocated Sunday concerts out in Rock Creek Park and had the gibes of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Burleson, later Postmaster General, that it was socialistic.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So we discovered where we can save a little money for the Government. They have got a very complete laundry established in this Government hotel, and it was discovered they were charging all the way from $2 to $1.40 a dozen for laundering towels in the various departments. This one will launder at 57 cents a dozen and make a profit, so we will make an arrangement where we can get something out of the laundry business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But if we are going to be consistent I think we ought to do all the Government laundry.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, we do at least protect ourselves from the profiteer, and that is just what he is when he is charging $2 a dozen for laundering towels when it can be done at 57 cents a dozen at a profit.

Mr. LONDON. Does the maintenance of the hotel involve much of a loss to the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course, we are counting nothing upon the investment—nothing for a return upon the original amount appropriated—but it returned last year into the Treasury $86,000 as a profit.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is that amount above the necessary repairs?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: I notice this bill carries an appropriation of $340,000 for the Railway Labor Board. Is the gentleman going to say anything about the work they have been doing?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. The next item to which I wish to direct attention is the Aeronautic Advisory Commission. The amount appropriated is $270,000 for this activity, as against an estimate of the Budget for $247,000. To my mind this advisory commission is doing a wonderful work, not only for the United States but to the world, toward the development of flying machines and safety appliances. When I first had my attention called to this activity I thought it was one of those theoretical propositions that could not be of much practical use, but I have changed my opinion entirely. There is a prejudice against the board existing in those gentlemen who were engaged in the flying business of the Army and also the Navy. But they are now appealing to them in every instance for their advice and for their counsel. We are building at this time one of these lighter-than-air machines or balloons, at a cost of $2,000,000, that is entirely under the superintendence of this Aeronautic Advisory Commission. They have done much toward strengthening the machines to resist the peculiar conditions that they find in sailing through the air, air pockets, different currents, and so forth, and with reference to the different materials that may be used in order to keep these machines from breaking up. They are developing and have under practical operation at this time an engine that is going to use fuel oil instead of gas, not only as a matter of economy but also of safety. That has all been developed, if you please, by this commission. We therefore felt that we were well justified in increasing the appropriation in view of all that they have accomplished and the promise of what they may do in the immediate future.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman made any investigation as to whether their work duplicates in any way the experimental work carried on by the Army and the Navy?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. It does not duplicate the work. The fact is that both the Army and the Navy are appealing to them now and trusting to them to do this experimental work.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the War Department appropriation bill we appropriated for the current year $3,500,000 for experimental purposes in connection with aircraft.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The War Department is engaged in work very similar to that described by the gentleman. The Navy spends something like $5,000,000 for that purpose. To our subcommittee it seems like more or less duplication of the activities of the Army and the Navy. I rise to ascertain what special character of investigation or experimentation does this Aeronautical Board do. They are building a lighter-than-air craft at a cost of $2,000,000. The Army and the Navy are building several such craft.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that the gentlemen who appeared before us were specific in drawing the line of demarkation between their experimentation and that of the Army and the Navy. It is a matter too technical for me. Perhaps the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON] can give you some idea with reference to that.

Mr. WASON. He was a representative of the Army and Navy Advisory Board.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. They told us they did not duplicate or conflict at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. From my study I believe that instead of having 10 or 12 activities, each engaged in its special way, they should be consolidated, which would result in a saving of many millions of dollars.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I expect that is true.

The next item is the Railroad Labor Board. The Budget's recommendation is $235,000, and your committee allowed the amount recommended by the Budget. They wanted a very largely increased sum for their personnel, investigators, and so forth, and also a very large increased amount for printing. But we felt that under the present conditions and until there was some more definite policy than that which seems to have been established by the law creating this labor board they could get along with the $235,000 which we have recommended.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What did they propose to use this additional money for printing for? To print what?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They claimed that under the law they are required to print all the hearings and findings, and give circulation to them, and so forth.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then, in other words, in order to print the hearings and findings and conclusions on all of these little appeal cases that they seem to think they ought to sit and pass upon?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. We recommended that they curtail that, and I think they will be able to do it.

For the Smithsonian Institution, for printing and binding, we allowed $77,400, an increase of $17,400, and $44,000 for the ethnological investigation, an increase of $4,000 over the Budget estimate. In my opinion, there is not an institution under this Government that makes a dollar go further than does the Smithsonian Institution. They have got more high-class men, high-class investigators, working for less money in that institution than in any other institution in this country. We granted the $4,000 additional for the purpose of completing the development in unearthing the mounds that have been discovered in Colorado—the Mesa Verde.

Four of those have already been unearthed, and they have attracted the attention of the world and have increased visitations to that place from 25 in one year to more than 4,000. It is one of the most remarkable discoveries in this country, and the gentleman who is in charge says he will complete it with this $4,000, and so we granted it. The only way they have to disseminate information gathered by the Smithsonian Institution is through their printing item. The historical association connected with this institution gets out a report that would be entirely forbidden unless this increase were had. It contributes each year something of great historical value to the United States. We felt that we were justified in making these increases.

Now, the Tariff Commission for the current year has $375,000. In 1924 they are given by the Budgetry $680,000, and we adopted their recommendation. This is a very great increase over 1923, but it is made necessary, if you please, by reason of the tariff act that we passed a short time ago, requiring investigations not only throughout this country but throughout the world, especially for carrying out the flexibility clause of that act, whereby the tariff may be raised or lowered upon the recommendation of the President after investigation has been made and advice has been given by this commission, requiring, if you please, expert investigators to go here and there and yonder. They wanted a largely increased appropriation, bur we felt they could operate under this sum, and I am informed that the deficiency appropriation act appropriated a similar proportionate sum to carry out their activities until this appropriation bill becomes effective.

The Narcotic Control Board comes within the jurisdiction of this commission. This was another new creation under the operation of the State Department, the Treasury Department, and the Commerce Department, the purpose of which was to investigate the importation of narcotics into this country.

It is, under the law, placed under the direction of the Treasury Department. Under another subcommittee we have made an appropriation of $300,000 for additional service for the Treasury Department, in which should be included whatever of extra service may be required by this investigation. This is another attempt to establish a new, independent bureau within a bureau or outside of a bureau. The gentlemen who appeared before us felt that there should be $1,000 appropriated for additional services to the man having charge of it in the Treasury Department, and $500 for et ceteras. We came to the conclusion that it was another attempt to fasten upon the Government an independent establishment without warrant of authority, and that the only excuse for it was the authorization made for the operation of this narcotic board through the Treasury Department, and we refused the appropriation.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the General Accounting Office. Since our last appearance here all the auditing machinery of the Post Office Department has been transferred to the General Accounting Office. By reason of that combination it was found possible to reduce the number of employees by 40 and to save the Government $45,000 a year.

In examining this bill, you will find that there is a lump-sum appropriation of $345,000 that was not carried in the last bill, but it is the same amount that was carried in the Post Office appropriation bill. It is made necessary for this reason, that the employees under this appropriation are not full-time employees. They operate machines under the card system and are paid for the exact amount of time that they are occupied in the performance of the service. It would be a very great expense to put them upon a stated annual salary.

Under the original act creating this accounting office it was made a part of the duty of the general accounting officers to investigate and provide means for investigating the transportation companies of this country, the customhouse officers of this country, and the internal-revenue branch. It may be strange to you, but it is true that up to this time there has been no check upon either the receipts or the expenditures of any one of these three activities. It is a part of the contemplation of the law creating the General Accounting Office that they should be under the supervision of some responsible head. It is a herculean task. Heretofore the transportation companies of this country have received their pay and the audit has been made afterwards. Within the last year the Government has recovered nearly a half million dollars paid out within three or four years that never should have been paid out at all, and that would not have been paid out had there been a proper auditing of these bills before payment was made. It is a part of the policy of the General Accounting Office under the authority granted by the act to require that these audits shall be made in the first instance, thus saving the United States Government large sums of money each year, and in the instance I have referred to half a million dollars and the interest thereon during this period of time.

It is also the duty of the General Accounting Office to provide some means of auditing the receipts and disbursements of the customhouses of this country. That has never been done heretofore. It would require a very great additional force to do it if all the documents and certifications necessary to make this audit were sent here to Washington. In order to expedite matters and to save expense, a force is being organized to go to the places where these customhouses are.

In order to get men who are big enough and who have judgment and discretion enough to perform this duty properly it is necessary to pay them better salaries than those afforded under the former act. The general accounting officer has very generously given up nine of his men whom he was paying $2 000 a year in order to get the few more expert men required to do this extraordinary work devolving upon his office by reason of this law. So, in compliance with this request, being fully convinced of the necessity of it, we have rearranged his employees so as to allow him one officer at $3,600, one at $3,000, two at $2,750 each, three at $2,500 each, three at $2,250 each, and we have taken away from him nine at $2,000 each, so that the total additional cost of these experts amounts to a little more than $5,000 a year.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BOX. How many employees are there in the service of the General Accounting Office?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. About 1,500.

I wish now to call attention to the Fine Arts Commission. This is a small item. Not much significance could be attached to the amount of money involved, but a great deal of significance can be attached to it in its far-reaching effect upon the Treasury of the United States. Last year we reduced this appropriation from $10,000 to $6,000, because we were convinced from the testimony that the money was being wasted. The Budget has recommended $6,000 this year and we have allowed it, and we are glad to say that we have curtailed at least one expense that existed before—the traveling expense of the man who is the real Fine Arts Commission.

I wish to call your attention to something that this Fine Arts Commission has done, which some of the Members here present should remember. Perhaps by reason of the excitement of the war and other important matters it has escaped your memory. As a result the Treasury of the United States has been mulcted to the amount of $750,000.

In 1913 there was conceived the idea of a central power and heating plant for the Government buildings. That came from the Committee on Appropriations and from the splendid gentleman who at that time was the head of it, Mr. Fitzgerald.

We had and have now about 27 or 30 different buildings with 27 or 30 separate heating and power establishments. It was thought that this overhead might be combined into one general power plant. So in 1913 an appropriation was made for establishing a general central heating and power plant. It was to be located on Water Street at the foot of Fourteenth Street, down where the Southern Railroad bridge crosses the river. At that time there was an appropriation made of more than $1,000,000. This was supplemented in 1916 and 1917 until the aggregate appropriation for that purpose was $1,737,104. Immediately after it was determined to build this plant a propaganda was started all over this country by this man Moore and his then confederate, Colonel Hart, who was the secretary of the Fine Arts Commission, and who by virtue of his office was Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. This propaganda protested against the building of that power plant down there on Water Street at the foot of Fourteenth Street on the ground that it would mar the beauty of the city of Washington; that it would be an eyesore to those in the Capital, and especially an eyesore to those who would look upon it from the White House.

For the purpose of refuting this position they sent up a balloon 10 feet in diameter at a point where the smokestacks would come, against which they inveighed, and it was found that it was hardly discernible from the White House or the Treasury Building. But that did not suffice. They secured the cooperation by reason of form letters sent out to different societies, or to anybody who would send them in, who knew nothing about the situation, protesting against the building of this power plant.

Mr. McAdoo was Secretary of the Treasury at that time. The contract had been let to some substantial contractor in the city of New York, and while they delayed the work a considerable length of time, it was concluded that, notwithstanding the objections of Mr. Moore and Mr. Hart, to go on and build the plant so much needed. The purpose of building it was because it would make a great saving to the United States Government. It was to be built on the bank of the river adjacent to where the Baltimore & Ohio, Chesapeake & Ohio, and the Southern Railroad come across the river, where they would have the advantage of the cheapest freight rates not only by rail but by water, where they would have access to the river to supply their demands for water instead of taking it from the city mains.

The work went on; it was commenced in 1916 and it progressed until they built a tunnel that you could drive a horse and wagon through from the site of that heating plant to the extremity of the Treasury Building. All the time protests were coming in by Moore and his cohort against the establishment of this thing. The war broke out in 1917, after the completion of the tunnel from the plant to the Treasury Building, and directly after they had commenced building a lateral tunnel to the White House grounds, when Hart issued an edict by his autocratic authority that they should not enter the White House grounds because it might be the means whereby an enemy of the country could get in and blow up the White House.

The Treasurer of the United States, without authority except that assumed by him, suspended operations for a time, and after the suspension, thinking that, perhaps, those who were interested in the progress of the war had better combine their energies in other directions, made a proposal to the contractors to make a settlement, and they quit the job. They did that thing and we paid to them $736,556.12. They abandoned the job.

We have more than $60,000 of pipe laid in the tunnel. We have an expense of excavation of more than $350,000 and a total outlay amounting to $736,000, plus. There is to-day unexpended in the Treasury of the United States the balance of that appropriation amounting to more than $800,000, lying there for the benefit of nobody. Who did it? Moore? Moore, who is the Fine Arts Commission, through the cooperation of Hart. That is one thing that we have to pay for because of the aesthetic tastes of the Fine Arts Commission.

They located the monument to Lincoln in a swamp that has sunk and is sinking to-day and is requiring constant outlay of money. The trouble with the Fine Arts Commission is that there is not a man on it of any practical business sense. They think all they have to do is to comply with their own taste, no matter whether it is practical or impractical, and if impractical the responsibility falls on somebody else. I think it is pretty near time that this Congress should revise the organic law creating the Fine Arts Commission and, if there is to be one, put on somebody that has some practical sense. It has been the purpose of the Fine Arts Commission to destroy the suggestion of the Father of His Country with reference to the Botanic Garden. It was the purpose of Washington and L'Enfant that the Botanic Garden should be adjacent to this building. It was first established by the Columbian Institute near this building at the foot of the Capitol. It ran down to First Street, but it was afterwards established where it is now and it has been the labor of this man to destroy it, not to comply with the design of L'Enfant or with the original suggestion of Washington, but to please his fancy, and the amazing thing to me is that the Members of the Congress submit to that thing.

Congress passed a bill providing that the Meade Monument should be located at or near the corner of the intersection of Pennsylvania Avenue at Third Street. Did he locate it there? No. He located it just as near as possible in the center of the Botanic Garden in order to destroy it. He would have placed it in the center, except for the fact that it would come in contact with the sewer built over the Tiber River. The Tiber River runs down through there, and they are stopping the work because they have encroached on Tiber River. He located it there because it was in accord with the axis laid out for beautiful Washington. It would not be perceptible to a passing flying plane in the air had he located it where the law said that he should locate it. He has spread all over the country his propaganda by reason of societies which he has joined himself, by reason of magazine articles he has written, by reason of interviews published in every character of paper, and he proposes to buy Mount Hamilton at an outlay of $345,000. It would take ten times as much as that to blast the rock away to get place enough to stand erect. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is there carried in this bill any appropriation for the salary of this gentleman who is disseminating such propaganda?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we do not, and last year we put a provision in the bill that not one cent of it was to be paid for that gentleman to gallivant around the country on. He did not gallivant last year. He is here by reason of a subterfuge, and the only excuse he has for being here is by reason of a place provided for him in the Congressional Library where he is supposed to be a judge of ancient manuscripts. He does not know any more about ancient manuscripts than the devil does about Sunday. He professes to be all wise. He is an architect; he is an engineer; he is an archæologist; he is an ethnologist; and, I suspect, he is a hypnotist.

Mr. BRIGGS. Did not the gentleman describe him last year as a world traveler?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know how I described him last year. I know what I think about him this year. I now wish to call attention to something that is perhaps more important than this Fine Arts Commission man, but first I want to say another thing about this Fine Arts Commission. In the last Congress we appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of finding out where to locate a memorial bridge. Everyone, so far as I have been able to determine, except Mr. Moore, was in favor of the New York Avenue Bridge. Everybody connected with the commission, outside of the Fine Arts Commission, was in favor of it—the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of this House, and the engineer, the man who ought to know something about the cost and the practicability of locating it—but somehow this gentleman took a trip around with them, and they located it according to the plans of Mr. Moore, and they are going to end it, like a pig in a poke, against a stone wall over at Arlington.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I take it from the gentleman's discourse that he does not approve of the gentleman who occupies this position or of the policy that he follows in the conduct of his office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If he had any respect for himself he would not stay where he is a minute. That is the reason I do not like him.

Mr. BRIGGS. Why is it that his services are not dispensed with if he is so hopelessly inefficient?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, toads and snakes have been found in the most seeming inaccessible and indefinable places.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Who appoints this man?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The President.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can he not remove him?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman give the committee some information why the President does not remove him?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I wish I knew why he does not.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Was he not reappointed recently?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understand he was reappointed because of the fact that he wormed himself into the good graces of Elihu Root, of Chief Justice Taft, of Secretary of State Hughes, and 40 or 50 more. They did not know anything about him. If they had read the hearings had in the last Congress with reference to his peculations, and his malfeasance, they never would have recommended him, but they did, and he was appointed, and he has violated every confidence of the President of the United States.

I am breaking no confidence here when I say that some time ago they asked for a report from this man with reference to the location of the proposed memorial bridge, and instead of his giving it confidentially as he was expected to do, the very day that he sent it to those who should have it in confidence he published it in every newspaper in the city of Washington and sent copies of it to a number of Members of this Congress.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Was there any protest filed with the President about the gentleman by anybody against his reappointment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then he was in possession of these facts? I understood the gentleman to say that if he had read the hearings he would not have been reappointed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, I did not say that the President was not in possession of the facts. I said that these people who recommended him were not in possession of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He seems to be a rather influential toad.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is right. I want now to call attention to the Veterans' Bureau. The appropriation for that bureau is $62,000,000 less than was appropriated in 1922.

It is $82,000,000 less than was asked for in 1923. The appropriation for 1923 was $510,000,000, and for this year it is $428,150,723. In this reduction there will be found $5,078,937 in the personnel salaries. In the hospital service the reduction is $3,316,290, in vocational rehabilitation $3,757,000. The number of vocational employees are reduced from 6,000 to 3,500. The reduction of the other employees amounts to about 10 per cent.

The number of employees in the Arlington Building to-day is 4,684 against a peak of 17,000 during the war. The current operating expenses in 1922 amounted to $48,661,000 and in 1923, $58,891,000. In 1924 they amount to $49,984,000. There were authorized 140 suboffices under the Sweet bill. One hundred and twenty-six of these were established, and 14 regional offices. The appropriation for compensation claims in 1923 amounted to $163,000,000 and in 1924 we recommend $118,000,000. Vocational training has increased, compensation has decreased. During last year the number of vocational students was 90,000, and now it is 97,000. Sixty-five per cent of the vocational trainees are under their first engagement. One of the troubles about the vocational training was this: An ex-service man would apply for vocational training along a certain line. He would work at it for a while and then come to the conclusion that he was not fitted for it, or become dissatisfied with it. He would then apply for other vocational training and get it. There have been cases where they have gone even as far as three years and then changed. That can not happen any more because a man now must determine within a month or two months after he has made his choice whether he is going to stick to it or change to something else.

Number of hospitals under contract: One at Tupper Lake, N. Y.; one at Knoxville, Iowa; one at Gulfport, Miss.; one at Livermore, Calif. One more is to be built at Chelsea, N. Y. When these hospitals are completed they will furnish 21,400 additional beds. We have now 2,600 beds. When these are completed it will accommodate the peak, which is supposed to be 32,000, with 15 per cent vacancies recommended. We have tubercular patients to-day in the number of 10,500. The maximum estimate of those patients is 12,000. We have nervous disease patients amounting to 9,000. These 10 new hospitals, now under course of construction, when completed will require an additional 2,500 employees besides the additional doctors. We have now 117 dispensaries, and these are going to be increased to 126. The estimated cost per day per patient for our hospital patients is $5.41. Now, I wish to say a word with reference to Chillicothe. There are 4,800 acres of land in that tract. Ninety-eight per cent of that land is tillable and the rest of it is a kind of ground adapted to farm animals. The property is valued by the Government at from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. The cost, so far as the Veterans' Bureau is concerned, to the Government is but $50,000. We did this thing. These boys who are working on the farm and who are working in these various vocational establishments make things which are sold. They sometimes raise in excess of what is required from the farm, and whatever that excess is it is sold. Now, in order to have the psychological benefit it was thought best to place this surplus in this revolving fund. I am not in favor of the revolving fund as a rule, but there is no case where this would apply so far as the Veterans' Bureau is concerned except at Chillicothe, so we have made a provision permitting this profit to be turned back into the funds of the Treasury that properly apply, and at the end of the year that a detailed account be made to the Speaker of this House in order that hereafter, if it is continued, that whatever the amount may be it may be deducted from their general appropriations.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Has it been definitely decided that the Chelsea hospital will be completed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the information we have from the superintendent.

Mr. SNELL. Is that late information? I tried to get the information myself from the department several times in regard to the hospital, and at one time it was thought it would be completed and another time it was thought that it would not.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the information within the last week.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: It has been my experience that a good deal of the arrogance that the gentleman attributes to the Fine Arts Commission is present in connection with the Veterans' Bureau at the present time, and I think there is chance for improvement along that line right there. I want to know of the gentleman what he thinks about it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state that we put a limitation—under the act creating the Veterans' Bureau in the Sweet bill it was the contention of those in authority there they might use any money appropriated for any purpose and divert it to the purchase of sites and the building of buildings. We felt that was not the intention of Congress and thought that latitude should not be allowed, and in order that the Treasury might be protected and in order that the Veterans' Bureau itself might be protected against this possibility we put a limitation on this bill providing that no additional sites could be bought and no additional buildings bought without the authorization of Congress.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether or not he knows if the title to this Chilicothe camp has been transferred from the War Department to the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not know.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course we all understand that in a very few years the use of such a plant as this, so far as the war veterans are concerned, will be obsolete. Now, can the gentleman tell us whether there is any plan on foot to know if any of these will be turned back for the purpose of agriculture and farming when they are through with them as vocational training sites?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This property belongs to the Government, except a few buildings which have been handed over by the citizens themselves interested there. What the future purpose will be I do not know.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman tell us in this connection what the hospital program is; whether or not any of the hospitals under this appropriation made by Congress, out of the $35,000,000 fund, have been completed, and where?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have a very complete list of all that. Some are partially completed and others are completed. Here is another trouble. A lot of these hospital buildings, under what was called the White committee, were under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and they seemed to have had some desire rather to provide beds than equipment or care, and we have had to make available of this appropriation a thousand six hundred and more dollars for the purpose of completing what was supposed to be completed by the White commission. That is another situation that confronted us.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman put in the RECORD in his remarks the data that he says he has there in regard to the condition of the hospital program?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The best place to get it is from the hearings, which are very brief, and the gentleman can see it in greater detail than I could give it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, I want to call attention to the Shipping Board.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended half an hour. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the operation of the Shipping Board. We had some trouble here in considering this appropriation bill last year because of the appropriation provided for the Shipping Board. I am happy to say that our judgment at that time has been corroborated by action, and what was recommended at that time has resulted in a very great saving to the United States, and I think for the betterment of the operation of this great institution. You will remember that the loss entailed on the Shipping Board under the old régime was from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000 a month for operating expenses. That has been reduced to a little less than $4,000,000 a month, with the possibility of a still further reduction. There are some things, however, to which I wish to call attention. I wish especially to call attention of those who are taking any interest either in the establishment or the policy of the establishment of a merchant marine.

The Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation has under its direction and control 23 of the 550-foot ships. Every time one of these ships comes in now it requires an outlay of all the way from $25,000 to $30,000 for repairs, when it should cost not to exceed from $2,000 to $3,000. This is made possible by reason of the fact that they are not equipped for present-day duty. They have been converted and transformed three or four different times. They were made into troopships; then they were made into freight ships; then they were made into cattle ships; and then an attempt was made to reconvert them back into passenger ships. It will require, if these ships are to be operated and if we are to invite the patronage they deserve, at least $4,800,000 to reequip some five or six of them. The other ships, it is estimated, will require $6,000,000 to equip and to keep them in condition.

But here is the prediction that we gather from the testimony of those who are supposed to be familiar with the operation of ships: That unless we adopt and establish a policy for the American merchant marine, within six years it will cost the United States Government between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 for reconstruction of the passenger-carrying ships. We have to-day steel ships of all kinds, amounting in number to 1,399, with a dead-weight tonnage of 9,813,146 tons. We have wood and concrete ships in number 26, with a tonnage of 74,921 tons.

I am happy to state that they have made settlements with all the shipyards excepting Hog Island, the Skinner & Eddy plant, and the Alameda plant, the valuation of our interest in which amounts to $5,000,000. They have adjusted the street railway settlements except in one case and have received in such settlements $1,750,000. The housing properties are all disposed of except at Bath, Me.; Portsmouth, N. H.; and Gloucester, N. J., and in these settlements they have acquired a million dollars. The claims commission expired on December 31 because their work was completed. They established the principles upon which the settlements should be made, and the remainder of these settlements were merely a matter of accountancy where it was possible to make a settlement at all.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Where does all this money go to, as proceeds from the sales of these properties?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It goes into the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman just made a statement there, as I understood him, to the effect that the purposes for which the Claims Commission were authorized have been fulfilled.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; what I meant to say was——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Their labors are ended. I believe the gentleman put it that way.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Their labors are ended, and the evidence shows that something like $7,000,000 still remains unsettled against the Fleet Corporation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman tell us what the amount of these claims is? It would be more enlightening to give us the amount of the claims in order to know whether it was a good settlement or a bad one.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I was coming to that. On July 1, 1922, the claims pending were 1,246 in number, amounting to $135,653,000. On December 9, 1922, the claims unsettled were 274 in number, as against 1,246 on July 1.

The amount of the claims settled is $55,531,550. Seventy-eight per cent of all the claims, with an amount involved of $79,479,979, were settled for $18 019,742 in cash and kind, and of this $18,019,742 but $8,805,121 in cash was used. The other $9,214,060 was property that these people had in their hands, concerning which an adjustment was made, and they kept the property instead of receiving the cash; so that with $9,214,060 in property and $8,805,121 in cash they settled $79,479,979 worth of claims, and it is expected that the remaining claims may be settled for $12,000,000. So that practically out of the $50,000,000 that we appropriated a year ago for the purpose of settling these claims but $20,000,000 plus will actually be used, with this possible exception: There are claims involving the Pacific Mail carrying the mails involving $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. If they come out of this money it will be in addition to this $20,000,000; but on the last day of June, or on the first day of July of this year, there will be paid into the Treasury of the United States either $30,000,000 or $25,000,000, depending upon whether or not the Pacific Mail claims will be settled; and this additional $55,000,000 of claims will be settled for $12,000,000.

This demonstrates, if you please, the wisdom of the appropriation that we made. Now, I ask if there is a man here who can cite a single instance in all these claims that have been settled where he has heard or has reason to believe that too much money was paid? Not one.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say that that is a very strong reason why your Claims Commission should have been kept functioning until all these claims were wound up, because of the splendid work they have accomplished for the Government of the United States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will tell you why we could not keep them longer. This Claims Commission was composed of very high-class men, and it was splendid in them to come down here and give their time to this work and discharge these duties. Their purpose in coming here and the work they accomplished was to establish the principles and policies upon which the claims were to be settled, and after that was done it became merely a matter of accountancy. They have got that thing fixed so that there is no longer any reason for these men giving up their time or for the expenditure of money. Those claimants who are willing to settle can settle under the policy and principles adopted by this commission. They can furnish their own accountants as against the accountants upon the other side. There are a certain number of claimants who will not settle at all unless they can get what they want. All they would do would be to argue. Now, with that minimum number of claimants, who are very small, the Court of Claims is open to them; and I think one of the best things in this bill is the provision that upon the last day of June the unexpended balance of this $50,000,000 that we appropriated to settle these claims shall be covered back into the Treasury, because of the effect that it will have upon those claimants who are holding out trying to get something to which they are not entitled, who will come in and settle. If they do not, if they still are of the opinion that they are entitled to more than they would be entitled to under the principles adopted by the Claims Commission, then they can go into the Court of Claims, which, of course, is open to them.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state whether, in his opinion, it would be in order to offer an amendment to the portion of the bill dealing with these matters, limiting the time within which claims against the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation may be filed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it would be useless, for the reason that they must come in and have their claims settled before the last day of next June.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is true so far as this particular appropriation is concerned.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But it would not bar claims from being filed subsequently, or bar them from seeking subsequent appropriations for their settlement and insisting upon the Shipping Board or some commission acting upon them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only amendment I can conceive of that would be in order would be a limitation upon this appropriation. It could not apply to anything else.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I wondered whether it could be considered as a general limitation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not believe that would be germane.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. There is a bill pending to that effect, but it may not pass this session, and it is over four years now since the war closed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The provision which we have made in this bill, that this appropriation shall revert to the Treasury on the last day of June, is, in my judgment, a very wise one, and I believe that these claims will practically all be settled before the last day of June.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I notice that in this bill you make the usual appropriation for loss in operating expenses. During the discussion of the ship subsidy bill I understood that we were running behind at the present time $36 000,000 per year. Is it anticipated that next year the loss will be greater than that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; that was for six months. We are running behind a little less than $4,000,000 per month. It may run over or it may run under that. The best part of this year, though, is gone.

Mr. SNELL. Then that was a misunderstanding, was it, that we were running behind on a basis of $36,000,000 per year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. The fact of the business is that the deficiency last year was a little over $50,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It has been stated by the chairman of the Shipping Board that their deficiency would be less than $35,000 000, and their total loss for the first 11 months of the year 1922 was less than $31,000,000, which would be at the rate of less than $34,000,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I had understood.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is the fact.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You are simply considering one item of expense; that is with reference to the carrying of freight and passengers. If you will take the entire shortage you will find that it amounts to about $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. SNELL. I think $36 000,000 covers the entire loss.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am discussing the entire expense. The gentleman is right. It was stated by gentlemen on both sides during the debate on the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. SNELL. I so understood that it was stated several times that that was the amount.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I call your attention to the hearings, which will give in detail this whole matter.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The hearings show that for the first four months of this fiscal year—July, August, September, and October—the total losses, including losses of operation as well as administrative expenses, and so forth, amounted to $13,058,593.37, or just a little over $3,000,000 a month.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct, but that was during the best earning months.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That would be somewhere in the neighborhood of the amount suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. That was announced time and again before the House in the debate on the ship subsidy bill, that we are sustaining a loss of between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 a year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. During the five-minute debate we will get at the exact facts.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any prospect that in the future, if we continue operating as we are at present, that loss will be cut down to less than approximately $36,00,000 a year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there is every indication that it will increase, because these ships are growing older and it is going to take more to recondition them.

Mr. SNELL. And that the loss on account of operating will be still increasing?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We made 252 fewer voyages this year than we did last year, but the cost of operation was about the same. The reduction is due to the reduced amount of freight this year as compared to last year and the reduction in the amount received for carrying freight. Of course, the reduction in freight rates is because of the more active competition. While we made 252 less voyages this year than we did last year the loss is practically the same.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In this connection I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he agrees with the proposition of the chairman of the Shipping Board that the overhead expense with regard to operating 100 ships is as much as the overhead expense for operating 800 ships?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So far as office expenses are concerned, that is true. And this is the fact, that you can not take a ship and tie it up to a dock and abandon the ship. You must keep your quota of men there; and the cost of operating a ship while it is running as compared with the cost of operating the ship while lying still is practically the same, except the additional cost of the coal.

Now, it does not make much difference whether you are operating the ships or the ships are remaining idle as long as you have to have a certain number of ships that have to be manned and kept in service to sell or not to sell. That is the trouble. Here is the Government operating ships, and the Government must maintain certain courses. It has courses in all the seven seas. They are covered by lines of the Emergency Fleet Corporation; and whether they make a loss or not, in order that they may maintain the best interests of the country in the carrying trade they must make their accustomed trips. If the ship belonged to a private corporation they could regulate the trips in accordance with whether it would pay or not pay, but as long as the Government operates the ships it must keep the trips up with the expectancy of making the best they can for the interest of the Government. Suppose the Government stopped running the ships and abandoned all the lines, it would be the greatest calamity in the world, for when you tried to sell the ships you could not sell them because the good will is gone—the carrying trade has been diverted to some other line and lost to the Government. So in order that they may conserve and preserve the carrying trade that has been established for these Government-owned ships until such time as we can determine upon the policy of having a merchant marine or its abandonment there is only one thing to do, and that is to keep them going.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, the voyage losses constitute a small percentage of the loss. The estimate was only $5,400,000 for voyage losses, and as a matter of fact they have not run that much.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are enough, God knows. Now, I wish to say this in closing with reference to the Shipping Board: On June 30 it is estimated that there will be $100,000,000 in the Treasury from the Shipping Board. Twenty-five millions from the claims appropriations that we asked to be covered back and possibly it may be $30,000,000. Twenty-five millions for miscellaneous receipts and $50,000,000 for construction and loan funds. The Shipping Board shows a saving of $147,500 in overhead expenses last year. Of this item $10,000 is saved by dispensing with general counsel. Ten thousand dollars is saved in dispensing with the services of some experts, and $10,000 from the reduction of other employees.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In view of the fact that it is expected that all these claims will be adjusted and disposed of by June 30, does that estimate for next year constitute any reduction in the auditing force and attorneys?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; we have the word of those in control that on the 30th day of June, when these moneys are covered back into the Treasury of the United States, the whole accounting shebang will be discharged, and that that expense will be curtailed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to require them to cover the whole hundred million dollars back into the Treasury?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will be in the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will not be in any revolving fund?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. The only thing they have is $25,000,000 in claims.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman state whether they have a revolving fund and how much it amounts to?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have; yes. The United States Emergency Fleet Corporation is a private business being conducted by the Government. They must conduct it as a business concern would conduct it. They can not pay out every dollar they get into the United States Treasury and then ask for a warrant. Anybody can see that that is impracticable. If a ship puts into port for repairs which amounts to $3,000 or $4,000, they could not get the repairs done if they had to wait to go to the Treasury of the United States. They have to have a revolving fund on hand.

Mr. BLANTON. They should have an operating fund from Congress. But I want to call attention to the policy outlined by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Good, when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he said that they ought to come to Congress for every dollar they expend.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They do as far as the contracts are concerned, or major improvements are concerned.

Mr. CURRY. Before the gentleman leaves the floor will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. In going back to the tariff appropriation I notice that in the appropriation for the Tariff Commission the amount has been more than doubled. Six hundred and eighty thousand dollars for the ensuing year. Is the reason for that increase the provisions in the tariff law of sections 315, 316, 317, and 318, passed September 21, 1922; and does not the gentleman think that that is rather a large increase without the Tariff Commission intending to immediately settle business by their investigations?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In order that they may do the thing required by Congress they must begin to provide themselves with machinery and experts. This thing has happened: There has been filed with the commission more than 100 requests for lowering the tariff rates and in some few instances for increasing the tariff rates. It is problematical, but in the opinion of those in charge of the Tariff Commission we have not appropriated enough.

Mr. CURRY. The gentleman's answer gives me the information that I desire. The chairman of the commission told me there had been no formal protests filed. I do not know how they could file an informal protest.

I have known that what may be called informal protests have been filed against the tariff on lumber, on wheat, on potatoes, on onions, on beans, on citrus fruits, on citrate of lime, on grapes, on raisins, on walnuts and on almonds, on wool, and on a number of manufactured articles. I am willing to give the commission money to start organizing, but I do not think that commission should indirectly undo the work of Congress on the tariff bill. They ought to give that bill a chance to function for a year or a year and a half and have conditions in Europe settle and become normal before investigating and trying to act on information that is not as accurate and will not be as accurate as the information that Congress receives, because their information will be biased by the people appointed by them, who do not believe in a protective tariff. Does the gentleman not think that this increase is too much?

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Do I understand the gentleman from California to say that he thinks these investigators appointed by the Tariff Commission will not be in sympathy with a protective tariff?

Mr. CURRY. The Tariff Commission itself does not appoint these investigators. They come from the Civil Service Commission, and it is almost impossible for a man to pass a Civil Service Commission who believes in a protective tariff. They have to believe in a different policy of economics. The Tariff Commission is not responsible. They have to take the list that the Civil Service Commission sends them.

Mr. WASON. But they have a choice among the applicants.

Mr. CURRY. No choice at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], with his usual thoroughness, has explained very fully all of the various provisions of this bill, and it is not my purpose to discuss its many appropriations. The report shows that this bill carries $42,275,151.45 less than the appropriations which were made for the current fiscal year, but I think it proper to call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill does not carry $50,000,000 which was appropriated for the current year for the payment of claims, probably half of which, according to the gentleman from Indiana, will be turned back at the end of this fiscal year. The fact is that the appropriation bill for the current year carries $50,000,000 for the payment of claims against the Shipping Board which it was unnecessary, of course, to appropriate for the next fiscal year, because it is expected that all of those claims will be settled by the end of the fiscal year. So, as a matter of fact, eliminating the $50,000,000 for the payment of claims for the present fiscal year, this bill will carry more than $7,000,000 more than was appropriated for the present year, all of which shows that there is not that effort upon the part of the administrative branch of this Government to cut down expenses that the public has been led to believe.

We have been told that expenditures were being reduced, but I dare say that every appropriation bill which has been passed at this session of Congress, if you will analyze it, will be found to carry more money for next year for the ordinary current operations of the Government than a similar bill carries for the present fiscal year.

In other words, credit is being taken in all of these bills because expenses are less solely because we are further removed from the war, and many appropriations have been eliminated, because the operations have been closed. As a matter of course, appropriations for ordinary operations of the Government are larger. This in spite of the fact that we are driving into a big deficit every day. Gentlemen will remember that the President of the United States, in a statement issued the first of this fiscal year, stated that the deficit at the end of this fiscal year would be something like $657,000,000. Later on it was stated that it would be $273,000,000, in round numbers. It is now stated that we are going to possibly avoid a deficit. But how are we going to do it? Not by economies, as the country has been told, but by the sale of the capital assets of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury says that he will avoid the deficit by the sale of $400,000,000 worth of railroad securities and $100,000,000 of Federal farm-loan bonds, reducing the capital assets of the Government to that extent, of course. Gentlemen know what always happens to a man in private business when he uses his capital assets to pay his current expenses. Reductions are not being made as the country has been told. Assets left over from the war are being sacrificed to meet current expenses. This can not go on always. The cupboard will soon be bare and then taxes must be resorted to unless there is more practice and less preaching of economy.

We hear a great deal about the hang-over expenses of the war, we are told that we have to make big appropriations in order to take care of them, but we never hear anything about the hang-over assets that came from the war, assets amounting to billions of dollars in the way of surplus material, excess lands, securities, and other assets which are being sold for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that last October the Government issued $500,000,000 of 30-year 4¼ per cent bonds for the purpose of taking up current indebtedness, the first bonds that had been issued since the armistice was signed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is my recollection. Of course, it is very easy to avoid a deficit when you issue bonds for that purpose or when you sell your capital assets to take care of your current expenditures; but the complaint I make is that the statement is being made constantly to the country that this deficit is being avoided by economy and reduction of expenditures in the various departments of this Government, when, I repeat, if you take every appropriation bill that has been passed at this session of Congress you will find that when it comes to making appropriations for the ordinary operations of the Government they exceed for the year 1924 the appropriations made for the year 1923 for the same purposes. That is clearly evident here. Of course, as I have already explained, we do not have to make an appropriation of $50,000,000 next year to take care of claims, because those claims will have been settled at the end of this fiscal year. Yet this bill carries only $42,275,151.45 less than the appropriations for this year, which included the $50,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. In making these claims we are merely following the precedent of a very distinguished circus man named Barnum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the statement of the gentleman is well put and very timely. Now, gentlemen, there are only one or two of these appropriations to which I wish to refer briefly.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GARNER. In connection with the deficit, I believe the gentleman was one of the committee who framed the Budget law, and if he will recall the obligation was placed upon the President not only to tell the Congress the amount of the contemplated expenditures and how much the contemplated income would be under the present law when the Budget estimates were sent in, but it was his duty in case there was a deficit shown by the Budget to recommend to the Congress how it should be met. As I understand it, the Budget estimates showed a deficit of $273,000,000. I have that from the Treasury official, Mr. Gilbert, in a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee. I can not find anywhere in the Budget message a recommendation as to how this shall be met except the mere statement it will be met by economy. Well, if the President is going to avoid the obligation in reference to the $273,000,000 he could do so with the $600,000,000 just as easily and not comply with the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will find no explanation of how he will take care of the deficit in his message to Congress. In so far as I know the President never has complied in any message submitted to the Congress in reference to a deficit with the provision of the Budget law which requires him to tell the Congress how the needed money shall be raised, except to say that it will be taken care of by some indefinite and unexplained economies to be effected.

Mr. GARNER. And in the difference of 62 days, when he vetoed the bonus bill and when he sent in the Budget estimate, there seems to have been a difference of nearly $400,000,000 in the contemplated deficit.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And certainly that was not made up by economy during those 62 days.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. The Secretary of the Treasury, who I think it is proper to say is always frank and discusses these financial matters without reference to politics, tells the country and the Congress just how he is going to take care of that deficit; and it is not, as has been stated sometimes by Members——

Mr. GARNER. To issue emergency certificates.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is by selling railroad securities, Federal farm-loan bonds, part of the capital assets of the Government.

This bill carries an appropriation for the Housing Corporation of $125,000, in round numbers, less than the appropriations made for the current year. I do not hesitate to say I agree with much the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has said in reference to the maintenance of the Government hotel, at least for the time being, but I also agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that the hotel ought to accommodate as far as possible the civil-service employees of this Government. I understand there is a great waiting list down there. It is a most desirable place to live. It is about the cheapest place to live, considering the accommodations afforded, that can be found in the city of Washington. I think they furnish lodging, consisting of a separate room, and two meals per day at about $45 per month; and civil-service employees are very anxious to obtain accommodations there, but it is impossible to take them all in because of the want of rooms. With this appropriation as it has been cut, Mrs. Summers, who is the head of that hotel, says she will necessarily have to restrict the number of meals per day and she will not be able to furnish meals to all of those who are able to secure lodging in the hotel. Now, it is said that there are some who do not want their meals but who only desire lodging. I take it they are clerks to Members of the House and Senate rather than civil-service employees, because certainly those under the civil service can be regular and be there at meal time.

I am opposed so long as they have accommodations for only about 1,800 to the opening of that hotel to clerks of Members of the House and Senate so long as civil-service employees desire accommodations there, and I am opposed to the reduction of this appropriation by $125,000, which, it seems to me, is actuated largely by a desire to give clerks of the Senate and House Members an opportunity to go there and get their lodging. That hotel was erected for civil-service employees, not for clerks of Members of Congress, and I am in favor of giving the civil-service employees the preference. Now, if it were costing money to furnish those meals, if it appeared it was an expense, I would readily approve the action of the committee; but Mrs. Summers says the Government is making a profit from the meals furnished, therefore I am unable to understand why this appropriation should be cut $125,000, necessarily resulting in depriving 400 or 500 lodgers in the hotel from receiving meals in the hotel dining room. It seems to me if we are going to maintain that hotel dining room for the benefit of the employees of the Government we ought to make a sufficient appropriation to enable all of the roomers to receive their meals there, especially since the Government is making a profit upon the meals as well as upon the rooms. For that reason I think the committee should have allowed the $125,000.

I want to discuss for a little while the appropriation which is recommended for the Veterans' Bureau. The appropriation which is made for the Veterans' Bureau for next year amounts to $428,160,773, as compared with $418,063,843.45 last year. There is a reduction in some items, but it is significant that the personnel expenses, the salaries of the bureau, have increased. There has been no such economy as we have been led to believe in the Veterans' Bureau so far as salaries and administrative expenses are concerned. The report shows that the sum recommended by the bureau for the next year's salaries and expenses amounts to $49,984,063, whereas the appropriations for similar purposes in 1923 were only $34,970,974.65, or a difference of more than $15,000,000. Now, it is only fair to say that for 1923 a part of the salaries and expenses were paid out of a lump-sum appropriation for hospital expenses.

But the reports submitted by the bureau for the total of personal services in the Veterans' Bureau for the years 1922, 1923, and 1924 are as follows: In 1922 the total for personal salaries was $37,890,954.81, while in 1923 the total of personal salaries had climbed to $42,976,759.80, whereas in 1924 it is proposed to pay in total personal salaries $49,374,800, or an increase of nearly $7,000,000 over the current year.

There is not a Member of Congress who objects to appropriating every dollar that is necessary for the disabled soldiers. We are anxious to give them vocational training to the fullest extent possible. We want to give them all the hospitalization needed. We want to give them and their families the full compensation provided by law. But we do not wish to see the money appropriated for the disabled soldier unnecessarily consumed in the payment of salaries and in administrative expense.

I submit that there has not been that reduction and that economy in the administrative expenses of the bureau that there ought to have been, and I can see no justification for personal salaries for next year amounting to $7,000,000 in excess of the personal salaries for this year. And that is another evidence or another refutation of the claim that is being made over the country that economy is being practiced in the expenditures by the different bureaus of the Government.

Now, a question was asked of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] a few moments ago as to the hospitals recommended by the bureau. I do not recall now just when the appropriation of $18,500,000 was first made. That was placed under the Treasury Department. But I do recall that last April an appropriation of $17,000,000 was made, making the total appropriations for hospital construction granted since 1919 something like $54,000,000.

I think it was the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS] who asked the gentleman from Indiana how many hospitals had been completed under these appropriations. There have been several completed, but probably the greater number are uncompleted and some have not yet been started. Some of them, it is stated, have been 60 per cent completed; others more and others less. And so far as this $17,000,000 appropriated in April, 1922, is concerned, there are some contracts which have not yet been let, and the Director of the Veterans' Bureau states that it will be from a year to a year and a half before a number of those hospitals now under construction are completed and ready for occupancy.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. The hearings, on page 343, show the progress of construction under the $17,000,000 appropriation. I read:

Mr. WOOD. How many hospitals have you in course of construction?

Colonel FORBES. Under the appropriation of $17,000,000 carried in the last Langley bill we have one at Northampton, one at Tupper Lake, one at Knoxville, Iowa, one at Gulfport, Miss., one at Livermore, Calif., and one at Excelsior Springs, Mo. Under Public Act 84, which is a Treasury Department bill carrying $18,600,000, there is one more hospital that they have to build, which is at Chelsea, N. Y., and that will complete their program.

Mr. WOOD. Those are all that are in contemplation?

Colonel FORBES. They are all under construction.

Mr. WOOD. Is it expected after these are completed to build any more out of that appropriation?

Colonel FORBES. No; the appropriation is exhausted.

Mr. WOOD. With the completion of these hospitals, will you have sufficient hospital accommodations for all the requirements of your department?

Colonel FORBES. With the completion of the new structures under Public Act 84, which provides $18,600,000, and the last Langley bill, providing $17,000,000, we will have approximately 21,400 beds as the result of these combined appropriations.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, so far as the completion program is concerned. But the gentleman well knows that many of these hospitals under way, under the $17,000,000 appropriation, are not yet completed, and the Director of the Veterans' Bureau very frankly states that it will be 14 months before some of them are ready for occupancy.

We have heard a great deal about the necessity for hospitals. The necessity was great, and we were told when this appropriation was made in April, 1922, that the hospitals would be ready in nine months. Yet the nine months have passed, and some of the contracts have not yet been let, and others have been let only in the last two or three weeks. Somebody is deserving of criticism for the failure to get these hospitals under way and provide proper hospital accommodations for the disabled soldiers at the earliest date possible.

There is a limitation in this bill which will prohibit the Director of the Veterans' Bureau from using general funds for the purchase of hospitals, and I want to call your attention to the manner in which it was proposed to use these funds. I want to call your attention to the hearings as a justification to the committee for placing this limitation in the bill. I am going to read from the hearings on page 385. The chairman, who was examining the director, asked this question:

Then you must be contemplating the erection of other hospitals if you have recommendations to make. Tell us what the recommendations are.

The director had previously stated that under the broad authority of the general law he had the right to take funds appropriated for medical and hospital services and purchase hospitals without authority of Congress.

I read:

The CHAIRMAN. Then you must be contemplating the erection of other hospitals if you have recommendations to make. Tell us what the recommendations are.

Colonel FORBES. Dwight, Ill.

The CHAIRMAN. Where else?

Colonel FORBES. And probably one at Portland, Oreg.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other places?

Colonel FORBES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose do you need Dwight, Ill.?

Colonel FORBES. For general medical and surgical cases.

The CHAIRMAN. How many beds are there?
Colonel FORBES. Two hundred.
The CHAIRMAN. What do you contemplate paying for that hospital?
Colonel FORBES. Three hundred thousand dollars; that is the price.
The CHAIRMAN. What would it cost you to erect a building of that type?
Colonel FORBES. I have never seen this building, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Are you going to recommend it?
Colonel FORBES. I am.
The CHAIRMAN. Who has seen it?
Colonel FORBES. Our inspectors.
The CHAIRMAN. Do they recommend it?
Colonel FORBES. They do not.
The CHAIRMAN. Then why do you recommend it?
Colonel FORBES. I believe it to be a good thing to do, and we may be able to close another leased property in Chicago.
The CHAIRMAN. You mean you will be able to close up a place?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Tell us about this other building that you contemplate recommending.
Colonel FORBES. It is a hospital in Portland, Oreg., now leased by the Public Health Service and turned over to us, for which we pay a nominal rental of $3,000 a year. There are 150 beds there, and they offer to build a tuberculosis wing. At the present time, outside of the city of Portland, Oreg., there is a little wooden colony called the Pierce Sanitarium, where we have had some tuberculosis cases. The ordinances of the city do not permit of the treatment of tuberculosis within the city limits, but the council at one of its sessions passed an ordinance permitting the Government to treat tuberculosis. This is a brand new hospital, and the Government, I believe, spent $120,000 in completing it; this, however, long before my time, and the hospital owners agreed to build a tuberculosis unit and to turn the thing over to the Government for $675,000, which will give approximately 300 beds, completely equipped.
The CHAIRMAN. For how much?
Colonel FORBES. $675,000.
The CHAIRMAN. Is that a fireproof building?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Who has recommended that place?
Colonel FORBES. I have.
The CHAIRMAN. What about the medical board?
Colonel FORBES. They have not.
The CHAIRMAN. What do they say about it?
Colonel FORBES. They do not want it.
The CHAIRMAN. Have you seen it?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. If they do not want it, why do you want it?
Colonel FORBES. Because I know more about the requirements than they do.
The CHAIRMAN. Is the medical board the instrumentality through which the President gets the information upon which he bases his approval?
Colonel FORBES. Most of the time; yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. But not always?
Colonel FORBES. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. He appoints the medical board, does he not?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Why does he appoint them if it is not to approve or disapprove?
Colonel FORBES. They are to be advisers to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, as I understand.
The CHAIRMAN. And not to the President?
Colonel FORBES. I guess to the President as well.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other place that you have in mind where you want to erect a hospital?
Colonel FORBES. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You have not anything in contemplation at any other place?
Colonel FORBES. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Except those two?

COLFAX, IOWA, HOSPITAL.

Colonel FORBES. I would like to correct my statement. We are making an examination of the property at Colfax, Iowa.
The CHAIRMAN. That is where a building already stands?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. What kind of a building is it?
Colonel FORBES. It is only a semifireproof building.
The CHAIRMAN. How many patients are you taking care of there?
Colonel FORBES. Two hundred.
The CHAIRMAN. You propose to buy these buildings or to erect them out of moneys that are set apart for other purposes, do you not?
Colonel FORBES. Set apart for medical and hospital services.
Mr. WOOD. Before any purchase could be made under the language of the act to which you have referred, it would have to be approved by the President?
Colonel FORBES. Yes, sir; before we can do any construction work the President has to approve it. I discuss all these problems with the President and get his approval before I go ahead with any of them.
The CHAIRMAN. Then, according to that, there is no limit on the appropriations that may be used for hospital construction?
Colonel FORBES. There is no limit, Mr. Chairman, but we have exercised care and diligence in handling that appropriation.
The CHAIRMAN. That is pretty large authority to place in the hands of one person.
Mr. WOOD. Is the approval of the President given in writing or simply by direction?
Colonel FORBES. Sometimes in writing; usually in writing.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Did the director explain why they were keeping tuberculous patients in this small wooden hospital adjacent to Portland, Oreg., and paying for the support and treatment of those patients so much per day, when there are vacant beds in a regularly constructed veterans' hospital at Walla Walla, which was supposed to serve that territory?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not criticizing or discussing the necessity of a hospital at Portland, Oreg., but what I am criticizing is the director, who says that he is going to spend $300,000 on a hospital at Dwight, Ill., that he never saw and which his inspectors decline to recommend. He is undertaking to buy, at Portland, Oreg., a hospital that the board of medical advisers, by his own admission, told him and the President that they did not want and did not need.

Now, I think, under those circumstances there ought to be some limitation placed upon the director, and that when we appropriate over $48,000,000 for medical and hospital services to the soldiers it ought to be used for the best interest of the soldiers and not for the purpose of buying hospitals when the board of medical advisers appointed and constituted for that purpose advise against it. I think it is necessary to put a limitation of that kind in the bill. It is difficult to understand why the director proposes to buy an expensive hospital which he has not seen, when his inspectors, who have seen it, refuse to recommend it, or why he should propose to buy a much larger hospital in another locality which the board of medical advisers do not want and when there is a Government hospital near by which is ample and splendidly equipped for the soldier patients of that territory, unless it be that he is unable to resist the senatorial and congressional influence which he says is being constantly brought to bear on him. The money appropriated should be used for the soldiers and not for the purchase of useless and unnecessary hospitals.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will yield further, I am trying to find out why they do not occupy the hospital that has already been provided in that same territory.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I thought the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know why they do not do that.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am told by medical officers that there are vacant beds in as beautifully located and well equipped a hospital as there is to be found anywhere in the service in the United States. I am told that these wards are not fully occupied, whereas they pay for the care of tubercular veterans in a small, wooden hospital shack, as I understand, at Portland, in the same territory. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The hearings do not give any information in regard to that; but I take it from what the gentleman says that that was what caused the board of medical advisers to refuse to recommend the purchase of a hospital at Portland, and to state, as the director admits, that they did not need it for hospital purposes. Yet notwithstanding that the director tells the committee that he proposes to purchase a hospital at Portland, Oreg., for $675,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, is it not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations to state where these hospitals shall be erected?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The director claims that under the broad provisions of the act he has the authority to take the entire amount appropriated for medical and hospital purposes and use it for the purchase of hospitals.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is there no appeal from his decision?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He does it subject to the approval of the President, but, as a matter of fact, it is really left with the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. The limitation placed on this bill proposes to limit him in that respect. I think he ought to be limited, especially in view of his statement with reference to these hospitals.

Mr. ROACH. Do the hearings disclose where hospitals have been purchased and what has been paid for them up to the present time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. The gentleman will find all that information in the hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. Fifty-four million dollars has been appropriated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I stated a while ago that the total amount that had been appropriated since 1919 was something over $54,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to ask if adequate provision is made in this bill to take care of the salaries of the 78 lawyers of the Shipping Board who were arranged for at the beginning of the previous year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am satisfied that ample provision will be made out of the appropriation of $50,000,000. No one need worry about these high-priced attorneys not being taken care of. I am sorry to say to the gentleman that the hearings do not disclose or give any information with reference to the salaries of the attorneys.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was just looking through the hearings and was unable to find anything with reference to them, and I wondered if they were being paid their salaries, and what they were doing, and how they were getting along.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have an idea that the chairman of the Shipping Board is seeing to it that they are being properly cared for.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is sure that they are drawing their salaries, is he not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is much doubt about it. There is a general statement in here that there has been a reduction in the number of attorneys.

Mr. BLANTON. They have been reduced to 76.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am glad to have that information, because the hearings do not show what number has been cut off from the pay rolls.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. How many were let out?

Mr. BLANTON. Two.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman include in his remarks the statement to be found in the hearings showing the state of completion of the various hospitals and when they may be expected to be available?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall be glad to do that, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows, and, by way of explanation, it should be stated that the first Langley bill carrying $18,500,000 was passed in March, 1921, and the second carrying $17,000,000 was passed in April, 1922:

NOTE.—Future dates of opening where stated are in all instances approximate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In conclusion, I want to say that I had expected to discuss the appropriation made for the Shipping Board. I may do that when the bill is taken up for amendment. This bill carries an appropriation of $50,000,000, which the chairman of the Shipping Board estimated to be the amount of losses that would be incurred next year. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] made the statement a few moments ago that it was stated before their committee that the losses for last year were only about $35,000,000. That is borne out by the statement filed by the chairman of the Shipping Board himself, who states that for the four months of July, August, September, and October of this fiscal year the loss on operations was $10,861,080.13, and the total loss, which includes administration and all other expenses for those four months, amounted to $13,058,593.37, or something over $3,000,000 a month, rather than $4,000,000, the amount claimed by the chairman of the Shipping Board in support of his proposition to have $50,000,000 appropriated. So if you are going to take his own statement and make an appropriation necessary to take care of the losses of the Shipping Board for the next fiscal year, assuming his figures to be correct, $36,000,000 or $38,000,000, at the outside, would be sufficient.

I do not think I do the chairman of the Shipping Board an injustice when I say that he was interested in showing great losses, because in the hearings, over and over again, there is scarcely a page in which he does not present an argument in favor of the ship subsidy bill, and, of course, he was interested in showing as great a loss as possible, because the greater the loss the stronger the argument in favor of getting rid of these ships and passing the ship subsidy bill in the Senate; but his own figures do not bear him out in his statement that the losses of the Shipping Board during the last year were from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000 per month. I recall that Admiral Benson stated that the losses in 1921 had been cut down to something over $3,000,000 a month. The chairman of the Shipping Board repeatedly states that the losses were $11,000,000 to $16,000,000 a month.

Now, what are the facts shown by the figures filed and presented by him and printed in the hearings? In 1922 the receipts from the operation of the vessels amounted to $93,889,836.35. While the disbursements on account of the operation of vessels amounted to $114,271,576.20, the difference or loss growing out of direct operation of vessels was $20,790,339.94 for the entire fiscal year of 1922. That I may say includes $18,000,000 for repairs and alterations. Of course, the total expenses to the Government amounted to more, if you consider the cost of tying up the excess vessels, cost of disposing and taking care of the plants, the cost of maintaining the wooden vessels, which, in all fairness, should not be charged up to operations. But when you consider the actual loss on account of operations the figures show that for 1922 they were something over $20,000,000. The total losses, including all outside expenses which are not incident to the operation of the vessels on the high seas, amount to something over $78,000,000 for the entire year, or $6,500,000 a month, according to the table presented and printed in the hearings.

I submit that that does not square up with the statement of the chairman of the Shipping Board that we lost money up to this year at the rate of eleven to sixteen million dollars per month.

What do the hearings further show? For the first four months of the present year the receipts for the operation of vessels July to November 30 of this year amounted to $48,-

494,189.24, whereas the disbursements on account of operation of vessels were $44,760,909.53, or a profit, so far as these figures go, of nearly $4,000,000. Of course, I want to say again that I am aware that the administration of the Shipping Board is a loss to the Government, but I submit that it is not fair in the argument in favor of the ship subsidy bill to put the entire losses on the operation of the vessels. Because we all know that we have got one thousand three hundred and odd steel vessels now—I do not remember how many are in operation, but there are immense losses entailed in tying up vessels and maintaining them at various wharves and in other expenses not properly chargeable to operations, and yet those who have favored the ship subsidy have been quick to use these entire losses as showing that we are losing $50,000,000 and more per annum in the operation of vessels, whereas the facts do not justify any such contention. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN].

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very grateful to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] for his kindness and for the honor bestowed upon me by the privilege of diverting for a brief interval the attention of the House from the measure now being considered to one which has been referred to the Committee on the Library, and for which I am expecting favorable consideration. I call it to your attention at the present time in behalf of those who earnestly desire its passage at an early date on account of its merits. I have reference to House bill 13672.

The erection of monuments is a custom which dates back to remote ages. It is not transmitted from one generation to another but is the offspring of exalted sentiment and high ideals. They mark the resting place of those who have brought renown to their country upon the field of battle or have contributed to its prosperity and happiness in times of peace. But you will search the history of all ages in vain for the record of any people who have erected a monument to another race or to any class of that race dwelling among them to perpetuate the memory of qualities which entitle them to remembrance and gratitude.

The bill introduced in the House should find a responsive echo in the hearts of citizens of this great Republic. They are all Americans, whether they dwell in New England, in the far South, or on our Western plains.

The measure provides that the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to the Jefferson Davis Chapter, No. 1650, United Daughters of the Confederacy, for the erection, as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, Potomac Park, and the White House, of a monument in memory of the faithful colored mammies of the South [applause]:

Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Library Committee of Congress, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts; that the monument shall be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers; and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said monument.

Aside from its merits, its approval and indorsement by the United Daughters of the Confederacy demands its careful and favorable consideration. It was introduced at the request of the Jefferson Davis Chapter, No. 1650, United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The history of the United Daughters of the Confederacy is one resplendent with great deeds, many of them gilded with romantic luster which has cast its radiance throughout the world. This organization owes its origin and life to an association of Southern women beginning in the days of the War between the States for the purpose of caring for the wounded and, after the war was over, in providing cemeteries for the Confederate dead, many of whom slept upon the battle fields where they fell. When it was not possible to bring them home, they buried many of them at the same spot and erected a monument that the stranger might know he was treading on hallowed ground.

After the formation of the Confederate Veterans' Association many of these associations became known as Daughters of the Confederacy and later were organized as the United Daughters of the Confederacy. I have thought it not amiss to refer briefly to an organization, a chapter of which requests the passage of the bill.

During the days preceding the unfortunate War between the States was the era of Southern civilization, so often misrepresented and misunderstood. Whilst a period of many trials, it was an era of glory. It gave to the world such names as Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe as models for the emulation and example of the young men of the land. Later on the names of Robert E. Lee—by common consent one of the foremost commanders of the English-speaking race—Stonewall Jackson, whose achievements have lighted up with historic interest the beauties of the Shenandoah Valley, and others; it sent an army to the battle field which suffered the greatest percentage of loss known in modern warfare with a fortitude which challenged the admiration of brave men in every land from the rising to the setting sun; it furnished statesmen, scholars, and orators whose names have illumined the brightest pages of history.

The colored mammies of the South lived in and were a part of this civilization. No one, except the youth of that generation, can realize the mutual devotion of the colored mammies of the South and those whom they served. They were educated by their young mistresses, and their characters molded by them. The fidelity of these colored mammies has scarcely a parallel in history. The safety and comfort of "their children," as they called the boys and girls whom they nursed, gave them contentment and happiness. They watched them with tenderness and care, and sang them to sleep with their plantation songs. They could not be seduced from their love and loyalty by either promise of reward or threats of violence. Numerous instances of their fidelity are recorded in the traditions of the South.

Many a boy who followed the banners of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson dreamed happily as he rested at night upon the fields of northern Virginia, his face turned toward the stars, as the voice of his colored mammy came to him again with its lullaby, bringing happy visions of his home. When these boys enlisted in the War between the States their colored mammies accompanied them to the trains on which they departed and there gave them their blessings, and upon their return, many of them wounded and mangled, these faithful colored mammies remained with them to the end and assisted in the last rites of their burial. Their devotion was returned with genuine affection and love. No one in the homes where they dwelt treated them with disrespect, nor was anyone allowed to do so. The children when aggrieved by any wrong or fancied wrong, ran to them for redress. They had the confidence of all, and it was rarely betrayed. They desired no change in their condition of life. No class of any race of people in bondage could be found anywhere who lived more free from care and distress. The very few who are left look back to those days as the happy and golden hours of their lives.

The request contained in the bill should be granted and the monument be erected. Upon it let there be no inscription save these words:

In commemoration of the faithful colored mammies of the South.
By the Jefferson Davis Chapter, No. 1650,
United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The traveler, as he passes by, will recall that epoch of southern civilization, when men were brave and women gentle and true, whose history has ever been and ever will be an inspiration to the people of every land who honor fidelity and loyalty, whether an attribute of the great and mighty or the low and humble. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HICKS, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a clipping from the Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which contains the remarks of ex-Governor Patterson, of Tennessee, on the question which has just been so ably discussed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN]. Governor Patterson was once a member of this House, as was his father. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type the remarks of Governor Patterson on the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The remarks referred to are as follows:

DAY BY DAY WITH GOVERNOR PATTERSON.

"It is reported that a Washington chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy will erect a monument in the Capital City to the memory of the old-time southern mammy as soon as a proper site has been found.

"The idea seems to have been sponsored by the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, and it reflects credit upon all who have this in charge as showing that sentiment still abides somewhere in the land.

"There has never been anything in our history more worthy of preservation in song or story or in marble than the relationship between master and slave in the old South, that glorious land of romance and chivalry, as it existed before it was swept by the fires of war, and since then by the no less devastating plague of negro suffrage, which was fastened upon the South as an act of reprisal by the victorious North.

"Suffrage in time would have come to the Negro as a matter of justice, and I am not one to deny him that at any time, or for any reason, for justice is the right of all men. But at the time and under the circumstances infinite harm was done the Negro in causing useless antagonism and a blight fell upon the South, withering her hopes and blasting her great renown as the home of leaders and statesmen.

"From this she has never yet recovered, and is even yet almost a political exile, for no man living south of Mason and Dixon's line has been elected to the Presidency or Vice Presidency in more than 60 years of American history.

"One day this will be changed, and it will be when the South herself has the spirit and determination to do so.

"It is rather difficult for people in the North and even those of the present generation in the South to understand the tender feeling between the whites and blacks of another day. I will relate one instance in my own life, and there are many others which other southern men have experienced. My father was a Confederate soldier, the colonel of the Fifth Alabama Cavalry Regiment. He was 24 years of age when the Civil War began in 1861, and when he went from home to the service there accompanied him a slave, the property of my grandfather. His name was Reuben Patterson, and he was just six months younger than my father. For all the four years of the conflict Reuben was with my father, faithful as a star, sharing all the dangers of battle and meeting without a murmur every task or privation.

"After the surrender he returned with what was once his master, but then only his friend. For this friend Reuben worked with or without money as the case might be, and he never tired or faltered.

"A thousand times I have ridden on his broad back and laughed in childish glee.

"He was never out of humor with me; he told me marvelous tales and listened to all my childish complaints.

"No matter what I did it was all right with Reuben, and this was his attitude toward all the children, but I always thought he loved me just a little the best, for I was the only boy. My father has, several years ago, gone to his reward, but Reuben still survives.

"He lives in the old town of Florence, Ala., where our family lived for a time after the war.

"The light of Reuben's life is flickering low. He can not last much longer, and when he dies there is only one place he can go, and that is to heaven.

"I never heard Reuben say an unkind word or knew of his doing one mean thing.

"We children often taxed his patience, but his patience never failed. Our troubles and joys were his, and we trusted and loved him.

"When his spirit passes to the beyond I believe, and he believes, my father's spirit will meet his somewhere in the ghostly land and they will be happy together there.

"No purer heart or whiter soul than Reuben's has ever gone or will ever go to give the last account to God.

"There were other slaves and other black friends just as dear to others as Reuben was and is to me. They were faithful unto death.

"Can not we all be a little kinder and a little more just to a race that gave us our Reubens and mammies? Can not we help it a little more to right living and thinking, make the way a little smoother and a little easier for the black feet to tread in the long and toilsome road on which they are journeying?"

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House—

'Twas the week before Christmas, and all through this Hall,
The spirit of Santa Claus spoke to us all;
We listened with patience to speeches and facts,
And builded the Nation by congressional acts.
Then "the gentleman from Georgia" in innocence spoke
Of the perils of drinking—and the whole House awoke!
He plead for sobriety, the law, and the flag,
And called on officials no longer to "jag."
His plea? It was earnest and honest and true—
It just called for preaching—and practicing, too!
But the folks got excited—some papers went wild,
And called it the notion of dreamer and child!
And the "gentleman from Maryland"—Col. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Had nervous prostration—'twas a "scream" and a thrill!
He thinks it is "a-w-f-u-l" to say that men drink—
Just what do you reckon, and what do you think?
He fights for the honor of his colleagues so grand,
Yet argues for liquor all over the land!
Alas and alack! JOHN PHILIP "sees red"—
The word "prohibition" has gone to his head.

[Laughter.]

Gentlemen of the House, when I made that innocent and well-intentioned little speech, only 13 minutes long, I did not dream that it would carry its honest message in flaming headlines on the front page of nearly every great daily and country weekly in America, and that its reaction would be found even on every representative editorial page in the land. I find myself amazed, even yet, as I try to compass the real reason for this excitement. My mail from every section of the Union, in all its varying comment, is as fascinating as a novel [laughter], while the spirit of the press would nominate the maker of that "bone dry officials" speech all the way from "The Mad Mullah of Georgia Politics" and "Vice President of Russia," to the dispenser of common sense and old-fashioned honesty in ethics and morals, in politics and patriotism. While a few of these letters and editorials have been abusive—some of them laying their authors liable for sending profanity and obscene matter through the mails—I rejoice to record that the overwhelming sentiment has been not only favorable but enthusiastic in approval of my appeal to officials to "practice what they preach." [Applause.]

This reminds me of the experience of William J. Bryan, who said he was determined to make at least one speech in New York at which nobody could take offense, so he chose for his text: "Thou shalt not steal," and lo and behold, he woke up the next morning and found that nearly everybody in that gay old town was as "mad as fire" at what they termed his "impudent and meddlesome impersonal personalities." [Laughter.]

Sam Jones used to declare that he never liked to deal in personalities, he just "shot in the hole" and "the fellows who were hit came limping out declaring that they never had been in there." [Laughter.]

Very sure am I that no editor, no official, and no social or civic leader who has a "dry" reputation has come limping out of the hole into which I shot on that peaceful December afternoon. I have been especially pleased with the approving attitude of the vast majority of my colleagues. The truth is, there seems to have been only about one discordant note, and that has come from the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. Frequently, on the floor, while I was away with a sick family, and more frequently in the newspapers, he has been quoted as referring to my speech as a reflection on the honor and character of Senators and Congressmen, and has introduced a resolution calling me before the bar of this House to specify and amplify my charges. In all good humor, allow me to request the gentleman from Maryland to visualize the "dry" expanse of my tranquil physiognomy and my corporeal being—for I am here, without the action of committee or of Congress. But the thing that bothers me, may it please the court and gentlemen of the jury, is this: Why should Mr. HILL grow so strangely excited and so solicitous for the reputation of his colleagues?

First of all, I call this House to witness that I did not come here brandishing a tomahawk. I did not call for a wholesale scalping of my honored colleagues. The heart of what I did say was this:

Some of these governors—most of them, let us hope—are men of personal sobriety and positive character and patriotism, and most Congressmen and Senators, I am glad to believe, practice the prohibition which their votes profess; but there are enough who do not, to cast an ominous cloud on the official sky.

Everybody knows that this statement is absolutely true, and I refuse to back one inch from this declaration. [Applause.] But why should the tender-hearted and chivalric Mr. HILL take up the gauntlet in defense of the honor of this House when 434 other Members are tranquil and silent? Every man who has sense enough to be a Member of Congress has sense enough to know his own number; and his constituents likewise have his number. Practically every Member of this House has made a reputation which identifies him in the eyes of his constituents and his colleagues as belonging inside or outside the pale of my indictment. I am very sure that the people of the fifth district of Georgia—friend and foe alike, in the imperial city of Atlanta, which I have the honor to represent—did not think that their Congressman was included in that indictment. The truth is, gentlemen, the gentleman from Maryland is evidently anxious that his own constituents in "wet" Baltimore should never suspect him of being "dry." [Laughter and applause.]

AN AMAZING PARADOX.

But the amazing paradox of the position of the gentleman from Maryland is this: Why should he contend in his resolution and his statement to the press that my speech reflected upon the honor of the House in the premises? Why should he think that it hurts the good name of a Congressman to be under the influence of the liquor whose cause he so persistently, consistently, and insistently champions? Why on earth does he, in season and out of season, advocate the legalized sale of a poisoned stuff that has such a devilish influence on the character and reputation of his friends? Why, then, oh, why, has he constituted himself the "wet nurse" of this great legislative body? [Tumultuous laughter and applause.] I hope that even now he will repent, and before it is everlastingly too late. [Applause.] For I remind him and his "wet" comrades that their dreams of legalized national "wetness" are as futile and as fragile as the "baseless fabric of a vision." President Harding truly prophesies what everybody knows—that the eighteenth amendment will never be repealed. The very processes of constitutional repeal must stagger the dreams and stifle the hopes of every honest liquor man in America. [Applause.]

THE MOUNTAINEER AND HIS CLOCK.

Down in our Southern mountains there lived a quaint old pioneer of whom I heard a converted moonshiner tell. He carried to market an old-fashioned schooner wagon, full of mountain apples, and drove up in front of a furniture store. His attention was attracted to an old-time eight-day clock, about 8 feet high. Told by the merchant that one winding would last eight days, he grinned and said, "By granny, I'll just buy this clock if it don't cost too much, fer I'm always fergettin' to wind my little old clock at home. It sho' would be fine to have to wind a clock just once in eight days." The apples were swapped for the clock, and the neighbors came for miles around over the mountains to see the wonderful timepiece. But one night something got wrong with the insides of that pesky old clock, and it waked the old man up between midnight and day, striking to "beat the band." After he rubbed his eyes and began to count, the blooming thing struck one hundred and five times. In wild-eyed consternation Uncle Joshua shook his wife by the shoulder and said, "Malindy, old woman, wake up—git up! It's the latest I have ever known!" [Laughter.] And I declare to the gentleman from Maryland, the Governor of New York, the new Senator from New Jersey, and all who sympathize with their "wet" proclivities that it will be the latest that they have ever known—the latest that the world has ever known—when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution is repealed by legislative process. [Applause.]

The clock in the far-away tower of eternity will strike more than a hundred and five times—each time representing a full thousand years—before the eighteenth amendment is repealed. This sure prophecy is submitted not only to the gentleman from Maryland but to the genial Governor of New York, who took the oath to defend the Constitution of the United States at his recent inauguration and then in his next breath joined the nullifiers of the Constitution by calling on Congress to allow "beer and wine" under the Constitution that outlawed intoxicants of every kind. He led his legislature during his first term as governor to pass a 2.75 per cent beer act when our national law allows only one-half of 1 per cent. He knows Congress can not pass a law which the Constitution forbids. He knows, or ought to know, that beer would mean breweries and that breweries would mean saloons, and that breweries and saloons together would mean the revival and the reign of that political corruption and legalized debauchery which good citizens will not desire and brave citizens will not allow. [Applause.]

NEW YORK GOVERNOR SHUTS DOOR OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

And in the fullest fellowship with a sober Constitution and "a stainless flag," I serve notice now on the Governor of New York and all who train with him that he can not roll into the White House on a beer keg and a wine barrel, for the militant manhood and the emancipated womanhood of America will rise in the majesty of their might and smash every jug and break every bottle and roll every beer keg and every champagne barrel into the Atlantic Ocean. [Applause.] "If that be treason, make the most of it"—but the inauguration defiance of our national prohibition law shut the door of the White House forever in the face of the Governor of New York, or any other "wet" presidential aspirant. How much more like a governor and like a President it would have been if he had said in his inaugural speech, like the eloquent CANTRILL, of Kentucky, said here in this House when the Volstead law was in the making:

Gentlemen, I used to be on the other side, but this eighteenth amendment was passed by due governmental process, and as "a good sport," a good Democrat, and a good American I take my stand on the side of the good people who have put this law on the books, and pray God with them that the law will accomplish what they have hoped and prayed.

That is the spirit of every loyal American now who believes in common fairness and the triumph of our constitutional processes—"government of the people, by the people, and for the people." [Applause.]

RUNNING TO COVER—SIDE-STEPPING THE ISSUE.

It would be amusing if the question were not so serious to see men who are afraid to face the real issue run away and hide behind utterly irrelevant questions. Answering my demand that officials high and low take a new oath of allegiance to the whole Constitution with special emphasis on the eighteenth amendment, newspapers, individuals, and organizations have demanded that I "remove the beam from my own eye before trying to take the mote out of my brother's eye"; in other words, that I obey the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments before urging obedience to the eighteenth amendment.

First of all, as much as in me lies, I am obeying these amendments; but that was not the "question before the House." Evidence is wanting that there is a disturbing breach of these amendments. Thousands of negroes in Georgia—2,000 in my home city—registered in peace and voted without hindrance in the last presidential election. In practically all States the requirements for white and negro voters are the same; but even if there is a violation of these amendments here and there, that violation does not make a man shoot up the town or go home and beat his wife. That violation does not cause the shattering of homes and the physical debauchery of manhood and womanhood. The worst thing that can be said of that violation is the fact that it means, and only means, that the political affairs of that section are in the hands of the intelligent white people there, and will remain in their hands from now till the Judgment Day. [Applause.] And, then, I remind the Congress and the country that the President had not called a conference of governors to plan for a better enforcement of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments—he had called that conference to talk about the violation of the eighteenth amendment; and so I remind the New York World, the Springfield Union, the Chicago Tribune, and all other papers and organizations and individuals who are hiding behind irrelevant issues, that I was simply speaking on the subject before the House—"the Whole House," if you please, "on the state of the Union," and the whole house this time is composed of the American people. And I refuse to be sidetracked from the main issue, and that issue is a plea, yes, a citizen's demand that the officials who swear allegiance to the Constitution as a part of their oath of office, and the "higher ups" who write editorials and deliver pleasing platitudes about "the majesty of the law" shall begin at home and practice what they preach. [Applause.]

LET NEWSPAPERS "REPENT AND BE CONVERTED."

I have a debate—a sorrowful debate—and the Constitution of the United States has a righteous quarrel, with the leading newspapers of the land. Chiefly "wet" from the beginning, but seized with a temporary spasm of decent loyalty to the new-made law, they have rarely gone further than to say:

"Now that prohibition is the law, it ought to be enforced; but if it can not be enforced better than it is now, it ought to be repealed." Then they joke with pun and fun and try to bring the law into disrepute. What fatal folly in editorial leadership! What a falling down before a measureless responsibility! They know that Chief Justice Taft was right when he said that this law has not had a proper opportunity to function.

After America's long national debauch, three years is not time enough to sober up in face of the enormous stocks of liquor on hand when prohibition was enacted. These short-sighted opponents of prohibition want to repeal our law after three years because it has not been an ideal success, when they know that this law has been attacked by foreign influences without and betrayed by vicious enemies within—bombarded, submarined, and torpedoed every hour of every day and night by criminals who have neither conscience nor character—criminals who are seeking to fill their hellish purses by the defiance of every law of God and man and the insidious damnation of your children and mine. On which side will the newspapers and magazines stand—these supposed constructive builders of our social, economic, and governmental life? Will they continue to encourage the lawbreakers and liars who are despoiling our civilization? Or will they run up the black flag toward these devilish pirates against humanity and take their place beside the door of the home, the church, and the school as the real defenders of American youth—"the to-morrow of the Republic"? Talk about repeal—they might as well talk about repealing the Ten Commandments of God because, after thousands of years, they are broken every day. [Applause.]

Because of my plea that all public officials shall stop drinking liquor, the Baltimore Sun not only calls me "the Mad Mullah of Georgia politics" but mockingly suggests that I introduce the twentieth amendment to the Constitution, requiring all officials to take an oath of allegiance to the Anti-Saloon League." Citizens of America, it comes with poor grace for a paper like the Baltimore Sun, that threw its guardian arms around the dirty saloon, fighting for its legal retention and now praying—if it ever prays—for its legal return; the paper that opposed a concurrent prohibition law for Maryland, while standing unblushingly for race-track gambling and other forms of protected vice; I say, it comes with poor grace for such a "wet" sheet to attack a sober demand for sober officials by a sober Member of Congress, and then try to ridicule a great, unselfish, effective organization like the Anti-Saloon League, that came into being for the express purpose of putting the legalized saloon out of business, and that continues its activities to see to it that the legalized saloon and brewery shall stay out of business.

And the Washington Post—let us all smile—makes the editorial declaration that my proposition is "an absurdity." Let us see about that: The purpose of our Constitution and the laws to enforce it, is to prevent the use of beverage intoxicants. Is there anything absurd in carrying out the purpose of the Constitution of the United States? And, inasmuch as it is the high duty of the editor of a great paper to lead the community in its truest patriotism and its loftiest ideals, I ask, without apology, how any editor can call my plea for sober loyalty to the Constitution an absurdity who does not keep liquor on his own premises for bacchanalian purposes? When President Harding recently declared before this House that the lack of law enforcement on this question "is the most demoralizing factor in our public life," and when he further indicted the "destructive forces engaged in widespread violation, official corruption, and individual demoralization," he called for the personal obedience and the newspaper influence of the owner of the Washington Post, the Washington Herald, the Washington Times, the Washington Star, the Washington News, and every representative of every newspaper in the National Capital, just as much as he called for the obedience and the influence of the Billville Banner and the Podunk Paddle. If any of these editors take umbrage at my calling their names, let them come to me and apologize and I will gladly forgive them. If they will declare that they have done their personal and their editorial best in behalf of prohibition, I will crown them as heroic builders of our sober, Christian civilization; but if they have not, then I indict them as dangerous slackers in the mightiest moral battle our country has ever seen. [Applause.]

The newspapers of the country and all the friends of sobriety and good government have great reason to hold up the hands of the prohibition enforcement leaders. Commissioner Haynes, bringing to his stupendous task a reputation for unsullied integrity, has shown an amazing genius and energy in organization that has impressed business men and patriots everywhere, that he and his comrades in arms are going to put the thing over—grandly over! The story of his victories reads like a revised edition of the acts of the Apostles, with "Scottish Chiefs" and "Abrabian Nights" thrown in.

Hats off to the leaders for a sober citizenship! They are fighting to victory every day.

Let all newspapers join the march!

BLIND LEADERSHIP OF THE PRESS.

The estimate of the thoughtful public concerning the obligations of the press is found in the following letter from a prominent minister in Kansas:

HUMBOLDT, KANS., December 22, 1922.

Hon. WM. D. UPSHAW,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your fine, straightforward utterances before the House yesterday will be greatly appreciated by the friends of righteousness all over the land. Probably few will write to tell you so, but where one writes there will be thousands who will say with me, "Strength be to your arm, courage be to your heart, and power to your message."

You have hit the nail on the head. Now go after the great newspapers and magazines of the country which are continually making a joke of law violation. These two forces have had more to do with bringing reproach upon the country than any other two—the violation of the law in high places and the making of it a laughingstock by the press. The best of the country is with you.

Cordially,

ELBERT E. SATTERLEE.

The Columbia Sentinel, the paper of the late Senator Thomas E. Watson, enjoying a national circulation, and now edited by the brilliant former secretary of Senator Watson, Grover C. Edmonson, says:

UPSHAW'S advice to the men "higher up" is good sense, sound law, and wholesome honesty. If public officials themselves violate one of our laws, what right have they to jail the average man for committing the same sin?

DON MARQUIS SAYS REQUEST IS NOT IMPUDENT.

Of the many editorial comments concerning my proposition, none have been more striking than the unique one-column treatment given by the popular author and playwright, Don Marquis, in the New York Tribune. He declares that "there is nothing at all impudent in UPSHAW'S call for a show-down among Government officials." He says it is so well known that many high officials do drink that it is perfectly natural and proper for the fellows down in the ranks who are made to obey the law to ask the "higher ups," "Where did you get your liquor?" [Applause.]

It would be manifestly immodest for me to fill page after page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with the enthusiastic indorsements coming from all over America, but here is one from a great Texas lawyer now in New York that sounds a clarion note too forceful to be omitted:

THE TEXAS CO.,
New York, December 21, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. UPSHAW: I want you to know that I, in common with many thousands of other American citizens who believe in law enforcement, and especially members of the legal profession, whole-heartedly and unqualifiedly approve the statement which you gave to the public through the press yesterday. On November 26 Senator DAVID A. REED of Pennsylvania gave out a ringing statement to the press, depricating the disposition of many citizens, otherwise law-abiding, to lightly and with impunity disregard the prohibition statutes. The following day I wrote him in effect that I strongly believed that every good American citizen should insist on the strict enforcement of the prohibition statutes and decline to countenance their violation by drinking with their friends, and added:

"If a few thousand representative professional and business men of the Nation would adopt, and let it be known that they have adopted, this acid test, I am persuaded that their example would rapidly spread and give an impetus to the wholesome public sentiment demanding the enforcement of the law."

I am glad that you—a Member of the Congress—have appealed to the President, the Vice President, the members of the Cabinet, the governors of States, judges and others in high office, to set the example of reform by each beginning on himself. Most of my life I have been an antiprohibitionist. While never a heavy drinker, I was not, prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the passage of the Volstead Act, a teetotaler, but I believe it is the duty of every law-abiding and self-respecting citizen to set the example to others of respecting the law, and hence I decline liquors in any form.

Is it not feasible to follow up your interview with a nation-wide movement to secure individual pledges from prominent men not to drink strong liquor, socially or otherwise?

Of course, the principle for which you and I are contending applies equally to all law, including statutes affecting industry. I have in several papers which I have prepared sought to give emphasis to these views, and I take the liberty of inviting your particular attention to the marked passages on pages 11 and 12 of the inclosed copy of an address delivered by me last December before the second annual meeting of the American Petroleum Institute, dealing with "legitimate functions of trade associations." The greatest security for the protection of the rights of life and property is to instill in the minds of the masses of the people a wholesome respect for the law, and men possessing property should, as a measure of self-protection, if for no higher or better reason, set to the world an example of observing and supporting the law as long as it is the law, whether they believe in it or not.

Yours very truly, EDWIN B. PARKER.

Hon. W. D. UPSHAW,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

TROUBLE WITH FOREIGN SENTIMENT.

One letter from a good woman in the foreign section of a great city carries a tone of despair concerning the attitude of our foreign-born population. Inimical to the spirit of our institutions and opposed to all of our restrictive laws, they are constituting the greatest barrier to prohibition enforcement, especially in our great cities. One of the chiefest and sanest tasks of the Anti-Saloon League publications is to carry in their own language the message of sober Americanism to the foreign peoples among us.

This I know—that every alien who defies the flag that protects him just one time ought to be deported by the first ship that sails. [Applause.]

Down yonder in that beautiful and loyal "city of the plains," Abilene, Tex., where our vigilant colleague, THOMAS L. BLANTON, lives, I saw hanging still upon the door of the patriotic city clerk this warning of recent war times:

This is an American town. Don't criticize our President or our Government. If you don't like our country, go back to your own country; if you have no country, go to hell.

[Laughter and applause.]

Of course, we do not want anybody to go to hell, but if they are determined to go there anyhow by selling and drinking bootleg liquor, refusing to repent, and defying the laws of God and man, they would better go before they do any more to enlarge their own patch of hell in this country that ought to be the aggressive friend of sobriety and righteousness.

One of the worst indictments against liquor is the fact that it destroys all patriotism and all sense of personal and party loyalty. It will make a German, a Frenchman, an Italian, an Englishman, or an Irishman out of an American in three minutes if there is a barrel of booze or the boodle of booze just across the line. [Laughter.] It will turn a Republican into a Democrat—or, worse than that, it will turn a Democrat into a Republican [laughter] overnight if liquor can win thereby. [Applause.] One of the breeziest reactions from my recent bone-dry speech, which came from Plattsburg, N. Y., illustrates this very indictment. He says:

DEAR SIR: You have the right theory on prohibition. Here is an addition for you:

"Four and twenty Yankees,
Feeling mighty dry,
Took a trip to Canada
And bought a case of rye.
When the case was opened
The Yanks began to sing—
'To hell with the President!
God save the King!'"

Yours truly, B. L.

[Great laughter and applause.]

A MESSAGE TO FOREIGN EMBASSIES.

This is the spirit of countless men who want liquor and get it. They shift their allegiance from Uncle Sam to John Barleycorn and say, "To hell with all law that interferes with my personal liberty!" One problem that calls for delicate but firm treatment is the use and abuse of liquor shipments to some of our foreign embassies. An able man who was an attaché of our State Department for more than 30 years has written me in desperate seriousness on this question. He has seen the prohibition ideals of this prohibition country suffer terribly right here in the Nation's Capital because of the social exchange of intoxicants that "lead to bewilder and dazzle to blind." This prominent diplomatic observer believes that a polite, forceful note, such as our brilliant Secretary of State knows so well how to write, would cause a ready and universal response from all foreign embassies and legations, who would really rejoice, once they saw our position, to help the United States of America, the first great nation that has launched upon the greatest moral experiment of all time, to work out here at the heart of national and international influences that great plan for the redemption of humanity which is contemplated in the passage and ratification of the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution.

IS IT WRONG FOR THE CITIZEN TO DRINK?

Since honest men differ on this point, let me urge that one of the fundamental questions in this controversy is, "What legal right has any law-abiding citizen to drink intoxicating liquors as a beverage intoxicant under our national prohibtion policy?"

In the first place, in reaching a conclusion about this, it is well to keep in mind what is the purpose of these prohibition laws. It is not simply to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. There is no great harm, except the waste of good food material, in manufacturing intoxicating liquors. No one gets drunk simply because he transports or sells intoxicating liquors. The purpose of all of this prohibition legislation is to prevent the use of beverage intoxicants. The courts with practical unanimity have so held, and that long before the national prohibition amendment was adopted. In State v. Maine (20 L. R. A. 496) the court said:

It is common knowledge that it is the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage that is deemed hurtful and is the mischief sought to be prevented by the legislation.

The main object and purpose of all is the same * * * to promote temperance and prevent drunkenness. * * * The evil to be remedied is the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage * * * and the object of the law in this particular must not be lost sight of in its interpretation.

State v. Phillips, 67 So. 651:

The ultimate purpose and end of prohibition is to prevent the use of liquors as a beverage. This ultimate end is approached step by step, and when the preponderant and prevailing morality of the Nation believes that the public welfare demands the final step the way will be found to accomplish the end.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, 219 Fed. Rep. 794:

In trying to comprehend the legislative purpose in prohibition statutes it is important to remember that the ultimate end sought in prohibition legislation is not the prevention or restriction of the mere sale of intoxicants, but the prevention of their consumption as a beverage.

It is clear from these decisions, which might be multiplied from nearly every State in the Union, that when national prohibition was adopted as our policy of Government it was intended to prevent the use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. The only legal right that anyone has to use intoxicating liquor as a beverage must be set forth in the law, if such use is legal. The Constitution itself prohibits the manufacture, the sale, the transportation, the importation, and the exportation of beverage intoxicants. The national prohibition act prohibits these same acts and the possession of all beverage intoxicants in his bona fide residence at the time the law went into effect. This provision was inserted in the law largely for the reason that the Supreme Court at the time this legislation was pending had left in doubt the power of Congress to prohibit that which was lawfully in the possession of the holder when the legislation went into effect. Since that time the Supreme Court has made it clear that Congress has that power. The court has also held that such intoxicants in the possession of the home owner, in a private locker in a warehouse, could be transferred to his home for his own individual use.

In other words, the only person who can legally possess any beverage intoxicants is the one who had purchased it and possessed it actually or constructively in his home before the law went into effect. There is probably not one in a thousand homes in the United States that has any beverage intoxicants left in it that were lawfully purchased and possessed before the law went into effect. In the limited number of homes where they do have such intoxicants the amount is rapidly reaching the zero point.

MOST DRINKERS VIOLATE THE LAW.

It follows, therefore, that every person who drinks intoxicating liquor to-day except in his home or as a bona fide guest in a home of another is violating the law. No one can drink liquor without first possessing it; no one can possess beverage intoxicants without first buying them from either a bootlegger or a moonshiner except as above stated. In other words, every person who carries beverage intoxicants to his club, to his office, or transports such beverage intoxicants anywhere except under a permit from the Government is violating the law. So far as I am concerned personally I would gladly vote for a measure to prohibit the possession of intoxicating beverages, even though they were purchased and possessed in the home of the owner before the law went into effect. I can not believe that a good citizen, who puts the public welfare above his private thirst, will find it any great sacrifice to abolish from his own cellar that which the Constitution of the United States denounces as a menace to society.

My appeal, therefore, to that limited class that still have the legal right to possess the liquors which they purchased before the law went into effect is to be patriotic enough to refuse to use such liquors even though the law has not as yet prohibited their possession. My main point, however, is simply this—that no public official or private citizen has any legal right to transport beverage intoxicants anywhere or possess them except in his bona fide residence. The public official has a greater obligation resting upon him, if that is possible, than the private citizen. He takes his oath of office to support the Constitution "without reservation or purpose of evasion." He can not fulfill that oath of office and carry with him intoxicating beverages or possess them except under conditions which I have already named.

BAD EXAMPLE TO THE ANARCHIST.

There is another phase of this issue which ought to have its weight with us: How can any public official or private citizen insist upon others obeying laws relating to personal and property rights if they insist on disobeying a constitutional provision of the United States relating to beverage intoxicants? That official sets a bad example to the potential anarchist when he violates the prohibition law because of his thirst, and then expects the Bolshevist and anarchist to have a higher regard for property laws and other statutes relating to personal rights.

My appeal, therefore, to those few who have a limited amount of liquor in their possession legally, is to give it up for the public good. To that larger class who are using beverage intoxicants and possessing them in violation of law, I appeal to your loyalty to the Constitution and to the laws enacted pursuant thereto, to never purchase or possess one drop of intoxicating beverages as long as the eighteenth amendment remains in the Constitution.

This question is fundamental to the perpetuity of the Nation. If this law is to be broken because it interferes with our morbid thirst, then every other law on the statute books will be in jeopardy. I do not know how you may feel about it, but, as for me, I believe with William Tyler Page that "it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it from all enemies," and the greatest, most insidious enemy of our country is the conscienceless despoiler of our citizenship.

FURNISHING THE EVIDENCE.

I have naturally kept for the last that feature of my address which many were anxious to hear first—the evidence concerning official drinking. Let us keep the record straight. Those who heard my last speech will testify what the official record will show—that I made no threat that I would publish in Congress the names of known offenders. I did not draw a sword; I made an appeal. I tried to bring a Christmas evangel. Enterprising newspaper men naturally put in the same news story with my general charges the simultaneous arrest of a certain gilded bootlegger. They naturally imagined I would go after his list of customers. I did not have to go; I knew enough already to well-nigh break the heart of any man who loves to see public men walk in sobriety and righteousness before the youth of our land. I do not surrender one jot or one tittle of the melancholy facts in that Christmas appeal. While I have gloried in the high personnel of this Congress, and while I have rejoiced to pay tribute on countless platforms to the regnant manhood of the vast majority of my colleagues, I declare now what most of you know—what the gentleman from Maryland knows, if he has not been deaf and blind—that bootleggers ply their devilish trade among too many public men in Washington. These bright newspaper men in the press gallery laughed out loud when they grabbed my recent speech and sent it flashing over the wires, and they said to me, "Everybody knows you have told the truth. That is what gives value to your declaration."

I have seen with my own eyes some of the highest officials in Washington, not Members of either branch of Congress, lifting the devilish bottle to their lips. No "dry" official will stand up and declare an alibi, because his reputation does not make it necessary; and the drinking ones will not dare deny, for other eyes than mine were witnesses with me. And as for Members of this House, God knows I find no pleasure in this disclosure, but the bright daughter of one of the best men in Congress said to me: "We are with you. I wish you could stop liquor selling and drinking in this House Office Building." And here is a signed letter that says:

———, a professional bootlegger, told me a year ago "the House Office Building furnishes my best customers, and as long as those 'blankety-blanks' keep buying I am going to keep on selling." I have reported him several times, but they let him pay a fine, and he goes right back to bootlegging. He does nothing else.

I want to say, gentlemen, that any judge who will continue to license such a conscienceless vampire to suck the heart blood of any community is not fit to be judge of a coop of chickens. [Applause.] And the man, Congressman or other high official, who sneakingly helps that scoundrel to damn the youth of any country is unworthy to hold any office beneath the flag. [Applause.]

CONGRESS NOT A JUSTICE COURT.

Why do I not furnish their names to this House to-day? This House of Representatives is not a justice court—this Congress is not a police matinee. This is not the tribunal to act on these names and offenses. But I declare to you, here and now, that all the evidence that is put into my hands from this day will be promptly turned over to Federal and local officers; and with this evidence I will turn in the name of a high official—not a diplomat—who returned from abroad some time ago with more than a score of cases of foreign liquor marked "Diplomatic." God knows I do this with no desire to wound any living man.

The Supreme Court fortifies your supreme conscience and mine on this ethical, judicial, and patriotic point when Mr. Justice Gray declares:

It is the duty and the right not only of every peace officer of the United States but of every citizen to assist in prosecuting and in securing the punishment of any breach of the peace of the United States. It is the right as well as the duty of every citizen, when called upon by the proper officer, to act as part of the posse comitatus in upholding the laws of his country. It is likewise his right and his duty to communicate to the executive officers any information which he has of the commission of an offense against those laws; and such information given by a private citizen is a privileged and confidential communication, for which no action of libel or slander will lie, and the disclosure of which can not be compelled without the assent of the Government.

But my colleagues, friends and comrades of a sacred fellowship, and fathers, most of you, of sons and daughters who are to be your crown and joy or your voiceless despair, I summon you to the vigilant comradeship of helping to make Washington safe for our homes here and the homes of the Nation everywhere. I do this for the sake of making the most beautiful flag in all the world "a stainless flag" before the eyes of all the world. I do this for the sake of the Constitution which every one of us has sworn to obey and defend, remember, "without mental reservation or purpose of evasion." I do it for the sake of the ideals that must control your own children, who are dearer to you than the ruddy drops that gather in your hearts. I do this for the sake of my own little daughters and the homes they are to make some day, perhaps for some of your misguided sons. The mother of the Gracchi sounded a filial tribute that has inspired parents for all time when she said of her sturdy sons, "These are my jewels." I hold aloft this picture dream of my own girlies and declare "These are my jewels." And these are my reasons, my radiant, priceless reasons, for making no compromise before the angels of heaven or the demons of hell with the poisoned enemies of our homes, our churches, our schools, and our threatened civilization. And I speak the truth—I lie not; I would rather see these darlings of mine laid away together in one white coffin while their mother to-day prays from her sick bed for the message of their father to the leaders of America than to see them grow up to wed the weak and staggering sons from some Godless home that has been wrecked by the leadership of gilded, drinking officials.

God give us men—
Sober, sun-crowned men—
Who will inspire America's plastic youth
And lead toward heights sublime!

Finally, my colleagues, I preach no doctrine that I do not practice. Put a sleuthhound after my tracks from the birthday of my citizenship until this day, and if you find I have not practiced the thing for which I now plead, I will resign from Congress.

This proposition is not extreme—it is just straight. A man who is "tolerably" honest is not honest at all. He must simply be honest—that is all.

My position is sane; it is safe; it is unequivocal; it is incontestable! An official who takes an oath to stand by the Constitution ought to obey the law supporting that Constitution.

And the man who helps a bootlegger to trample the Constitution beneath his feet and defy the flag above his head ought to resign from Congress and every other position of official leadership beneath the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

God give us leadership everywhere that will inspire our children toward noble, God-fearing, sober lives! [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 419. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esperanza; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 420. An act for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 421. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2822. An act to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3244. An act to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3364. An act for the relief of W. O. Whipps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4137. An act to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. J. Res. 250. Joint resolution to donate to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution providing funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1016. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3668. An act for the relief of Gertrude Lustig; to the Committee on War Claims.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 966. An act for the relief of the Tacoma Tug & Barge Co.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service, for printing under the rule.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 10, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

902. A letter from the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, together with a copy of the report of the board of actuaries upon the operation of the act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service (H. Doc. No. 531); to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 3177. An act declaring a portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, Cook County, Ill., to be nonnavigable; without amendment (Rept. No. 1366). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 11869. A bill to authorize the sale of lands and plants not longer needed for Indian administrative or allotment purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1367). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURTNESS: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 13655. A bill to validate certain allotments of land made to Indians on the Lac Courte Oreille Indian Reservation in Wisconsin; without amendment (Rept. No. 1368). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13467) granting a pension to Richard A. Miller, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 13736) to increase pensions of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and of widows and former widows of such persons; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MacLAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 13737) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept as part of the naval base of the United States on the San Francisco Bay a site at Alameda, Calif., for naval-base purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 13738) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 13739) for the relief of the city of Astoria, Oreg.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 13740) to amend the revenue act of 1921; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 13741) granting a pension to Kate Caldwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13742) granting an increase of pension to James A. G. Cox; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13743) granting a pension to Agnes Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13744) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Harmon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13745) granting a pension to Lottie B. Reid; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H. R. 13746) for the relief of Nicholas Amoroso; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 13747) granting a pension to Alice Luth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 13748) for the relief of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H. R. 13749) for the relief of Ida M. Almstaedt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 13750) granting a pension to Joe Woods; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SANDLIN: A bill (H. R. 13751) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Parish, La.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 13752) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6782. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of New York County Lawyers' Association, urging the prompt exchange of sites by the commission and the city government as provided by a joint resolution of Congress; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

6783. By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Memorial from the Philadelphia Board of Trade, protesting against the passage of House bills 11763 and 13196; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

6784. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Interstate Conference for the Investigation of Vivisection, New York City, N. Y., approving House bill 12605 and protesting against the poison-gas experiments upon living animals undertaken by the Government; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6785. By Mr. LAYTON: Petition of 63 citizens of Pennsylvania, protesting against the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6786. By Mr. LEA of California: Petition of 40 residents of California, protesting against the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6787. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition signed by Mr. Newton Root and 26 others, residents of Kalamazoo, Mich., for the abolishment of discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6788. By Mr. YOUNG: Petition of Messrs. Geiser and Miller, Fredonia, N. Dak., and others, urging the passage of joint resolution now pending in Congress to extend immediate aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6789. Also, petition of J. H. Jenner and 35 others, residents of McIntosh and Logan Counties, N. Dak., requesting that emergency legislation be passed during the special session of Congress to stabilize the price of farm products, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6790. Also, petition of Mr. Aug. Noess and others, of Ellendale, N. Dak., urging the passage of joint resolution now pending in Congress to extend immediate aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 9, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 36——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Bayard	Hale	McLean	Smoot
Borah	Harreld	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Bursum	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	New	Sutherland
Cameron	Johnson	Nicholson	Townsend
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Underwood
Couzens	Kellogg	Pepper	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Keyes	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Ladd	Ransdell	Warren
Dial	La Follette	Reed, Mo.	Watson
Dillingham	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Fletcher	McCormick	Shortridge
George	McCumber	Simmons

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to state for the record that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from attendance upon the Senate owing to a death in his family. I ask that this statement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield for the purpose of getting before the Senate the amendment which I sent to the desk a moment ago?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 36, line 7, after the word "forests," insert:

> And the Secretary of Agriculture may hereafter, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated.

RURAL MARKETING AND CREDIT FACILITIES.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to address the Senate generally upon the pending bill, and in connection therewith to refer also to certain other bills, all of which have to do with agriculture and agricultural products.

The Agricultural Department appropriation bill contains very many provisions which are intended for the benefit of the agricultural situation. There has been reported into the Senate a few days ago the Capper bill. That, for the most part, related, as it was introduced—and I have not read it since it was reported back to the Senate—to the stock-raising industry. Then the Lenroot bill, I am informed, which has to do with agricultural credits, will soon be brought before the Senate. Then the Norris amendment to the shipping bill is before us under a unanimous-consent agreement at all times whenever the shipping bill is brought forward. Then we have the Bursum bill, which proposes to loan to Germany not to exceed $1,000,000,000, the proceeds of which are to be used in the purchase of American farm products.

And so, Mr. President, with ever-increasing gravity the agricultural problem is forced upon the attention of Congress. Even prior to the World War there had grown up such a disparity of earning power between the rural and urban populations of the country that Congress had begun to give special assistance to the farming public. The principal complaint at that time was the high rate of interest imposed on both farm and chattel mortgage loans. Our first effort, therefore, was to assure to the farmer a lower rate of interest. To that end we organized the rural credits banks, a system somewhat bulky and top-heavy, but which has been of considerable advantage to the few who could borrow through this agency. These banks, unable to meet the demands upon them, the Government came to their assistance and appropriated money by the hundreds of millions to increase their ability to meet the situation.

During the war and for a year thereafter the Government guaranteed a minimum price for wheat. Following this the Government, through the War Finance Board, buoyed up prices by furnishing funds to market the farmer's product abroad, to cash the I. O. U. of the foreign governments for the farmer's benefit; and we are still waiting for the cash to be returned by such foreign governments.

So the farmer has no right to complain of any lack of governmental activity or interest in his behalf. Outside of actually purchasing the farmer's crop at a fair profit to the farmer, the Government has done all it could do along the line indicated to assist agriculture. Still the demand persists for further aid. And so to-day we have before us divers bills, some dangerously paternalistic, to assist agriculture.

Mr. President, we are met at the outset with this situation: Either the Government must go into the business of price fixing of the farmer's products all along the line, creating a precedent for the price fixing of every commodity in the country, or it must find some other way to assist the farmer in securing a just reward for his labors. There is no use of our attempting to evade or side-step the real question that confronts us. The farmers generally, and especially in those States where they raise only cereals, are not asking for further credits. They freely admit that they have borrowed again and again until their borrowings are as much as their property can possibly support. So almost with one voice they are saying: "We do not want to increase our indebtedness. Borrowing from one kind of bank to pay another is not reducing our debts one cent. Our creditors are willing to give us any extension if we can give any reasonable assurance of our ability to pay in the future." In my State they say: "This year we raised a good crop after three years of almost total failures in some sections. But after putting in our own year's labor and that of our whole family without compensation, and after paying for the extra help needed in harvesting and threshing, there is not sufficient left from the proceeds of our crop to pay the taxes for the year 1922 on the lands on which such crops were raised. What we do want is a price for our product that will enable us to pay for raising it and have something to apply upon our debts. We, therefore, want the Government to purchase what crop we have on hand this year, paying $2 per bushel for wheat, and to guarantee $2 per bushel for what we can raise next year."

And, strange as it may seem, some of the banks of the State which have so lustily damned the farmers for their paternalistic and socialistic government operation theories, when they begin to feel the pinch as the farmers feel it, are shouting louder than are the farmers themselves for Federal fixing of grain prices.

In my humble opinion, none of the bills reported will of themselves bring about what the farmer, the cereal raiser, is demanding. If we are to give the relief which is actually needed we will necessarily have to comply with the demand for price fixing in time of peace. When I look down the vista of the future and contemplate the result of such a paternalistic step, I confess I stand appalled. Once establish the precedent, I can see no limit to its application. First paternalism, then socialism, and well may we thereafter write Byron's doleful tale—> * * * barbarism at last,

> And History, with all her volumes vast,
> Hath but one page.

Have we exhausted every means to promote the welfare of the grain producer of the country without responding to this demand for price fixing? I repeat, the bills before Congress are but makeshifts. They do not meet the demand of the grain raiser.

Congress naturally balks at the proposition of taxing all of the people to bolster up the price of a commodity produced by one class. The argument is made, and it is a very strong one, that when the Government starts guaranteeing the price of one commodity for one class there is no stopping place. The system will gradually but surely be extended to cover other classes until all industries, including those in process of hatching, must come under governmental wings.

For instance, our farmers raise wheat, oats, rye, barley, and flax. One farmer may raise only rye. We should not be helping him by guaranteeing the price of wheat or oats. In many instances he has already seeded for next year's crop of rye. All of these cereals are now selling at desperately low prices. We must, therefore, fix the price for rye, barley, and oats as well as wheat. When we have done this then many lines of industry whose mills have been idle since the war will want a living price fixed that will start their wheels moving. Then will come the coal miners and they will say, "Only one-third of our men are at work and we want the Government to support the other two-thirds who are idle." Where is the stopping place if we once enter upon a program of price fixing in time of peace? It is not strange that statesmen stand appalled at the consequences of embarking upon such a policy.

Great Britain has entered on the suicidal policy of supporting the unemployed. What has happened? Labor unions have made the wage scale so high that they have killed many of the industries of that Empire. The Britisher can not produce at a cost that will allow him an opportunity to compete with other countries. The first result of this policy is closed mills and idle labor. The second result is that $500,000,000 a year is paid by the taxpayers of Great Britain to support the unemployed. The third result is that taxes have become so heavy that the very source of taxation itself is being undermined or entirely destroyed. If the policy is continued, it can easily be guessed what the end will be—national bankruptcy.

For my part, I would deem it a safer policy for the Government to give directly than to embark upon an indirect charity giving. We have given mighty sums of money to Russia, which is responsible for its own demoralization and consequent starvation. Can we not do likewise for the people of this country who are not responsible for the depressed price of their cereals? And, above all, can we not do so when we know that Congress itself, the Government itself, is to a very great extent, by its policy of interference in private business, responsible for the great disparity between what the farmer receives for his product and what he has to pay for the products of others? The Congress is responsible for the excessive freight rates the farmers must pay. Through a policy which it has followed for the last quarter of a century it is responsible for the high cost of living throughout the country.

When you answer the farmers' request that you guarantee the price of his wheat you say that it is not a function of Government to fix the price of any commodity. But he can immediately and most truthfully reply, "You have done that very thing. You have fixed and guaranteed a minimum wage scale on every railroad in the country. Not only that but you have saddled on me the main cost of fixing the minimum price for the commodity of this other class. You by a direct law fixed the wage of everyone connected with the handling and transportation of my grain. You then permitted freight rates on my grain to be doubled to meet that cost. You not only encouraged this but you absolutely brought about this result by direct class legislation. Then you created boards to fix wages in transportation and coal mining and other great industries, and those boards have increased the wages and the profits, or at least the charges, until the price for coal has doubled, and our people are freezing for want of it. Having brought our discomfiture by your policy of price fixing for all other classes, having by your boards for the settlement of disputes advanced wages and then prices without any consideration for the public, which must pay the bills, you have doubled and trebled the price of everything which we must purchase, and now you force us in self-defense to ask you that you fix a living price for our commodity that we may be able to purchase the ordinary necessities of life which have been so greatly enhanced by your own price-fixing activities."

Mr. President, there is no legitimate answer to these accusations. The Adamson law was iniquitous, both in relation to the political purposes which begot it and in its dire consequences. There is a far greater moral duty to fix a living wage for these farmers who are bankrupt than there was to step in and fix a wage for railway employees who were then receiving fair wages.

I admit that we have the power under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution to control the wage scale of those employed in interstate commerce. But the framers of our Constitution never dreamed of such a reckless and unprecedented use of the power given. From time immemorial Governments have exercised a control over quasi public utilities and corporations but for the one single purpose, that of protecting the public against unjust and exorbitant rates. Who, therefore, ever dreamed in 1783 that this power would be invoked, not to prevent excessive charges, but to increase the charges to the public—to force excessive charges? Therefore, so far as the farmer is concerned, he has precedent on his side for price fixing, and he has justice on his side because he has been made the victim of previous price fixing.

I come now to the consideration of two bills. One is to fix the farmers' borrowing capacity. That may help him slightly. It will not help him any in my State, because he has gone to the limit of his credit.

The other is to induct the Government into the business of buying and selling the products of the country. That is socialistic, pure and simple. But assuming that the very critical situation of the farmers in North Dakota and eastern Montana would justify the adoption of this most dangerous precedent, we are met with the question: How is the farmer to be benefited? You create a corporation; you take the taxpayers' money and put a hundred million dollars of it into the hands of this corporation, and you say, "Go ahead, buy and build and operate elevators and warehouses. There is no limit to the price you may pay." And, of course, the commission will feel it must go ahead, no matter to what extent it is being held up, no matter though it must pay $24 per day for bricklayers and plasterers, and build or buy elevators and warehouses.

Mr. President, you would better, a thousand times better, purchase the farmer's product outright, selecting those products whose prices are the lowest or their purchasing power the lowest, and give the farmer a living price for them; then sell the same goods for what they may bring in the open markets and charge the difference to loss; for, as surely as the sun shall rise to-morrow, if we start the Government into the business of buying or building elevators and warehouses and buying and selling the farmer's products, we will lose in a very few years many times this difference.

But let us follow the bill. Suppose you have bought sufficient storage capacity. What are you then to do? You are to buy the farmer's product. You are not limited to wheat, oats, barley, and other cereals which are excessively low in price, but you are to buy anything the farmer produces, and then you are to sell it. To whom are you to sell it? To the same people that the private elevators are selling it to. At what price are you to sell it? There may be two answers to this question. One is, for what the product will bring in the open market. The other is that you propose that this commission will buy enough of the grain to corner the market. Now, if that is your purpose, why not say so honestly and fairly? I think even the author of the bill would probably deny that. We have passed many laws to prevent combinations to fix prices, and the author has always voted for them and for the most stringent of them. Does he propose now that the Government shall on its part practice what is declared to be criminal if practiced by an individual or any set of individuals? If that is the purpose of the bill, then it ought to be amended, and either a definite price fixed for the grain to be sold, or the cotton, or the cattle, the milk or dairy products, or eggs, or else it ought to fix some standard of value, such, for instance, as will allow the producer to reap a reasonable profit.

The only excuse on earth, in my opinion, for putting the Government into the business of buying and selling is to increase the price. I know it is stated in the bill that there is an unjust spread between what the farmer receives and what the public pays. I know of nothing, however, that is sold upon so close a margin as grain to the miller; nor do I know of any commodity that is sold on so close a margin as flour to the wholesale trade. The excessive charges paid by the consumer are mostly attached after the product has left the miller's hands and up to the time that it is served on the American table.

But the bill itself negatives the idea of paying a price for the products above the price fixed by the law of supply and demand. It presumes that a profit will be made by the Government, because it provides for the application of those profits toward the wiping out of the original stock issued to the Government. Now, if that is all it is to do, this result will follow: Grain will have to be purchased at such price as the law of supply and demand justifies; it will have to be sold on the same basis; and you know and I know that the cost of operation by the Government will be probably at least twice what the cost of operation would be by private individuals. Therefore the Government, if it follows this rule, not only will not raise to any material extent the price of the farmer's grain above what the law of supply and demand will assure him, but in addition to that the taxpayers of the country will pay hundreds of millions of dollars annually to meet the excessive expense of this gigantic governmental agency.

We have seen the Government operate railroads; we have seen the cost of transportation doubled; and yet the Government was unable to operate at anything but an enormous loss, even with these doubled rates. We have seen the same result in the operation of the telegraph and telephones. We have had some experience with the Government buying and selling wheat; but that experience was certainly most detrimental to the farmer, who under the law of supply and demand would have received about twice as much for his wheat as the Government paid.

Mr. President, my own stricken State has had some experience in State operation of business, in attempting to conduct industries which since the beginning of the world's history have been conducted by private individuals, by men who had no taxing power behind them to meet losses incurred through extravagance or inefficiency, by men whose very livelihood and whose success depended upon their putting into the equation the greatest possible energy and industry, the greatest possible degree of intelligence, study, and perseverance. Our experience is but a repetition of the experience of every previous governmental attempt at conducting business or industry, those fields of opportunity which I maintain belong of right and exclusively to the people, to the end that individuality and human progress, which is dependent upon it, shall not be halted in their onward march. An industrial world, with its human possibilities, where the star of individuality, hope, and aspiration never sets, and where the penalty of sloth, indifference, or inefficiency is never remanded, is just as necessary for the growth of intellectuality and genius as the free air of heaven to life itself.

It may be, Mr. President, that in a small or unimportant municipality or where the microbes of graft, extravagance, and political influence have not yet stricken the body corporate, government operation may not have resulted in any great evil further than that of driving the citizen from one employment into another which may already be overcrowded. Still, it would be far better that the Government should restrict itself to its function of making and enforcing laws to govern the transactions in all kinds of business than to attempt to operate those businesses itself.

I shall not, Mr. President, attempt either to condemn or to excuse anyone connected with our State affairs—our operation of private enterprises by the State itself. I can only speak of the result. The main, the important, result of State operation is that while the taxes on farm lands have increased from 300 to 400 per cent above normal the product with which the farmers must pay those taxes is far below normal.

So in this bill I see every danger of Government operation—inefficiency, extravagance, and enormous ultimate losses to be met by heavy additional taxes—and at the same time I can see no material benefit to the farmer himself.

With a bankrupt and devastated Europe unable to purchase our surplus, that surplus drives all buoyancy out of the heart of trade. I, however, look forward to much better prices this year, because I know that the present depressed price will result in diminished acreage sown to wheat, at least, and a probable diminution of our surplus. I look forward also to the settlement of the German reparations, to the repudiation of her paper marks, and the reinstatement of a stable currency. This settlement will increase her ability to purchase, will help other countries in their trade with her, and thereby increase the ability of all to purchase our food products.

In the meantime, Mr. President—and here I come to a crucial point in this discussion—what can we do to increase and maintain better prices in this, our own, country for farm products?

Let us first diagnose the farmer's case. It is a simple one. Without any organization to fix the prices of his own products, he is the victim of organizations which have boosted the cost of everything which he must purchase. The remedy, therefore, while involving a most radical departure from old methods of marketing farm products, is equally simple. This remedy is counterorganization—an organization which will hold every bushel of wheat from the market until a living price therefor is secured; that will hold every bushel of rye and barley and other cereal until a price is received which will give the producer something to live on—an organization that will hold on the farm every steer and hog, every bale of cotton, until a just and living price is realized. In that manner, and in that manner alone, can the farmer match the price of his product with that of everything he trades that product for.

A bill for such an organization under general Federal supervision sleeps quietly in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, while other bills that but scratch the surface of the difficulties are being pressed upon the attention of the Senate. This bill may well be described as "An act for a comprehensive system of cooperation in the marketing of all farm products." It provides for an association of farmers in each State for the cooperative selling of the products raised by such association, these associations to be organized under a general plan that will comprehend all important farm products. The several State organizations are to appoint not more than three agents whose duty it is to represent, advise, and assist the State associations in the marketing of their products, whether within their own States or at any place of consumption.

All of these State associations and their agents would be brought under the general direction of a board consisting of five members appointed by the President. This board would provide for a system of terminal marketing, having in view the purpose of bringing the producer and the ultimate consumer of products into as nearly direct relation as possible, to render advice at all times concerning the state of the market, to seek new markets, to secure a steady flow of farm products into those consuming centers, to prevent glutting the market at any time, to stabilize prices, to check the flow of any commodity entirely when the markets are glutted and until the congestion is relieved.

Not only this, Mr. President, but under such an organization we would rid ourselves of this constant agitation over what we denominate "liquid assets" in the conduct of our Federal reserve banks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to ask the Senator why it is that legislation is necessary to bring about that result. I understood that we enacted a law not so long ago, a permissive statute, to relieve farmers of any embarrassment that might grow out of the anti-trust laws.

Mr. McCUMBER. The reason is that there would be considerable objection and a great outcry made against an organization the purpose of which was to check and hold the farm commodities upon the farm until we received a price that would justify our raising the crops. Farmers themselves, feeling that the Government would be back of them and would oversee the conduct of the business, just as it supervises the business of the banking institutions of the country, would encourage and facilitate the very organizations which I desire to see formed. I am willing to admit that the farmers could organize without the law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Personally I fail to see why there would be any greater outcry against an organization of farmers than there is against an organization of steel men or an organization of men producing farm machinery.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question is whether we would have the organization at all. There was nothing in the law to prevent regional banks loaning upon farm securities and selling their bonds. They could have done that without any special law of Congress, but they never did it until Congress authorized it and set a certain character of control over it. Then they organized, and much benefit has accrued from that organization. But it can not meet the situation which we have to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he is referring to some bill now before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator give the number of that bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not give it now, but I will give the Senator the number later. It was reintroduced at the beginning of the last session, as I remember, and was with the committee when the Congress adjourned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the bill call for the Government furnishing any of the capital?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it does not call for the Government furnishing one penny of capital. I am speaking now of the Federal reserve banks and the discussion of liquid assets.

With such regional associations as this bill provides, the banks could secure the credit of each organization as a whole, and with such a credit paper could be sold at any time. It is the certainty that the paper will be met when it is due that makes it liquid, rather than the very short time which it may have to run.

In many cases of bank failures in my own State I have found that what bankers generally denominate "liquid assets" are the least liquid of any that come into the hands of the receiver, namely, the short-time notes. A liquid asset is that which can be most readily transferred and converted into money. Whenever one of these banks failed there were many investors who investigated to ascertain whether among the assets could be found good real estate secured paper. It mattered little whether that paper was due in one year or five years, it found a ready purchaser for cash. So, Mr. President, these associations could give to the bank paper having back of it the guaranty of a hundred or a thousand members of the organization, which would be far more safe than most of the paper taken by the banks to-day, and I am not criticizing them for not extending their credits further than they do.

Thus, Mr. President, by this bill, if enacted into law, the farmers themselves could fix a living price for their products, and through their cooperation they could furnish the security to borrow money to hold those products until they receive such price. That bill will answer to a great extent, and in the end will answer fully, the demand of the farmer for a living price for his product, without plunging the country into the infinitely evil pathway of purchasing the product of the labors of its people to maintain a living price. All other schemes for the stabilizing of prices of farm products have failed, and all will fail until a means has been found whereby farm organizations may pit their powers against those other organizations which are to-day squeezing the very lifeblood out of more than one-third of the population of this country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 966) for the relief of the Tacoma Tug & Barge Co., and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITION.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Montrose and vicinity, in the State of Colorado, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, now famine stricken owing to scant crops and money depreciation, and the purchase in the United States of sufficient food supplies to tide over the winter the suffering millions, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2002) for the relief of Charles D. Shay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1001) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4310) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Mohican; and

A bill (S. 4311) for the relief of the owners of the steam lighter Comport; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4312) to amend subdivision (a) of section 206 of the transportation act, 1920, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 4314) to amend sections 102, 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code; and section 305, paragraphs (a) and (b), of the tariff act of 1922; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4315) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4316) granting an increase of pension to Fanny W. Arnold; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4317) granting a pension to Bertha Bassett; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 265) to stimulate crop production in the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BALL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 266) authorizing the use of public parks, reservations, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia; and the use of tents, cots, hospital appliances, flags, and other decorations, property of the United States, by the Almas Temple, Washington, D. C., 1923 Shrine Committee (Inc.), and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $13,600 for grading Linnean Avenue from Military Road to the grade point south of Albemarle Street; $1,650 for grading Albemarle Street between Twenty-ninth Street and Linnean Avenue, and widening the fill on Albemarle Street near Connecticut Avenue for the purpose of providing for sidewalks; and $1,250 for grading Brandywine Street between Twenty-ninth Street and Linnean Avenue, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make advances or loans therefrom to farmers in the drought-stricken areas in the State of Washington (for the crop of 1923) where he finds that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of wheat for seed purposes, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, from $110,000 to $135,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the control and prevention of spread of the European corn borer from $200,000 to $225,000 and to increase the amount that the Secretary of Agriculture may expend only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations, for the accomplishment of such purposes, from $75,000 to $100,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the eradication of and supplying of serum for the eradication of the disease of blackleg, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for cooperative fire protection of forested watersheds of navigable streams from $400,000 to $2,000,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, from $94,115 to $104,115, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 401), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 57, agreed to May 2, 1921, authorizing the Vice President to employ an assistant clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, during the Sixty-seventh Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 402), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 448, agreed to March 8, 1921, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to continue the employment of an assistant clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, until the end of the present Congress, be, and the same hereby is, further continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATORS KNOX, PENROSE, AND CROW.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate convene on Sunday, January 28, at 11 o'clock a. m., to pay tribute to the life, character, and public service of the late Senators KNOX, PENROSE, and CROW.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 10, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years."; and, on page 16 of the bill, in lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "including the payment of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 7, 8, and 9.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
PATRICK H. KELLEY,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would be very glad to have the Senator from Wyoming make a statement to the Senate indicating the changes which have been made by the conferees.

Mr. WARREN. Only three items have been given up by the Senate conferees, and three other items are in disagreement. One of the recessions covered the items in a document containing a list of War Department claims. These claims have been twice passed by the Senate in deficiency bills, and both times we have been compelled to surrender them in conference. And so I have prepared a bill, which I shall introduce presently, requesting its reference to the Committee on Claims; and I shall try to have it approved by that committee. The War Department item consisted of smaller items grouped together, amounting to $83,000.

One other recession on the part of the Senate conferees was a Post Office Department item of nine or ten thousand dollars.

The third item was a matter of something over $3,000 which related to the international boundary line between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are substantially the only changes made?

Mr. WARREN. Those are the only changes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What was the change made in the post-office matter?

Mr. WARREN. Simply in the matter of awards. The House allowed a little less than $8,000, and the Senate had allowed an additional $9,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I desire now to introduce a bill covering the matter in the deficiency bill to which the House did not agree because of one or two items which were not satisfactory, and I ask that the bill go to the Committee on Claims. I further beg to suggest to the Committee on Claims that early consideration be given it.

The bill (S. 4313) for the payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS FOR CATTLE BREEDING (S. DOC. NO. 287).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State concerning a request made by the Secretary of Agriculture that specific authorization be obtained from Congress that will enable the Department of Agriculture to be represented by a delegate in the International Congress for Cattle Breeding, to be held at The Hague in August, 1923, by the payment of the expenses of such delegate (estimated at $1,500) out of the regular funds provided in the Agricultural appropriation act for animal husbandry investigations (general expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry) for the fiscal year 1924.

I commend the request of the Secretary of Agriculture to the favorable consideration of Congress as in the interest of an important industry of the United States.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 10, 1923.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, submitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents in the files of his office not needed in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. GERRY members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. REED of Missouri obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Bayard	Harreld	McNary	Smith
Borah	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Johnson	New	Stanley
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sterling

France	McCormick	Robinson	Weller
George	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	McKellar	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

PROPOSED CESSION OF CERTAIN WEST INDIAN ISLANDS.

[Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Senate. Before concluding he yielded the floor for the day. The entire speech will appear hereafter.]

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	France	McCormick	Robinson

Dillingham	Ladd	Ransdell
Fernald	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent in attendance on a committee meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 36, line 7, after the word "forests," insert:

And the Secretary of Agriculture may hereafter in his discretion permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Florida that in the present law there is a prohibition against shipping lumber grown and cut in the forest reserves in one State into another State. This permits the shipment in interstate commerce of timber from any State in the Union to another State.

Mr. FLETCHER. I gathered that that would be the effect of it, but I can not quite see the reason for it. It seems to me that the present law is a very good one. Why should not these resources in the forest reserves be available for the people of the States in which they are situated?

Mr. McNARY. This does not appertain to the income derived from the sales of timber but to the distribution of the converted timber itself. For instance, in the State of Oregon, where the national forests are very large and the consumption of timber is very small, would the Senator be in favor of a law prohibiting the sale of that Government timber in other States? That is the effect of the present law. We want to change the law so that the timber cut in those States where the local consumption is not great may be shipped into other States of the Union for the benefit of all the people.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is just what I am getting at. Of course, where the forest reserves are very large and extensive there might be a reason for it. In Florida the forest reserves are comparatively small; the material coming from them is not very great; and I take it there would be no demand for this sort of legislation there. But in States where the reserves are large, perhaps conditions call for such a provision. That is just what I wanted to know.

If the Senator feels that in those States where these reserves are extensive and the material is not required in the State it is all right, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. The law covers the situation which we are trying to correct. I present a brief letter covering the point from the acting forester, and inasmuch as the Senator from Florida has withdrawn his objection, I will ask merely to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, January 9, 1923.

FINANCE, AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION, 1924.

Memorandum for Senator McNARY.

I inclose herewith a memorandum regarding the timber-sale limitation for your use should you find any need for the information contained therein.

Our actual cut of timber from the national forests now amounts to nearly a billion feet annually. As a matter of fact, probably over half of this actually enters into interstate trade. The language which was stricken out on point of order, and which should be restored, allows foreign shipments. It is our feeling that this is almost as essential as interstate shipments, for the reason that, although no sales are made primarily for foreign export, except in Alaska, lumber from the national forests now enters into the general trade, and practically any cargo shipped from most of the Pacific coast points is likely to contain some such material. It would interject needlessly an embarrassing and troublesome item in the export trade generally. The only direct shipments from national forests to foreign countries that have ever been made to my knowledge were made from the forests of Alaska last summer, about 5,000,000 feet of box and merchantable spruce being shipped from the Territory to Australia. This represents less than one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated annual growth of our forests there. It brought Australian money to the Territory, furnished labor for our own people, and contributed to Australian development timber which would otherwise have gone to waste. It did not deprive our people of a single foot of lumber that they are prepared to use at this time. Until such time as our own market is prepared to take the equivalent of the annual growth from the Alaskan forests I would regret exceedingly to see this growing foreign trade stifled, as it would be if export is restricted.

E. A. SHERMAN, Acting Forester.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, January 9, 1923.

FINANCE—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION, 1924.

Memorandum for Senator McNARY.

"and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated."

The foregoing language, with the exception of the word "hereafter," has been carried in the appropriation acts for the Department of Agriculture in this or similar form since March 3, 1905. Without this language forest products could not be sent from one State to another, nor could it enter into foreign trade, for the reason that the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 11), says that sales may be made of timber "to be used in the State or Territory in which such timber reservation may be situated, respectively, but not for export therefrom." Restriction against export from the State would largely destroy the value of the national forests as Federal property. Receipts from timber sales now amount to about $2,000,000 annually. Over $40,000,000 has been invested in logging and manufacturing plants which depend on the availability of national-forest timber for their use, and additional investments are constantly being made as the sales of timber increase. These investments are made by citizens who trust the good faith of the Government. If the bill is not changed, their investments will be lost and no more will be made.

Unless this language is restored an export business which is being built up in Alaska and which uses only a small part of the annual crop from the forests there will be totally destroyed. Furthermore, our plans for the development of the print-paper industry in the Territory would be completely hamstrung by such a restriction. We now have several large and responsible concerns negotiating for the establishment of paper plants in the Territory. Each one involves the investment of millions of dollars. Their product should be placed upon the same basis as the product of any other paper mill.

Inability to export national-forest timber from the State in which it is grown would, for example, make impossible the sale now being advertised on the Malheur Forest, with all the attendant advantages to the local community, since no lumber company would be willing to make the necessary investment in railroad, mill, and logging equipment if its market were restricted to the State of Oregon. And this, in turn, would postpone indefinitely all the advantages to the local community attendant upon this proposed development. Sales of timber, now aggregating about 13,000 in number annually, would be reduced to insignificant numbers if all purchasers were confined to strictly local markets within their respective States. Upon the other hand, nobody could possibly benefit if the private owner of stumpage whose property is intermingled with national-forest timber would be unable to satisfactorily combine his own operations with the removal of the timber from the Government's intermingled holdings.

The act of February 1, 1905, authorized the export of pulp wood and wood pulp from Alaska without mentioning national forests specifically. This probably applies to the national forests, but it does not cover lumber, timber, or paper, and is not sufficient to secure the continuance of the industrial development now under way.

The restriction of the use of national forest timber to the State in which the timber grew would result in a waste of timber rather than its conservation. National forest timber is sold from any given economic unit, such as a large watershed, only in such quantities as represent the harvesting of the crop as it matures, with the aim of having the output of timber continuous and perpetual. To restrict the use of this crop would in many cases result in failure to secure its harvesting at the time it needs it and would leave it to rot within the barrier of the State line, although the people of other States in the Union were in sore need of that very timber. It is also impracticable to organize the business of lumbering on any large scale if the market is restricted, since, for example, many lumbermen fail to find within their own State a market for certain grades of lumber for which there is strong demand in other States.

If any restriction whatever is placed upon the free movement of our timber into the market it will be exceedingly difficult to enforce such restriction. After the logs are sawed and the lumber enters into trade it would be a practical impossibility to distinguish between lumber cut from the national forests and any other lumber. The restriction would be a handicap to an honest operator, but might be safely ignored by a dishonest one. If any attempt were made to enforce it it would result in endless investigations, controversy, and litigation, all to no good purpose.

Such a restriction instead of being in the interest of conservation would actually be an anticonservation measure, since it would prevent these forests from contributing in a maximum degree to the needs of our people. If any limitation is ever placed upon lumber entering into interstate or foreign commerce, the limitation should be a general one and should not be limited merely to the products of national forests.

E. A. SHERMAN, Acting Forester.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I offer an amendment at this time?

Mr. McNARY. I have one further amendment which I desire to offer in behalf of the committee, but in view of the necessity of the Senator from Mississippi to be absent from the Chamber for the remainder of the afternoon, I told him I would yield for the purpose only of offering his amendment at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Insert the following as a new paragraph on page 82, following line 16:

That the first paragraph of the section of an act entitled "An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products," approved February 18, 1922, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products, as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, or producers of naval stores, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purpose: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof as such producers and conform to one or both of the following requirements."

Mr. HARRISON. The only change in the present law that I propose by the amendment is the insertion of the words "or producers of naval stores." In other words, it would place the producers of rosin and turpentine upon the same basis as to the organization of market associations as the producers of fruits, nuts, and vegetables.

May I say in this connection that the naval-stores industry, the name of the turpentine and rosin industry, has always been identified with the Department of Agriculture of the Government? The appropriations carried for it are always carried in the Agricultural Department appropriation bill. It is under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. The crop, so to speak, from which the rosin or the turpentine is extracted from the pine is called the orchard. For the past 15 years no industry has been quite so much affected and depressed as has the naval-stores industry. Out of the 15 years last past they have had but one good year, which I think was 1920. The amendment which I have proposed will greatly aid them in the matter, and I hope no point of order will be made against it, so the provision may at least go to conference.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether it more properly should not come in connection with the measure known as the Capper cooperative marketing association act? As the amendment was read from the desk, it would appear that it is in the nature of legislation affecting that act more primarily than it does the pending bill.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true. It is merely an amendment of the first section of that act, but it only seeks to add the producers of naval stores. While I know that a point of order could be made and would be sustained, I hope the amendment may be adopted and at least go to conference.

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator that I did not have the conception that it was in the nature of an amendment to the cooperative organization act. I thought it was coming within the purview of the pending bill rather than legislation apart from it. That being so, it would not stand in conference. I would have to make the point of order here. It would properly come as an amendment to the existing law.

Mr. HARRISON. It would. It would come as an amendment to the other act, but I realize that the calendar is in such condition that it would be very difficult to amend the law in the way we would like to have it amended, and I was hopeful we could get the relief in this manner.

Mr. LODGE. Does the proposed amendment provide for combinations which could be directed against the Government in its purchase of naval stores?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will recall that we recently passed what is known as the cooperative marketing act.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. HARRISON. That act permits the producers of nuts, vegetables, fruits, and so forth, to associate themselves together to market their products. The amendment which I have offered merely includes the producers of rosin and turpentine, which are known as naval stores.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the difficulty with it is that it is legislating in favor of a combination against the Government's stores necessary for the defense of the country, specifically naval stores.

Mr. HARRISON. Turpentine and rosin are not used in the defense of the Government particularly, may I say to the Senator. The term "naval stores" may be all wrong, but it has come to the point that the term "naval stores" includes turpentine and rosin, and those alone. That is what I am trying to get at. I would just as soon term it "turpentine and rosin" as "naval stores," but it is clearly understood that the producers of naval stores are producers of rosin and turpentine, which have nothing to do with the defense of the country.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator allow me to say that the term "naval stores" is a trade name that applies entirely to the products of the pine?

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that, but they are naval stores just the same.

Mr. SMITH. It is quoted as naval stores. It is known technically around the world as naval stores. It has nothing to do with naval affairs, only I believe they did use some tar once to tar the rope on ships. That might have been where the term originated. "Naval stores" is a technical trade name that applies to the products.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is rosin and turpentine.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask permission to modify my amendment by inserting the words "rosin and turpentine," so it will read "or producers of rosin and turpentine" instead of "producers of naval stores." That will remove any ambiguity of the language. I ask to have that modification made, that where it now reads "or producers of naval stores" it shall be modified so as to read "or producers of rosin and turpentine."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. McNARY. I regret exceedingly the necessity under the circumstances of again calling the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the existing rule with respect to legislative matters on appropriation bills. I believe that the cooperative marketing act should be amended so as to include naval stores. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the effort of the Senator from Mississippi and would gladly join him in an effort before the Agricultural Committee to amend the other act. But if the point of order is not made by the Senator in charge of the bill it would be made by others, in view of the rule, and therefore I must invoke the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, are committee amendments now disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Committee amendments are still in order.

Mr. McNARY. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 80, after line 8, insert the following under the subhead "Maximum salaries":

Hereafter the maximum salary of any scientific investigator or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed at the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1924 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000, except the following: Not more than 12 in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each and not more than 5 in excess of $5,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 71, at the end of line 3, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That said publications shall be deposited one-third in the folding room of the Senate and two-thirds in the folding room of the House of Representatives, and said documents shall be distributed by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, has the Senator in charge of the bill anything further to propose?

Mr. McNARY. I have one rather informal amendment, but I am very happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I thank the Senator. On page 30, line 7, I move to strike out the numeral "$94,115" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "$104,115."

The amount proposed of $94,115 is for the purpose of taking care of certain diseases affecting the sugar-plant industry of the country. Only $10,000 of that is to be devoted to the sugar-cane industry of this country. The entire paragraph reads:

For sugar-plant investigation, including studies of diseases and the improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, $94,115.

Mr. President, as my colleague and I have had occasion to ascertain from the Secretary of Agriculture, the department recommended to the Budget Bureau $10,000 in excess of the amount carried in the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture is thoroughly familiar with the investigations having to do with the mosaic disease in sugar-cane plants. Aside from that, there are other diseases which have materially interfered with the successful growing of sugar cane in this country. The Secretary of Agriculture, as I am informed, desired the appropriation to be sufficient to investigate those other diseases and also to provide for the importation of sugar-cane plants which would mature before the time when the mosaic disease attacks the sugar cane. The other diseases which it is desired to study include red rot, root rot, field leaf, and other diseases which are rapidly spreading in that particular district.

Mr. President, we in Louisiana are the largest sugar manufacturers, but the State of Georgia is the leading sugar-cane sirup State in the United States. The industry is also very important in the States of Mississippi, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, Alabama, and North and South Carolina, and Texas.

We feel, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the recommendation was made without solicitation from any of the sugar interests in this country that this amount be made $104,115, which represents an increase of $10,000 over the appropriation of last year, that it is well worthy of consideration in this body. There has been no effort made on the part of any of the sugar interests to have this amount increased; but the Secretary of Agriculture, realizing the necessity for increasing the amount, voluntarily made the recommendation.

I have been informed that the Budget Bureau reduced it to the amount that was carried last year.

I wish to state to those Senators who are present that our product, like that of growers of wheat and other agricultural interests in this country, is being attacked by diseases which have been imported. The department is perfectly willing to make, and realizes the necessity of making, the fight to eradicate them. The amount involved is only $10,000. I think it would be very unwise for us to yield, I might say, to the arbitrary power vested in the Budget Bureau and strike out an item recommended by an expert in this line. In view of the fact that the Budget Bureau do not know anything of the character or extent of these diseases and what they mean to the industry, I think we are safe in following the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I wish to assure the Members of the Senate that none of us tried to get him to increase the amount, but quite to the contrary. I know that applies to me, although I hail from the sugar district of Louisiana. After the appropriation failed to be included my attention was called to it by men engaged in trying to eradicate these diseases, and I was requested, as my colleague was requested, to ask for this increase in order to enable the department intelligently to fight the diseases.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the department now doing under the existing appropriation in reference to this particular matter?

Mr. BROUSSARD. The department is not doing anything at this time except as to the mosaic disease, which was introduced into this country two or three years ago. The Secretary of Agriculture has asked the Congress to appropriate $10,000 for the purpose of investigating other diseases of the sugar plant.

Mr. LENROOT. Why can not the department use a part of the $94,000 for that purpose?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if he is a member of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. LENROOT. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to say to the Senator that it has taken me about three days to ascertain exactly what amount was intended to be used in the investigation of the sugar-cane diseases. Under the new method of permitting the Appropriations Committee to handle all appropriation bills it is very difficult to ascertain facts, and I have devoted three days of my time in order to find out just exactly whether there was any amount intended for the investigation of the mosaic disease. Only late yesterday afternoon Doctor Ball, after having informed me that it was cared for under another item, stated that it was intended to be taken care of under the item which we are now discussing.

Mr. LENROOT. The item of $94,115?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes. In addition to that, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the following letter, which is dated January 9, from the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget. It states:

> MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to your request of this date, I have the honor to advise you that the estimate submitted to the Bureau of the Budget by the Secretary of Agriculture for "sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, was $104,115. The estimate for this appropriation as contained in the Budget is $94,115, which is the same amount as the appropriation for the fiscal year 1923.

I may not be direct in my answer to the Senator from Wisconsin, but the information that I gather is that the Department of Agriculture wishes to investigate red rot, root rot, and field leaf diseases of sugar cane, as well as to experiment in the importation of varieties of sugar cane which would mature before the mosaic disease begins to spread in the plant.

I think if the Senator will get the estimates from the Secretary of Agriculture he will find that every dollar of the $94,115 proposed to be appropriated is dedicated, as it were, to certain purposes, and that the $10,000 additional is necessary to take care of the matter to which I have referred.

Mr. LENROOT. I hope that it is not a permanent "dedication."

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not know as to that.

Mr. LENROOT. I am afraid that is the case sometimes in connection with some of these items.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator may be right about that; I do not know; but if the Senate should provide the $10,000 which I am now proposing to add to the amount carried by the bill, I would hope that it might be used for the purposes I have indicated. The only thing that we have to be guided by is the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, and, upon investigation of the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, I think the Senator will find that every cent of what may be called his budget for the expenditure of the $94,115 has been apportioned, and that none of it will be available for the item which I am now proposing to take care of.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the Senator understands that if the Congress is to accept as final and conclusive the recommendations of the head of a department as to the amount that is necessary, we might as well repeal the Budget law.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I quite agree with the Senator; but, on the other hand, it appeals to me very strongly that it is beyond human capability for the Budget Bureau to comprehend exactly every item that is proposed by the various departments; and so the Budget Bureau may frequently allow an appropriation which should be eliminated and may deny other appropriations which are very meritorious.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. As the item presently stands, does it leave any money for the control or eradication of the mosaic disease?

Mr. BROUSSARD. It does not leave one cent for the purposes I have indicated.

Mr. LENROOT. The department may use a part of the appropriation for those purposes, so far as the bill is concerned, if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that my very limited experience here has taught me, I think, that the chiefs of bureaus are supreme, and that they may apportion the funds as they see fit; but when we are appropriating the money we must assume that they will expend the money according to their own recommendations.

Mr. LENROOT. But the clause in the bill appropriating $94,115 includes the item in which the Senator is interested.

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; it does not.

Mr. LENROOT. Is not the language of the provision broad enough to cover investigations of the diseases which the Senator has mentioned?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; it is not. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that there are certain investigations being made looking to the eradication of the mosaic disease, and there have been several men——

Mr. LENROOT. But is not the item "for sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases"?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But if only the $94,115 appropriation is provided by the bill, it will provide merely for a continuation of the experiments and the investigations for the eradication of the mosaic disease affecting the native sugar cane in Louisiana and the other cane-growing States of the South. It will not permit the importation of early maturing varieties, nor would it permit investigations as to the root and leaf diseases and other diseases which have become prevalent.

Since the Department of Agriculture has found it necessary to have experts investigate with a view to the eradication of the mosaic disease——

Mr. McNARY. Let me ask the Senator what amount of money was expended by the department last year in the prosecution of this work?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Last year, I understand, there was $10,000 expended, and that is provided for now so far as the eradication of the mosaic disease is concerned; but the Department of Agriculture in its investigation of the mosaic disease has come to the conclusion that it ought to import earlier maturing varieties into this country, and they have further discovered while investigating this particular disease that there are certain other diseases affecting the roots and the leaves of the sugar cane, just as there are diseases affecting wheat, and they would like to have an additional $10,000 in order to permit them to prosecute this work and assist in the eradication of all diseases affecting sugar cane.

Mr. McNARY. Then it is true, is it not, that under this item, as presently carried, the same work may be done this year as was done last year?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What the Senator wants, then, is to extend the work by adding a new experiment?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am merely backing the Department of Agriculture, which has requested that an addition of $10,000 be provided.

Mr. McNARY. So the Senator's idea is not only to have the $10,000 used last year for a similar purpose provided this year but also an additional $10,000 for extending the work?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes, sir; that is exactly the idea.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say a moment ago that those interested in the production of sugar have not been urging the inclusion in the bill of this item.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I said that so far as my colleague and I were concerned we had not urged it; but I may say to the Senator from Washington that the State of Louisiana has been appropriating funds out of its treasury for the purpose of prosecuting investigations along this line and that the Agricultural Department in its investigations found it necessary to recommend the appropriation of the additional amount.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I want to bring out. The Budget law absolutely prohibits the department officials from coming to Congress and asking for anything that is not estimated by the Budget. We may just as well do away with the Budget law if we are going to encourage bureau chiefs to come to Members of Congress and urge appropriations of amounts not estimated by the Budget.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that if anything I have said conveyed to him the idea that the Department of Agriculture came to us and asked us to present this matter he obtained a wrong impression, or I made an erroneous statement. It was not my intention to convey any such idea. In its recommendations to the Budget Bureau, however, the Department of Agriculture included this amount, which was eliminated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; they included a whole lot of amounts that the Bureau of the Budget did not recommend.

Mr. BROUSSARD. We were then called upon by our constituency after this had been done and our attention was called to it, and we asked for the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture, which verified the statements made to us by the people who called our attention to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, that is all right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Department of Agriculture is not appearing now, nor do I wish to represent it as appearing now, and wanting to override the Budget. I want to make that very plain. I wish to say this: The thought that I wished to convey was that the Department of Agriculture, before it knew the views of the Budget Bureau—and the views of the Budget Bureau, to my mind, can not cover every subject which we are dealing with in legislation—did conceive it to be its duty to recommend this to the Budget Bureau.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But the Budget Bureau eliminated it; and we have taken it up because of the fact that outsiders have called our attention to the fact that the Budget Bureau eliminated a thing that was very material to the sugar-cane industry of this country. I do not wish to misrepresent the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That makes it perfectly plain.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to exonerate them entirely, because, as the Senator will recall, as I read this letter, they say, "Pursuant to your request of this date." We made a special request; and I wish to say, in addition, that this request was made by one of the employees in my office, and they refused to give the information until I made a personal call for it. They would not give it to an employee in the office.

Mr. President, I think this amount is very material to the development of the sugar-cane industry in this country, and should be allowed. It is a very small amount—$10,000—and I hope the Senate may allow it to us.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, my colleague has stated this case so well that really there is nothing left for me to say. I wish to make just a brief additional reply to the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

I tried to find out from the Agricultural Department something about this matter, and it seemed to me they leaned over backward in refusing to give me any information. They said they could not do it. They absolutely refused to tell me anything. I had learned it entirely from outside sources, and they said I would have to get any information I desired from the Budget Bureau; that the Budget Bureau had authority to give out information on it, but the Agricultural Department, under the rules, had no authority. So they would not give me any information. Then I went to the Budget Bureau, and my colleague did, and we got this information about it; but I did find out from other sources that the Secretary of Agriculture recommended this additional sum of $10,000, and he did it certainly without any solicitation on my part, and I believe without any solicitation on the part of my colleague or any solicitation on the part of the Senators from Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, all of whom are intensely interested in this item, just as are the Senators from Louisiana, because while the sugar industry, let me say, does not prevail in these other States, the sirup-producing industry does prevail to a very great extent in all the States of the South. It is an important industry, and this is intended to help the production of sugar-cane sirup. It is important in all of those States.

Now I wish to call the attention of the committee to sundry increases which were recommended by the Department of Agriculture, so I am informed. I have not verified this. I am informed by reliable outside sources that the Department of Agriculture recommended to the Budget, and the Budget approved, for the pathological laboratory an increase of $5,000; for fruit diseases, net, $11,000; for cotton and truck diseases, $10,000; for crop physiology, $10,000; for crop acclimatization, $20,000; for crop technology, $10,000; for cereal investigations, net, $15,000; for economic and systematic botany, $3,600; for dry-land agriculture, $11,000; for nut culture, $3,000; for pomology, $10,000; for horticulture, $7,500; and for forage crops, $5,000. My information is that these increases are recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the Bureau of the Budget. Mr. President and Senators, the same Secretary of Agriculture, with the same information before him, I assume, on which he recommended these other increases, recommended a $10,000 increase for investigating the diseases of cane; and I appeal to the Senate to stand by him in this sugar-cane increase, just as the Budget Bureau stood by him in the others. It is a very important matter for the South, and I trust we are going to keep it in this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have no doubt that this $10,000 could be well expended; and the same can be said of perhaps 100 other items in this bill where either the Budget Bureau or the House did not allow as large a sum as was recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture. Every Senator knows the necessity for the most rigid economy under existing conditions, and the impossibility of doing all that we would like to do for these various activities; but, Mr. President, I do not believe it would be fair, because two Senators are most praiseworthily zealous in behalf of an activity in their own State, to discriminate by permitting one amendment to come in that is subject to a point of order, and not letting perhaps 20 others, equally meritorious, also come in. The result would be very soon that our Budget system would be of very little value indeed.

Therefore, Mr. President, I feel constrained to make the point of order against the amendment that it is not estimated for, and is, therefore, subject to a point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on that point it is a question whether the amendment is subject to a point of order, because it has been recommended by the department. The fact that it was recommended by the department is very clear and is not questioned here. The identical item covered by the amendment was in the recommendation of the department submitted to the Budget Bureau.

I sincerely hope, however, that the Senator will not make that point of order. We had here yesterday the question of taking care of the barberry bush, where the estimate of the department was only $200,000 and the report of the Budget Committee was $200,000. The House raised that $150,000, and the Senate raised it $150,000 more.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, and that is a matter that affects very seriously my own State; and because I thought I ought to be consistent I voted against the increase.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the Senator did not make the point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. It was not subject to a point of order, because the House had acted upon the matter. It was not subject to a point of order at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. The House increased it to the extent of $150,000, and then the Senate proceeded to increase it to the extent of $150,000 more.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator want to interrupt me?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not want to interrupt the Senator but, if he will permit me, I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether or not the House has acted upon the $94,000, and whether or not the department has recommended this increase? So far as I am concerned, I do not see where the point of order lies.

Mr. LENROOT. As I inquired of the chairman, the estimate is $94,000, and this $10,000 is an increase.

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; that is not the estimate. The Secretary of Agriculture has recommended $104,000.

Mr. LENROOT. But the estimate is not the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture. The estimate is the estimate of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. BROUSSARD. If the Senator from Florida will permit me just one more question, what is the point of order—that it has not been estimated by the department?

Mr. LENROOT. And not reported by a standing committee.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not know that the rules have been amended so far as that is concerned. I understand the rule to be that unless it is recommended by a department, it is subject to a point of order; but this was recommended by the department.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; this is by the Budget. The estimate comes no longer from the department. The department never sends any estimate now.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What is the rule of the Senate with reference to it?

Mr. LENROOT. The estimate must come from the Budget Bureau.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But what is the rule? Will the Senator refer to the rule?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; I shall be glad to.

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is the point I wish to make, Mr. President—that the Budget Bureau is not mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has not read the rule correctly. The Secretary will read it as amended.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The rule, as amended, reads:

Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Mr. LENROOT. That is right. I beg the Chair's pardon. The rule has been amended to conform to the Budget system.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not care to take up any more time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on the question of the estimate, the senior Senator from Louisiana has here a letter of January 9, saying:

Pursuant to your request of this date, I have the honor to advise you that the estimate submitted to the Bureau of the Budget by the Secretary of Agriculture for sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, was $104,115. The estimate for this appropriation as contained in the Budget is $94,115, which is the same amount as the appropriation for the fiscal year 1923.

That is the statement in regard to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The Senator does not consider that an estimate under the law, does he?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is an estimate by the head of the department, of course. Whether or not we provided under the Budget law in such form that that is the controlling estimate is the question. If that is the controlling estimate, then the point of order would be well taken; but I want to appeal to the Senator again not to insist upon the point of order at this time, and I want to call attention to the importance of this matter.

The whole sugar-cane growing area of the South, comprising eight States, whether used for the production of sirup or sugar, is now infected with this mosaic disease. That area includes not only the sugar-producing States—Louisiana is the principal one, of course, in that industry, but Florida is now producing sugar cane to a very large extent; three or four new mills have recently gone up in the region of the Everglades, and they are producing sugar there—but, in addition to that, the sirup-producing industry is at stake, because this sugar cane is used to produce sirup. The production in Florida last year was 6,300,000 gallons of sirup, and that whole area is infected with this mosaic disease. The disease is a very serious one. I have here a statement to this effect:

This disease in Porto Rico in some instances has reduced the tonnage of cane, and the consequent sirup production therefrom, as much as 75 per cent from the normal of what it would have been in the absence of this disease.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. We ought to take steps to put an end to this thing, if possible; and this amount is needed by the department, as they have stated in their estimate, for the purpose of continuing the study and investigation looking to the eradication or elimination of this very serious disease in the whole sugar-producing and cane-producing industry in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand from the statement made by the Senator from Florida that there is no fund available for this purpose unless this appropriation is made?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is proposed that they may use some $10,000 of this fund.

Mr. HEFLIN. But $10,000 is not sufficient for the investigation and study of this subject in these eight States.

Mr. POMERENE. How long has this disease prevailed in that section?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a comparatively new development.

Mr. POMERENE. It is spreading very rapidly, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is spreading rapidly, and they are conducting studies in Louisiana and in Florida and in Georgia. They have some work going on there where they are investigating and studying the subject, and they need this appropriation to continue the work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I just want to complete the statement. Florida has 30,000 acres in cultivation producing cane; Alabama, 60,000; Georgia, 45,000; South Carolina, 8,200; Mississippi, 33,700; Louisiana, 21,500; Texas, 12,000; Arkansas, 2,400; total, 213,000 acres in these States devoted to the production of sugar cane for the sirup and cane. I ask to have that statement put in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Area of sugar cane and production of cane sirup, 1920–21.

State.	Area harvested for sirup.		Sirup made.
	1921	1920	1921	1920
South Carolina	8,200	7,800	820,000	858,000
Georgia	45,000	44,100	7,322,000	9,697,000
Florida	30,000	24,000	5,300,000	6,100,000
Alabama	60,000	42,000	8,760,000	7,665,000

Mr. FLETCHER. I say that the experiments being carried on in one locality are for use elsewhere. Whatever is being done in one State is communicated and used throughout the other States in order to conquer this very serious pest. I appeal to the Senator not to insist on the point of order. If the Chair is ready to rule, I will not consume further time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, before the Chair rules on the point of order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall be in favor of appealing from the decision of the Chair if he shall hold we can not go behind the edict of the Budget committee. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This Budget Bureau is reducing the authority of that committee to an infinitesimal proposition in the Senate; in fact, it is depriving it of its authority to represent the agricultural interests of the country. We have practically no power left. I represent an agricultural State, and the other members of that committee represent agricultural States, and we can advocate any apprpriation we choose; but if this Budget Bureau does not see fit to grant what we ask, we can not go behind the judgment expressed by that bureau. If the American people knew how the American Congress had been stripped of its power under this Budget arrangement, they would rise at the polling places and let the country hear from them.

I am in favor of looking carefully into appropriations, but this is a proposition in which the whole sugar-cane industry of the United States is involved. A new disease is spreading rapidly in the cane-producing areas. Senators coming from the biggest cane-growing State in the Union have asked for $10,000 additional to carry on work of investigating the ravages of that insect; and a point of order is going to be made when both Senators say they need that $10,000 additional in the State of Louisiana, and in my State, and in the other States of the South.

It is said we can not get it because the Budget Bureau will not permit us to have it. Are Senators to be deprived of their rights on this floor as representatives of sovereign States, because the Budget Bureau wants to be able to say that it has cut down the amount and saved a little money? The Budget Bureau was intended to prevent the useless appropriation of money. The Nation derives its strength from the people of the States; but some man in Washington, who probably never saw a field of growing cane in his life, appears and takes his pencil and runs through these suggested appropriations, striking them out.

On yesterday or the day before the Senate voted $152,000 to pay some man for a little boat sunk through a collision with a Government ship up around New York; and we have ships which the chairman of the Shipping Board tells us we can not get anything for, which we can not sell for sixteen or eighteen hundred dollars. They sold some of them some time ago, I believe, for $2,100 each; but when the Government strikes one of these little yachts and sinks it, they come here and put through the claim quickly for an amount fifteen times as large as the sum for which they sold some of our Government ships that cost from $600,000 to $800,000.

I voted against it, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] made a speech against it, but you passed a bill in that case appropriating $152,000 to pay for that one ship.

The whole sugar-cane industry of 110,000,000 people is here asking for $10,000 additional to fight a disease gnawing at the very vitals of the industry, and a Senator rises and tells us that the Budget Bureau does not think we ought to have it, and therefore it is to be stricken out. If our rule permits such a ruling, we ought to change the rule.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives was not permitted to vote on the proposition of whether the distribution of choice seeds to the people of the United States should continue. Under this Budget arrangement the House, with 435 Members, was tied hand and foot and could not even vote their convictions on this question. What are we coming to? Are the American people going to tamely submit to what is going on here?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the House did vote upon the proposition of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; they voted on it in Committee of the Whole, but when the bill got into the House, a point of order was made against the item, and the proposition went out on an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and for the first time in the history of the House that I know anything about the Speaker of the House made from the Chair an appeal to the House to sustain his decision.

Mr. President, when the people get on to this there is going to be a revolution politically in this country. You have made a reduction in the Agricultural appropriation bill since last year of about $6,000,000. You are striking down an industry that is already paralyzed. It is pillaged and plundered as no other industry in this country has been. You are picking on it, gnawing on that industry—the industry of the farmers of America. You voted $20,000,000 to buy grain and seeds and other agricultural products for Russia. You are cutting $6,000,000 out of this bill, making the agricultural classes at home suffer for $6,000,000 of the amount you sent to Russia.

If I understood him correctly, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said that when he sought information from the Secretary of Agriculture and others in the Department of Agriculture as to what they really recommended, trying to get at the truth, trying to get at the necessity for this amount, they said, "We can not tell you anyhing. You will have to get it from the Budget Bureau."

My God! What are we coming to in this Chamber? We see the great Secretary of Agriculture, a member of the President's Cabinet, supposed to represent the agricultural interests of the Union, with lips sealed and hands tied, behind a little Budget Bureau. He can not give out any information unless the Budget Bureau consents to it.

Suppose you go to the Budget Bureau and the Budget Bureau says, "We do not care to go into that. We have made this estimate, and you can take it or let it alone." Then what are you going to do? I look for that to happen next, if the Senate continues to surrender its rights to a budget bureau. It is legislation by bureaucracies in a Nation supposed to have a Congress to reflect the will of the people whose Government this is.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator, if he is informed, who constitutes the Budget Bureau?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is not going to be constituted very long if it keeps up things like this. The American people are not going to stand for a few highbrows, who never saw a cabbage or an open cotton boll or a cornstalk, "budgeting" and telling the people what they can have.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator that in some testimony taken before our committee it was said by an official of the Agricultural Department that the Budget Bureau sent a hotel proprietor of Chicago down there, who looked over the estimates and cut them down a million dollars. What does he know about raising cabbage or anything else?

Mr. HEFLIN. There you are, a hotel proprietor from Chicago coming down to see what we shall have for the southern section and in the great western section of the country in agriculture; a hotel proprietor from Chicago being sent down to look over the list and say "Strike that out." The thing gets worse and worse. He sees the word "mosaic." He says, "That is something in the Bible. Strike it out." He would not know a mosaic parasite from a humming bird. [Laughter.] He says, "Strike it out." That is the sort of situation we are treated to. It is not going to sail very smoothly in this Chamber.

Just think what we are up against here. Both Senators from Louisiana have shown to the Senate the necessity for getting this $10,000 addition. They convinced me of the necessity of it. My own State is involved in it, but they have a larger part of the industry in their State. I am convinced that they need it. I think they ought to have it; but we are about to lose it, we are told, because a point of order is going to be made, and the Budget Bureau says we must not have it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Secretary of Agriculture was present at the committee meeting, but the man who made the statement to which I have referred was a chief in the department. He said a hotel proprietor was sent down there who told them they had to cut the appropriation a million dollars, and then they sent an Army officer down there who said, "You have to cut it $2,000,000."

Mr. HEFLIN. It is even worse than I thought it was.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the testimony taken before our committee.

Mr. SMITH. A man was sent down to cut what bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. To cut the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. An Army officer and a hotel keeper?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. It strikes me that if all we have heard about the hotels be true, they ought to be an authority on—what is this, corn?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; corn is involved in the bill. These hotels were selling corn flakes for 15 cents a saucer, while the farmers were getting 20 cents a bushel for corn. They sold oatmeal for 15 cents a saucer, while the farmers were getting 14 cents a bushel for oats. They ought to be good authority on what the farmer needs. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator tell the Senate where he can buy corn flakes for 15 cents a saucer here in Washington?

Mr. HEFLIN. You can get them over at the Congress Hall Hotel for 15 cents a saucer.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to know it.

Mr. HEFLIN. What do they charge in New York for them?

Mr. CALDER. They charge half a dollar at the New Willard.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is just about where this Bureau Budget hotel proprietor came from. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I intended to say that I did not think the specialty of the hotel is corn flakes; it is corn, but not in flakes. I think it is in jugs.

Mr. HEFLIN. In liquid form?

Mr. CARAWAY. So I have understood.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what is the situation, in a nutshell? The Secretary of Agriculture, sitting in the Cabinet of the President and supposed to know what is best for the agricultural interests, after going over the facts before him, and hearing the testimony of those under him who represent his department and agriculture generally, said, "I recommend this as just and right," and he put it in his recommendation. The Budget Bureau strikes it out. The Senator from one of these States rises here and asks to have it put back, and the fact is disclosed that the Secretary of Agriculture is so hedged about by this Budget, and intimidated, I suppose, that he says, "I can not give you any information as to the facts about it. You will have to get the information from the Budget Bureau." Then the Budget Bureau says, "We recommend striking it out." Then we find that a hotel man from Chicago came down and looked over the list, and said, "You must reduce this $1,000,000," and then an Army officer came down and said, "You must reduce it $2,000,000." I am glad they did not send a third man; I do not know what he would have recommended.

This money is being taken from worthy projects in the field of agriculture for the purpose of satisfying the greed of certain special interests in other appropriations later on.

What are we going to do about it? We need this $10,000 in the sugar-cane growing States. Here is an industry that ought to be encouraged. The boll weevil is playing havoc all through that country, and our farmers have to diversify. A great many of them will plant sugar cane who are not now planting it, and this $10,000 would go a long way toward helping along this work. But we are told we must not have it because the Budget says we must not have it. Nobody says we are not entitled to it. Nobody says we do not need it; but because, forsooth, the Budget says we can not have it, we can not. Let us see whether we will or not.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Referring to the farmers of the South stopping planting cotton on account of the ravages of the weevil, in this bill, at this time, when that pest is affecting the international trade balance as against this country, reducing our average annual yield of cotton one-third, entailing a loss of something over a billion and a quarter dollars, I was astounded to find that the total amount appropriated for the purpose of investigating the ravages of insects in southern field crops, including cotton, is $165,000, against a loss of a billion and a quarter dollars.

A representative of the Agricultural Department came to see me in response to a telephone request to the Secretary of Agriculture, and I asked him why it was that there was no more than $165,000 appropriated. I had not even found the item. He turned to the page and showed it to me. I said, "Why no more than this?" He said, "Because we were limited to a certain sum for agricultural purposes and had no more, under the Budget order, to use for this purpose"—a purpose involving the very life of the exchange in favor of this Nation as against foreign nations, and perhaps the clothing in part of the entire civilized world. And yet because certain men, a list of whom has been sent me by the clerk, whose names I have never known to be identified with the great agricultural industry of the country, arbitrarily say that "So much money, in our estimation, should be appropriated for the purpose of combating the diseases that are incident to the agricultural products of the country," we must be restricted, those of us who have studied the question and who know what is economy, even in the expenditure of money, and must arbitrarily be controlled by a body of men who would not know a cotton stalk from a sugar beet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of the point of order at any time. The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask a question with reference to a statement the Senator from South Carolina has made. Does the Senator from South Carolina understand that a motion to increase the appropriation for the purpose of investigating the boll weevil would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. SMITH. As a matter of course it would be subject to a point of order if the point made by the Senator from Wisconsin is sustained by the Chair, because, as the Secretary has read the rule, when the Budget was substituted for a standing committee then it would have to be estimated according to law, and the law is the Budget. Therefore, if we attempt to increase the amount of the appropriation we find that the Budget has taken the place of the standing committee, and the law is the Budget, and therefore we are up against the proposition that when the Budget has made its statement then we are estopped unless it comes in pursuance of some act of one of the committees in the committee. The committee has not acted on this matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course the committee could have increased this particular item.

Mr. SMITH. That is the point I am making, that the committee could have increased it, but the committee did not increase it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Has the Agricultural Committee passed upon the appropriation bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I would like to answer the question propounded by my colleague. I wanted to go before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry myself, but I did not know about it until the matter was reported here, and I am a member of that committee, and so is the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] a member of the committee, I believe.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I am.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask the Senator if he ever heard of this matter until it was reported in the Senate?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I did not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It took me three days to find out whether or not the amount was incorporated in the appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. This is tantamount to an abolishment of all the committees save one, namely, the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee, under the rules and policy we have now adopted, sees fit to specify that certain representatives from the different standing committees may meet with certain representatives from their committee to go over a matter that heretofore has been considered by one of the other committees. In other words, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill goes to the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee, through its own sweet will, intimates that it will have a subcommittee from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to confer with a subcommittee from the Committee on Appropriations touching the matters involved in the Agricultural Department appropriation bill. When we have gone over that, through the charity of the Appropriations Committee, then the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee calls the full committee together and reports what has been accomplished by representatives of the Appropriations Committee and representatives of the Agricultural Committee. So that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, when it comes to getting the sinews of war for the purpose of carrying on the agricultural business of the country, have no voice at all except as subsidiary to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask my colleague what we should have done to get the amount increased?

Mr. SMITH. The only way we could have done would have been for the subcommittee to recommend it, and then for the subcommittee to report to the Committee on Appropriations, and if they accepted it, then we could have gotten it, because it would have come from one of the standing committees of the Senate, and thus complied with the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from South Carolina is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and he is likewise a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations dealing with the Agricultural Department appropriation bill. I would like to ask the Senator if he knew of the situation regarding this item and the boll-weevil item?

Mr. SMITH. I see the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. MCNARY] rises in his place, and I am glad he does, because I want him to hear what I have to say. I acknowledge the fact that we, as a subcommittee, went in and knew when we went in that we were restricted to a certain amount, and that the work we were doing was largely perfunctory.

The speed with which we went through the bill was either a reflection on our intelligence or proof of the fact that we were intelligent enough to know that we could not help ourselves and had to do just the best we knew how. This particular matter was not called to our attention. I believe had it been called to our attention that we might have remedied it. But has it come to pass that matters which escape us as a subcommittee and escape the attention of the Appropriations Committee can not be remedied here when the Senate knows and is convinced that it is a matter that ought to be attended to and that the appropriation ought to be made?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina another question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina for that purpose?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the light of the facts that have been revealed here by the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators, does he not think we might accomplish the result we all have in view by recommitting the bill to the Appropriations Committee for further consideration? It would be a travesty upon legislation if our hands were so tied here that we can not legislate as our judgment dictates to relieve the agricultural situation.

Mr. SMITH. I had not intended to have anything to say about this particular matter, believing that when it was brought to the attention of the Senate it would be agreed to. I had no other idea, because I myself am from a State that does not produce nearly so much of this very necessary ingredient. It is one of the prime foodstuffs. Sirup in certain localities takes the place of meat with certain people. It is used very largely in certain parts of our coastal regions. Anything that menaces that supply very seriously jeopardizes the comfort and lives of a great many people who are not as advantageously situated as you and I may be.

Knowing from what the department said that this insidious disease with others was possibly threatening the development and life of the industry, I had no idea in the world but what the $10,000 asked for would be granted as soon as those who represent the States in which this thing has grown up had made their statements.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator if the bill is recommitted to the Appropriations Committee could it not remedy the omissions?

Mr. SMITH. I can answer the Senator by saying that the attitude of those who have it in charge on the floor of the Senate does not give me very much hope, but I think I would about as soon risk my chances there as here.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not speaking about what the committee would do. I am addressing myself to the question of power. If the bill is recommitted to the committee, would not the committee then have the power under reconsideration to adjust there the appropriation in such way as to meet the situation?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; it would have the power, but whether or not it would do it is another question.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am making is this: If the committee has the power, Senators who represent the cotton-growing States of the Union and the sugar-cane-growing States of the Union would be derelict in their duty to their constituents, I believe, if they did not take advantage of every possible means of preventing the miscarriage of legislation through the instrumentality of a point of order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. On the very point discussed by the Senator from South Carolina I want to observe that I am not enamored of the rule. In fact, I opposed it with a few others on the floor of the Senate. I thought I saw evil and wickedness in the rule. The particular item about which the Senator complains is not carried under the head of the boll weevil, but "Insects affecting southern crops."

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I made that statement.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator was a member of the subcommittee last year and again this year. The item was the same last year as this year.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. It conforms to the Budget, and no one has appeared before the committee in either of the two years asking for an increase or decrease of the item. Consequently it is useless to stir up a row here over something that could have been remedied at the proper time by proper action taken in proper form.

Mr. SMITH. The point I wanted to make was that it is to be supposed that the wonderful omnipotent Budget would not seriously jeopardize anything that we ought to do by the lack of a proper appropriation to do that thing. I was informed last year that there was, under the head of southern field crops, an adequate appropriation. A member of the Agricultural Department, not a member of the Cabinet, said to me today, "We could use more money, especially in view of the fact that a new line of investigation is now being developed in the South Atlantic States, where the conditions for the propagation and increase in the number and the destructiveness of this pest are fivefold what they are in the Western States." Then I asked why the amount was not estimated for. I am not quoting him exactly, but in effect he said, "The amount was all within the sum allotted to agriculture by the Budget." I asked what the amount had been. He said, "They said it must be cut $2,000,000."

Now the monstrous proposition comes before us, gentlemen of the Senate, in the face of the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture issued a statement to the press that never before in the history of agriculture in America had the pests been as destructive as in 1922.

There is a peculiar pest known as the corn borer, and unless it is eradicated—not checked, but eradicated—it threatens to destroy the entire Indian corn crop of America. The only way in the world we can deal with that pest is by eradicating it. It is as insidious in its effect as the boll weevil, in that it does not appear on the surface and is not amenable to the application of poison. Those are questions that you and I know, and that we come in contact with, and of which we see the menace and the danger.

There were not half a dozen men east of the Mississippi who believed other than that it was a fairy tale about the destructive power of the boll weevil until he struck and bankrupted great sovereign States. Yet we are pottering along with the corn borer. He has entered the New England States. He is threatening the entire Corn Belt. What are we doing to eradicate him? What does this lot of Army officers and hotel keepers know about the menace that confronts the men attempting to raise the billions of bushels of corn that have added to the great wealth of the country? And yet, if representatives from the corn States were to come here to-day and say, "These are the facts, backed by the judgment of the Agricultural Department, and we need a million dollars to destroy the cornstalks and destroy the corn growing in the infested area," we would have to go and ask Mr. Budget whether we could do it if perchance it had not been called to the attention of the committee.

I submit, gentlemen of the Senate, that when this $10,000 appropriation, which was so reasonable and which was supported by the Secretary of Agriculture, was called to the attention of the Senate we should have granted it.

If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I wish to make a further statement, and then I am through. I do not believe that we ought on the floor of the Senate to accept amendments proposing to increase appropriations which have not been passed upon by the department having the matter in charge.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I only wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that I am very much interested in the eradication of the corn borer. It has become quite a pest in New England, it is spreading through New York and Ohio, and will spread all over the country. It seems to me that the appropriation in that instance of $200,000 is very inadequate; but it was recommended not only by the Budget Bureau, which I think is a very useful body, but it was all that was asked by the department itself.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from South Carolina had an opportunity to do something about the matter, for he is on the subcommittee.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly.

Mr. LODGE. And he could have had the amount increased. Why did he not make an effort to get the appropriation for the eradication of the boll weevil—which I think it inadequate—increased in the committee, where he could have done it, and not on the floor of the Senate, where the opportunity is cut off?

Mr. SMITH. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the appropriation in this instance was recommended by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LODGE. I am not discussing the amendment in reference to the sugar-cane product of Louisiana. I am asking the Senator from South Carolina why he did not on the subcommittee try to get the appropriation for the extermination of the boll weevil and the corn borer increased?

Mr. SMITH. It was simply because my attention had not been called to the matter until we had gone over all of the items; but had the Agricultural Department——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina and then I will yield briefly to other Senators.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to answer the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The point I was making was that if the Agricultural Department, which is on the watchtower, had come to us and said, "We need $500,000 for the extermination of the corn borer," and the Budget Bureau had recommended $200,000, my attention would have been at once arrested.

Mr. LODGE. I went before the subcommittee of which the Senator from South Carolina is a member and I called attention to the corn-borer appropriation.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator did.

Mr. LODGE. But the subcommittee of which the Senator from South Carolina is a member—and he was then present—voted me down.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but before we voted the Senator down we turned to the estimates of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LODGE. I know the committee did, but the Senator's attention was called to the matter.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly; but the Agricultural Department had not estimated the item, while the Agricultural Department has estimated for the appropriation in the particular matter now under consideration. My whole argument has been, as I stated just a few moments ago, that I did not believe we ought to adopt amendments to appropriation bills unless they were recommended by those who were charged with the responsibility.

The Agricultural Department did not increase the estimate for the item referred to by the Senator, because the Budget Bureau had said the money was not available; but as to the particular appropriation under discussion they had said it was necessary that an increase be provided. They should have said that an additional amount for the eradication of the boll weevil was necessary, and that an additional amount was also necessary for the extermination of the corn borer.

What I am complaining of, however, is that the Agricultural Department itself is made subservient to the Budget Bureau. What we ought to do is either to curtail the power of the Budget Bureau or absolutely repeal the statute providing for its creation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Merely in conformity with what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has stated, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that in the hearing the official statement that was filed with the Senate committee called attention to the inadequacy of the appropriation referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, and yet the committee did nothing toward enlarging the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. When we turned to the estimates of the Agricultural Department we were not supposed to know just how much money they had remaining on hand of the old appropriation. They had not estimated a dollar of increase. Therefore, relying upon the Agricultural Department, when they stated that there had been an adequate amount estimated for the boll weevil I took it for granted they meant an adequate amount in order to meet its ravages; but when I called on the department to give me the real reason for not recommending the appropriation they said that it was because the amount that was available was limited by the Budget. My entire argument this afternoon has been based upon the ground that the Agricultural Department has estimated that an increase is necessary, and that, finding the facts to be true, we should provide such increased appropriation.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that these appropriations are not granted as a bonus to the farmer, but are merely to aid him to produce more and thereby decrease the cost of living for the benefit of the consumer.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly; I am glad to yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. In reference to the observation made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that if the standing committee reported an amendment increasing the appropriation above that recommended by the Budget Bureau it would be in order, and that, therefore, his thought was to recommit the bill in order to give them that opportunity, I wish to suggest that it would not be necessary even to recommit the bill; that the committee could meet while the bill is under consideration and report an amendment proposing a change in the bill. If the amendment is reported from the committee, it may be offered here on the floor. The committee may consider such items as they see fit while this discussion is proceeding and report an amendment which will be in order without necessitating the recommittal of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to me that there is a great deal of force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. What he suggests would afford a very easy way out of this difficulty. As I understand the Senator from South Carolina, the Department of Agriculture did not make its estimates for these purposes upon its own judgment, but made its estimates to conform to the limitations imposed upon it by the Budget Bureau. If that be true, then, of course, we ought not to be bound by the estimates made by the Agricultural Department, because they do not reflect the judgment of the Agricultural Department as to the requirements and the needs of agriculture, but are merely a submission by the Agricultural Department to the higher will of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. President, the situation which has developed here this evening is a very extraordinary one. If we are bound by the Budget findings, and if the Department of Agriculture is bound by the Budget findings, then when the judgment of the Budget does not meet the judgment of the Agricultural Department and the judgment of Congress there is no relief for the people whatever may be their grievances and whatever may be their needs. If this amendment is declared to be out of order—and probably it is out of order under the rules which now obtain—it seems to me that it is the duty of the Agricultural Committee, pending the consideration of the bill, to have a meeting and reconsider this question; and if it be found that the Agricultural Department and the Budget Bureau have made an estimate which is below the needs and requirements of these great agricultural interests, to bring in an amendment which would meet the situation and remove the difficulty created by the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from North Carolina is an old and experienced Senator, and he knows that the committee at this moment can bring in an amendment proposing to increase every one of these appropriations, if they choose so to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I have stated.

Mr. LODGE. And it is not necessary to recommit the bill in order that that may be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I have stated. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] made the suggestion that this situation could be met by a meeting of the Agricultural Committee and the bringing in of an amendment by them; but I have suggested that in the situation which has developed here it is the duty of the Agricultural Committee to hold a meeting to reconsider this question.

Mr. LODGE. The Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; the Appropriations Committee, whichever it is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. LODGE. It is not necessary that there should be a recommittal of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not said that it would be necessary to recommit the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he had so stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did make that suggestion a little earlier, but the Senator from Florida suggested that the difficulty which I sought to meet by a motion to recommit could be accomplished by a meeting of the committee to reconsider this matter.

Mr. LODGE. The committee can report any amendment that they want to report.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I suggested; and I further said that it is their duty, under the circumstances which have been developed and disclosed here this afternoon, to have such a meeting and bring in an amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if that should take place——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not want to take the Senator from North Carolina off his feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have, but I do not want to take the Senator from North Carolina off the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have finished what I had to say.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to suggest in connection with what has been said that if the Committee on Agriculture should now assemble in one of the committee rooms near the Chamber and undertake to recommend anything, the Appropriations Committee would say, "This matter is closed; we are not going to go into it again; it is all over." So I say the place to act is on the floor. Let the Agricultural Committee recommend, if it chooses to make a recommendation, and then have its recommendation rejected; but what I have suggested is what would happen if the Agricultural Committee should undertake to act. I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the Agricultural Committee has been shorn of its power. It has been stripped of its power by a Budget Bureau, influenced, we are told, by Chicago hotel keepers and ex-Army officers.

Mr. LODGE. The Agricultural Committee has taken jurisdiction of a proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Committee on Agriculture has lost its jurisdiction over this measure because it has gone into the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, why can not the Committee on Appropriations meet and bring in an amendment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that could be done; but will it be done? If the Budget Bureau tells it not to do so, it would probably be opposed to taking action, because the Budget Bureau is becoming all powerful with this Republican Congress.

Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion that, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has suggested, this is not any bonus to the farmers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not want to interfere, but it does seem to me that Senators ought not to state that the rules are what they are not. The rule has not taken away from the standing committees of the Senate their power; and under the first paragraph of Rule XVI amendments may be recommended by the standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. They may be recommended, very properly.

Mr. CURTIS. Then they are in order, if recommended.

Mr. HEFLIN. They may be recommended. Now, here is one that is recommended. I am indorsing it. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; but let us see what fate overtakes it in a moment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator a quorum of the committee?

Mr. HEFLIN. No. The Budget is the quorum. [Laughter in the galleries and on the floor.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the occupants of the galleries that under the rules demonstrations in the galleries are not in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I was about to say, this is not any bonus to the farmer. We hear frequently here of late from certain papers in the East urging that we should be very careful about what sort of a farm credit bill we pass; that the farmer is receiving a bonus of this kind and that. This is not any bonus to him. This is an effort to destroy a parasite that is seeking to destroy the cane industry of the United States. I have seen the Congress, since I have been a Member of it, appropriate money to kill wolves in the West that committed depredations upon the sheep that graze on the plains—men hired, ammunition furnished, guns bought to shoot wolves, to protect sheep grazing with their offspring upon the broad plains of the West.

The Government was putting up the money to destroy wolves that were seeking to destroy the sheep industry of the United States. Here we are undertaking to have a little money, $10,000, appropriated to destroy a pest, a parasite, in the South, in the sugar-cane fields of all the Southern States—$10,000! The Secretary of Agriculture says we ought to have it; the Senators from the agricultural States down there say we ought to have it; and a Budget Bureau, composed and influenced by hotel proprietors and Army officers, is the only thing that stands between us and the much-needed $10,000.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says that if we permit this amendment to come in there are other Senators that would like to have their amendments come in. Mr. President, I submit that that is not the way to legislate. What are we coming to? If any amendment is right, it ought to be passed, I do not care how many more are pending. Are you going to turn down an honest, meritorious amendment, when it is right, because somebody else has an amendment that he would like to have adopted? Let us try out each amendment on its merits, and let us serve notice on this Budget Bureau now that it is not quite as big as it thinks it is. It is not bigger than Congress, according to my judgment. It is not bigger than the Cabinet or the President. I think it is high time that we get some common sense into those who are undertaking to tell Congress what we shall appropriate for this purpose and that to serve the needs of a struggling people like the agricultural classes of the United States.

I remarked here a few days ago, and it can not be repeated too often, to those who think the farmers are again becoming prosperous, that four-fifths of their farms are under mortgage, and if they were sold to-day under the hammer they could not pay the debts for which they are mortgaged. Their crops are mortgaged. Their live stock are mortgaged. Here we are asking for $10,000 additional to aid the cane industry in all the Southern States, and we are up against a point of order and a Budget Bureau composed of Army officers and hotel proprietors! It is up to us to repudiate the unreasonable and arbitrary action of this arrogant Budget Bureau.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to have the attention for just a minute of the acting chairman of the Agricultural Committee. I know the acting chairman of that committee is a friend of agriculture. I know that he does not wish to pursue a course which would be unjust and unfair to that great interest.

Mr. HEFLIN. We all feel that way about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit to the Senator, the acting chairman of the Agricultural Committee—and I am going to ask him to consider this—that he ought either to withdraw his point of order and let us deal with this question upon its merits or he ought to allow the matter to go over until he can call his committee together and make an investigation into the merits of these suggested increases. I do not mean that the Senator should act upon that immediately; but I hope that he will let this matter go over, not insisting upon his point of order at this time, and give consideration to the suggestion I am making, that he either ultimately withdraw it or have his committee meet and make another investigation of this matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. With reference to the request of the Senator from North Carolina as to the policy I would pursue in this matter, I desire to say that the point of order was made, and properly so, by a member of the subcommittee, with the chairman's full consent. The point of order has been sustained by the Chair. Therefore there is no remedy at this time so far as the parliamentary situation goes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not know that the Chair had sustained the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. There has been no ruling upon this particular matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair made a ruling some time ago.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I did not understand that. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Before the Chair rules, I should like to be heard on the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair made a ruling some time ago.

Mr. HEFLIN. None of us understood it.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask what the ruling of the Chair was? I have been sitting here, listening very intently, and I did not hear it.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to conclude my remarks, Mr. President.

Mr. RANSDELL. What was the ruling of the Chair, please?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that the point of order was well taken.

Mr. HEFLIN. None of us heard it down this way.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought I was recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not yielded the floor, but I yielded to the Senator. I want to say, though, before the Senator proceeds, that I said I wanted to be heard before the Chair ruled, and I was proceeding, and I thought the Chair was holding his ruling in abeyance. We expected to take some step when the Chair did rule, and until the Senator from Oregon made the statement that he did I never knew that the Chair had ruled.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had not heard the ruling of the Chair. While the Chair suggested several times that he was ready to rule, I thought he did not make a ruling because the debate was going on. If, however, the Chair has made a ruling, and that is final, and can not be changed, then I hope the acting chairman of the committee will call his committee together for the purpose of bringing in an amendment, if he finds it proper to do so, to obviate this difficulty.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was about to remark to the Senator who has just taken his seat that a few moments ago I stated to some of the Senators that I would call a meeting of the Agricultural Committee for 10.30 to-morrow to consider some of these emergency matters, and those who have any amendments of that kind can present them to the committee at that time. No one wants to impair agriculture or do it a wrong; and I know that I express the views of both the Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee when I say that they want every opportunity given to those who have demands upon the Government to have them met; and if further investigation will do it, I can say to the Senators present that they shall have that opportunity to-morrow at 10.30.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is all right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I had intended all the time to offer an amendment and have it referred to the Agricultural Committee, and then to ask the Senate to defer this question until the Agricultural Committee had acted upon the amendment proposed. I am going to offer it now.

Mr. HEFLIN. With that statement, I am willing for the matter to rest until we can have a meeting of the committee and go into the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield the floor?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask its reference to the Agricultural Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be received and so referred.

Mr. FERNALD obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, may that amendment be read?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment is the same amendment that was offered from the floor—on page 30, line 7, to increase the amount in the bill by striking out "$94,115" and inserting in lieu thereof "$104,115."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the point I desire to make is that if there is to be a reference it would be the duty of the Chair to refer the amendment to the committee having jurisdiction, which is the Committee on Appropriations, and not the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, on the point that is made——

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senate can control it, of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I wanted to say. The Senator from Louisiana has made a request for the reference of his amendment. In all courtesy to the Senator, both committees having jurisdiction of this matter, it should go to the committee that he desires.

Mr. LENROOT. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has not jurisdiction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, it has. It can propose amendments to this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. But it has not jurisdiction over appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know; but it can propose amendments to this appropriation bill, and if proposed they will be in order. I am only protesting that if the Senator desires a hearing before a committee having jurisdiction he is entitled to have his request complied with.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield, the only point I had to make with regard to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana was that it was not necessary for him to take this course at all. The committee may bring the matter in to-morrow as an original amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is entitled to the credit for his proposal, though, if he wants it.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not mean that; but I can not, by unanimous consent, permit an appropriation measure to be referred to a committee that has not jurisdiction of the appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Chair has the right to determine the reference without unanimous consent, unless it is challenged by a motion. Then, of course, in that event the Senate has a right to determine it.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the position I take is that either of these committees can bring in an amendment to this bill. It was understood when we sent these bills to the general Appropriations Committee that we were not going entirely to divorce committees like the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from control of these measures. Of course, the Senate can order the amendment referred; but I am only appealing to the Chair that as the Senator from Louisiana requests that this be done, and it is in order to refer it to either committee, the request should be complied with.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine allow me to offer an amendment to be printed?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield; yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment to this bill, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that the Senator from Louisiana offered his amendment and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Chair said that it was so referred. The Chair will entertain a motion, if any Senator desires to make it, to refer it to any other committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To which committee was it referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin does not question the statement that if the amendment is reported by the standing Committee on Agriculture and Forestry it will be in order if offered to this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not. The only point I desire to make—and I think a very serious precedent is about to be made here—is that amendments to appropriation bills should not be referred to a committee that does not have jurisdiction, although another committee may technically have the right to offer amendments.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, under the interpretation of the Senator from Wisconsin there is only one committee of the Senate. This is an agricultural bill. This bill is reported to this body by the chairman of the Agricultural Committee.

I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, and it should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Then the rules control it, after it is referred to that committee, as I understand it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is already referred.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; it is already referred.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, if that is true, I want to say that you might have an entire appropriation bill before the Senate, and at the request of a Senator it could be referred to a committee that has not jurisdiction. I do not see how an amendment to an appropriation bill can have a greater right than the bill itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am sure the Senate sees the possibilities of this situation. Every Senator knows it is the custom here for Senators to rise in their places, and, with very little attention paid to us by anyone else, offer amendments intended to be proposed to some bill that is coming out of the Committee on Appropriations. Then, without any other Senator knowing anything about it, we may ask that the amendment be referred to a committee which has not considered the appropriation bill, and that committee, whether it be the Committee on Agriculture, or the Committee on Military Affairs, in the case of the War Department appropriation bill, or the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the case of the naval appropriation bill, may report to the Senate a flood of amendments to be attached, in order, to an appropriation bill, and the appropriation subcommittee, composed in part of members of the Committee on Agriculture, or the other committees, will know nothing about them, will have no opportunity to know anything about them, and we can absolutely destroy the symmetry of any appropriation bill brought in by the Appropriations Committee.

I think the Senator from Wisconsin is absolutely right in this matter. If we are going to proceed in this way, as is now proposed, we might just as well revise our whole procedure and give up the effort toward reform which we made a year ago.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is an example of it. The Committee on Appropriations has no idea what that amendment is.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think there is nearly as much evil in the situation as the Senator from New York or the Senator from Wisconsin suggests. I asked these Senators, who had an idea that the appropriations were not adequate to meet the situation, to come before the Committee on Agriculture, because of the fact that that committee will have a regular meeting to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be misinformed about it, but the Chair understands that, whether an amendment is referred to a committee or not, any standing committee can come in and propose an amendment to an appropriation bill. If that is true, what difference does it make whether this amendment goes to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or to the Appropriations Committee, or any other committee? If the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry want to propose an amendment, they can do so.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is precisely what I had in mind. I am not speaking about any particular amendment at all, or any particular provision of this bill, but the Committee on Agriculture can meet, and if it reports and recommends certain amendments which will be in order on the floor, there is no way that situation can be avoided.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. It is the general situation, rather than a particular aspect, of which I speak.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think it proper, in the handling of the fiscal problems of the Government, involving $3,000,000,000, to proceed in this way? Would the Senator believe it wise, at this point in the procedure in connection with this bill, to refer 50 amendments to the Committee on Agriculture without the knowledge of the Committee on Appropriations? How will you ever have any idea what the total of a bill is to be?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not discussing a straw man. If to-morrow the Committee on Agriculture, after listening to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, believe that there is a real evil existing in permitting the corn borer to spread into Maine and New York, when it should be confined to one section, and he desires to recommend an amendment, he would be rendering a public service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can he not go before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McNARY. The subcommittee may not be in session. I am not particular which committee has the matter before it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can not the Senator call it into session? He is the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. McNARY. I made my suggestion because the Committee on Agriculture will have a regular meeting to-morrow—not for this purpose—and I thought those Senators who have grievances could well come there without going before other committees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Committee on Military Affairs is not busy. I can have an amendment referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and if they see fit to report it they can do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the new rule we adopted is a substitute for paragraph 1 of rule 16. Paragraph 2 of rule 16 reads as follows:

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LENROOT. It has to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So if that is followed, the bill can not be disposed of to-morrow, but these amendments will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. It does not matter, in my opinion, whether these are called amendments or not, a Senator can appear there in person to-morrow if he wants to, and the committee can report an amendment. That is the point I make in this particular instance. I am not interested about where the amendments are referred. I say the Committee on Agriculture has jurisdiction to report to-morrow upon these, whether they are called amendments or additions to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has made its ruling on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana. The Chair does not think, however, that that is a good policy, and the Chair is going to refer the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] to the Committee on Appropriations, subject to the right of the Senator from Ohio to make a motion to have it referred elsewhere.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. DIAL. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine will allow me——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Louisiana for a moment, I desire to state that I certainly would not wish to take any advantage of him, but, under the rule, unless his amendment is referred to the Committee on Appropriations it will be subject to a point of order to-morrow if offered by the Committee on Agriculture, and I suggest that the Senator, for his own protection, recall his request.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to know whether or not an amendment may be referred to two committees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know of any such reference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine will pardon me a moment, as this situation has come up very unfortunately in the Senator's time and is of some importance——

Mr. FERNALD. I am quite willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say that I was one of those on the Rules Committee who aided in the consolidation of the appropriation bills, and I think it is very important if we are going to carry out the Budget act at all that they should be consolidated. But you can not take away from the standing committees of the Senate, which have jurisdiction over certain matters and give them their particular study, their control of matters of this kind and say that the Senate itself can not act without having a revolution and destroying your Budget system. That is just as sure as that I am standing here.

I intended, if I had the time, to call to the attention of the Senate to-day—I may do so to-morrow—the fact that there is legislation in this bill in reference to the salaries of officers, coming from the Department of Agriculture, an entire reversal of what was determined on two years ago; and that legislation was put in the bill by the House. I am not reflecting on the Senate committee now, but it was provided in the House, by a rule similar to that of the Senate, that they would put the appropriations in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, and that legislation should be confined to the committee having legislative authority to deal with the matter.

This went in in the House, but it is in violation of the spirit of the law. Change of office and change of salary are just as much new legislation as if they wiped out some bureau entirely. The standing rules of the Senate still prevail, providing that an amendment may be offered by a standing committee of the Senate, not the standing committee; that is a protection of the bill, because no one Senator can jump it on the Senate, but it is still the law and always was—it was the law two years ago when any individual Senator could have offered an amendment such as this. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] stood right in the center aisle within the hour and called attention to the fact that the rule would authorize the reference of this amendment to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LENROOT. No; that the Committee on Agriculture could recommend the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the difference?

Mr. LENROOT. Under the rule, the amendment itself must go to the Committee on Appropriations to give that committee jurisdiction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the difference, if the Committee on Agriculture can offer an amendment, in providing that it can not be offered on the floor? That would be an anomaly in the rules, would it not?

Mr. LENROOT. May I read the rule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. It provides that—

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me, in that connection, to say that that proviso does not prevent the reference by the Senate of an amendment to any committee the Senate desires to refer that amendment to, and amendments of this nature are properly referred first to the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter, to authorize such appropriations. The effect of the action which the Senate has taken in referring the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the Committee on Agriculture is this: If the Committee on Agriculture reports the amendment, then before it may be considered by the Senate, if any Senator makes the point of order, the amendment will necessarily be referred also to the Appropriations Committee, under clause 2 of Rule XVI, and it will delay the final action of the Senate on the Agricultural appropriation bill until the Appropriations Committee has had the amendment before it for one day. But the Senate is entitled to have the opinion of the Committee on Agriculture on an appropriation that specifically relates to agriculture, if the Senate desires to have the committee pass upon the matter. Indeed, under Rule XVI the amendment should first go to the Committee on Agriculture.

I apprehend that Senators will not make an objection to the consideration of the amendment after it has been moved by the Committee on Agriculture, assuming that the committee reports the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. If it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the only effect of it will be to delay the passage of this bill until the Committee on Appropriations has also passed upon the amendment or has had the amendment before it for one day.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he does not think a proper construction of the rule is that although the amendment must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, without a reference to it, the Committee on Agriculture, for instance, to-morrow, these amendments being introduced to-day, could move these particular amendments?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry could move the amendment if it desired to move.

Mr. LENROOT. And be within the rules?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and be within the rules.

Mr. LENROOT. And it would not be subject to a point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so; and that is why I say the position of the Senator from Wisconsin is an anomaly, that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry can come in and move an amendment to the bill, and it will be in order.

Mr. LENROOT. If it has the day before been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Committee on Appropriations does not have to act upon it.

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. If any Senator, after the Committee on Agriculture has reported the amendment or moved it, makes the point that it has not been in the Committee on Appropriations for 24 hours, the amendment would go there and the Senate would suspend action on the Agricultural Department appropriation bill until the expiration of 24 hours.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As bearing on the point the Senator from Arkansas mentions, the question that would arise at that point in the proceedings, in the case of the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], would be whether or not the reference of the amendment that has already been made and was made this afternoon prior to prospective action by the Committee on Agriculture did not comply with the rule. The rule says: "One day before action." Whether it means that it must be referred after it has been recommended by a standing committee or not, the rule is silent.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think, under the language of clause 2, Rule XVI, that if anyone raises the point of order, even though the amendment has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, it perhaps would go also to the Committee on Appropriations. The only effect of the point of order would be to delay its consideration for 24 hours, and of course the Senate would not insist upon acting upon the bill until the Committee on Appropriations had had the amendment for that length of time. If some Members of the Senate did insist upon it, there would probably be enough Members present who would want the matter passed upon by the Senate to defer action until the 24 hours had expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, just one further word before I conclude. I want to say that I believe in the interest of economy it is wise to have the appropriation bills considered by one committee. It is wise to have these matters considered where there are new matters by a committee before action. But when we come down to the question that there is nothing involved except the increase or decrease of an appropriation, when there is no new matter, as is the case in this instance, when it is only a question as to whether the appropriation is adequate, and we see under the rules of the Senate that the Senate as a body can not pass on the adequacy of an appropriation, can not increase it or decrease it, then we see that the new rules have wiped out all power in the Senate to attend to the business of the Nation so far as appropriation bills are concerned.

I am sure that it was not the intention of the Senate, when the rule was adopted, to prevent the Senate from passing on the question of how many dollars are needed for any particular project. That is all that is involved in the appropriation covered by the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right on that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The construction of the rule by the Senator from Alabama is that the adequacy of the amount, when the subject matter is already in the bill, is a just subject for the Senate; but if new matter comes in with an appropriation, then that falls under the rule that it must go before the committee. But as to an increase or decrease of an appropriation to carry out a project that is already in the bill and established, it is within the province of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so, and I think if that is not the construction of the rule, then the Senate has ceased to do business, and undoubtedly that was not the intention.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that in that particular the new rule is no different from the old rule. The old rule reads just exactly the same. The old rule reads as follows:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provision of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The last phrase is changed to read:

Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly, but this appropriation is all subject to a point of order or else none of it. The motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is not subject to a point of order on that basis, because there is no limit to the appropriation. It is a new appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; the $94,000 is pursuant to a Budget estimate and recommendation of the Appropriations Committee, while the Senator from Louisiana proposed to increase the item.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that, but it is nothing that came over from last year or that is fixed in the statutes of the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; but under the new rule, as well as under the old rule, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me one word further?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The purpose of the rule as now framed is that an amendment of this nature proposed by a Senator should take the course which the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana has taken. It shall be referred first to a standing committee and then, if moved by a standing committee, it shall also go to the Committee on Appropriations. It was properly referred as an individual amendment to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and it is doubtful whether under the rules, objection having been made, the amendment could have been referred in the first instance to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me to move an executive session?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, January 11, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our hope and trust are in Thee, O God our Heavenly Father. As we live under Thy law, help us to do so lovingly and generously, and we shall find the burden light and the yoke sweet. Protect the sanctities of American home life and the usefulness of all Christian institutions. May the watchwords of our country be righteousness, humanity, the common good, and an intelligent, healthy, happy social order. Preserve our land from a destructive materialism that thrives on selfishness and hypocrisies. Crush the seeds of ill will in the soils of the earth. This day let Thy work appear unto Thy servants and Thy glory unto their children. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORT—DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a conference report for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers a conference report for printing. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

PENSION BILL.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I report a special privileged bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. A. 13736) to increase the pensions of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and of widows and former widows of such persons.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the so-called privileged bill.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary and ask that it may be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution (H. Res. 425) authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the official conduct of Harry M. Daughtery, Attorney General of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. On behalf of Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, a member of the Judiciary Committee, who is ill this morning, I submit the unanimous-consent request that he be given one week within which to file minority views in regard to the report just made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] have one week in which to file minority views on the report just made. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to that, with the understanding that it is not to interfere with the consideration of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONFERENCE REPORT—NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, 15, 17, 20, 29, and 33.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 13, 14, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 30, and 31, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and argee to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,594,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,475,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "$9,903,000, of which sum an amount not exceeding $903,000 shall be available for the purchase, manufacture and installation of antiaircraft guns for the U. S. S. Maryland, and ammunition and fire-control instruments required for such guns"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$135,340"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"No part of any appropriation made for the Navy shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services of civilians and of enlisted men of the Navy, except as herein expressly authorized: Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time 34 enlisted men of the Navy: Provided further, That enlisted men detailed to the naval dispensary and the radio communication service shall not be regarded as detailed to the Navy Department in the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 1 and 2: Changes the phraseology of the appropriation "Pay, miscellaneous," with respect to traveling allowances to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force so as to accord with the provisions of section 12 of the act approved June 10, 1922 (Public No. 235, 67th Cong.), as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 3: Clarifies the intent of the provisos on the appropriation for the experimental and research laboratory with respect to the employment of civilians, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 4: Appropriates $19,000, as proposed by the Senate, for continuing the collection and preparation for publication of the naval records of the recent war.

On No. 5: Appropriates $78,720, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $76,420, as proposed by the House, for salaries, office of the Judge Advocate General.

On No. 6: Appropriates $55,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $57,450, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries, office of Chief of Naval Operations.

On No. 7: Changes the phraseology of the appropriation "Transportation and recruiting," with respect to travel allowance to enlisted men of the Navy, as proposed by the Senate, so as to make the appropriation unquestionably available for expenditure as contemplated by law.

On No. 8: Strikes out the authorization proposed by the Senate for the publication of ships' newspapers on board ships.

On No. 9: Makes the appropriation "Contingent, Bureau of Navigation," available for the transportation of the effects of deceased men of the Naval Reserve Force, both enrolled and transferred, instead of enrolled men only as at present, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 10: Makes the appropriations for naval training stations available specifically for "heat, light, and water," as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 11 and 12, relating to the Naval Reserve Force: Appropriates $3,594,000 instead of $3,994,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $2,994,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 13 and 14, relating to the Nautical Almanac Office: Designates each of the two positions authorized in excess of $1,800 per annum as "assistant," as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 15 and 16, relating to the appropriation "Engineering": Appropriates $14,440,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $14,590,000, as proposed by the Senate, and authorizes $1,475,000 for pay of classified employees, instead of $1,350,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 17: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $170,400, as proposed by the Senate, for pay of technical employees in the Bureau of Engineering.

On No. 18: Appropriates $180,000 for pay of technical employees in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, instead of $170,000, as proposed by the House, and $190,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 19 and 20, relating to the Bureau of Ordnance: Appropriates $9,903,000 for "Ordnance and ordnance stores," as proposed by the Senate, instead of $9,000,000, as proposed by the House, providing in connection therewith that an amount not exceeding the increase shall be available for purchase, manufacture, and installation of antiaircraft guns for the U. S. S. Maryland and for ammunition and fire-control instruments for use with such guns; and strikes out the appropriation of $550,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances.

On Nos. 21 and 22, relating to the appropriation "Pay of the Navy": Changes the phraseology with respect to extra pay to men reenlisting to conform to the language contained in section 10 of the act approved June 10, 1922 (Public, No. 235, 67th Cong.), as proposed by the Senate, and provides specifically for the payment of allowances authorized by law to members of the Naval Reserve Force class 1 (Fleet Naval Reserve), as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 23: Makes the clothing and small stores fund available specifically for uniform gratuity to enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 24 and 25, relating to the Bureau of Yards and Docks: Appropriates $53,350 for salaries of nontechnical employees, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $135,340 for salaries of technical employees, instead of $120,000, as proposed by the House, and $150,340, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 26 to 30, both inclusive, relating to the Marine Corps: Supplies an omission in phraseology; provides specifically for the uniform gratuity authorized by law to members of the fleet Marine Corps Reserve; changes the phraseology of the appropriation for mileage so as to provide for traveling allowances in accordance with the act approved June 10, 1922 (Public, No. 235, 67th Cong.), all as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the limitation proposed by the Senate with respect to travel abroad on foreign vessels by officers, and provides for funeral expenses of accepted applicants for enlistment, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 31: Makes a direct appropriation of $19,097,000 for "Increase of the Navy," as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20,000,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 32: Restores the limitation proposed by the House with respect to diverting naval appropriations to meet expenses of the Navy Department proper, amended so as specifically to except enlisted men on duty at the naval dispensary and in attendance on the distant-control station of the Arlington radio station.

On No. 33: Restores the matter proposed by the Senate to be stricken out of the limitation concerning the purchase of articles that can be manufactured or produced in a navy yard, so that time and navy yard facilities shall continue to be a factor in the determination by the Navy Department of the course it shall pursue.

PATRICK H. KELLEY,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
WM. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate have reached a complete agreement and have brought back no legislative propositions. The Senate voted 33 amendments to the bill. Nineteen of them were textual changes made in the main to meet suggestions of the Comptroller of the Treasury or to make the language of the appropriations conform to the provisions of the pay bill passed last year. Twelve amendments made changes in the sums carried. The total amount of increase added to the bill by the Senate was $1,797,840. The amount agreed to in conference of that sum was $649,990, or a reduction of $1,147,850 in the amount added by the Senate. The chief items of increase by the Senate were $150,000 for engineering, from which the Senate receded; $550,000 for torpedoes and appliances, from which the Senate receded; and $1,000,000 for the Naval Reserve Force, of which the conferees agreed upon $600,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield on that particular item. During the consideration of the bill in the House and when the bill was sent to conference I directed some inquiry as to this item providing for the pay of the Naval Reserve Force. The conference committee has agreed to an appropriation of $600,000 additional to that carried in the House bill, namely, $3,400,000 instead of $2,800,000. This, I understand, provides for retainer pay of the Naval Reserve Force?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is right, among other things.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to know just how much pay will be apportioned to officers and enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force and how many officers and men it will provide for?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The total sum proposed will provide for about 1,900 officers and 5,000 men. Of the $600,000 increase, about $416,000 will be used for the pay of officers and $129,000 for the pay of men.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much altogether of this $3,400,000 will be used for pay of officers, and how much for the men, and how many of each class will be allowed out of these respective appropriations?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. For the pay of officers it will be about $1,000,000 altogether, and for the pay of men about half a million dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many officers and men in each class?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is only one class.

Mr. STAFFORD. I mean how many officers is it estimated will be permitted to take this training and how many men in the Reserve Force will be permitted to take this training from this appropriation of $3,400,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Approximately 1,992 officers and 5,063 men.

Mr. GARNER. That is the total under the $3,400,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In prior years, after the World War, this appropriation has varied from $18,000,000 down to $600,000. How many officers and men were really receiving training under this appropriation for the last fiscal year and how many for the present fiscal year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that no retainer pay had been allowed out of the current appropriation up to the first of the year. The officers and men were all in a nonpay status. On the 1st of January it was anticipated that 1,500 officers and 3,500 men would have fully complied with all the rules and regulations of the department as to drill and cruising, and the department proposed at that time to transfer them to the class where they would be entitled to retainer pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. And from that time on they will receive retainer pay?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. From that time on they will receive retainer pay; that is, one month's pay for the balance of this current year. Then at the end of the year the department anticipates that 1,992 officers and 5,000 men will be entitled to retainer pay, and next year those who have properly qualified will receive retainer pay for the full year.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is required under the Navy regulations to entitle them, officers and men, to this retainer pay?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They are required to give at least two months' service during each term of enrollment in addition to their regular drills during each year. A certain number of drills are prescribed during the year. I have forgotten the exact number.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand they must give two months' time each year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; during the four-year period. During the four years they must serve on cruises or in other drills of that sort, week-end drills, a time at least aggregating two months out of the four years. Now, they get two months' retainer pay each year in addition to the two months' pay which they receive when cruising during their four-year enrollment. They must drill throughout the year and perform practically the same drills as are required for the National Guard for the compensation which the men receive in that service when they comply with the regulations of the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. They get the full pay of their rank for the two months' service that they are obliged to perform during the four-year period?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. Then there is no other pay. The retainer pay covers all the other drills required by the Navy Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any obligation on the part of the members of the reserve enlisted force to attend drills throughout the year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They can not get the pay unless they do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that; but are they privileged to remain in the Naval Reserve enlisted force without doing any drill work during the year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Until the end of their enrollment but without pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I differ with the gentleman that it is comparable with the National Guard service. Under the Army reorganization act the National Guard men are not entitled to pay for their services throughout the year in drills not to exceed five per month unless 60 per cent of the complement of the force is present drilling. Here I understand three or four men or even one man may come around and go through the motions of a drill and receive a dollar a night.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; they do not receive a dollar a night; only their retainer pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is nothing in the Naval Regulations requiring a certain number of men, as is required in the Army reorganization act, to be present to entitle them to one-thirtieth of a month's pay for the night's service.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman is entirely right in his statement and in the criticism that he has made in that respect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is merely giving away money for gathering around in social concourse. I am not criticizing the matter of pay for the officers and men during their annual cruise in the four-year period, but I am criticizing the statement of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt to the effect that it is comparable to the service of the National Guard, because in the Navy there is no requirement of a certain complement of men to be present at the drills to entitle them to the pay.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The number of hours required in the naval service, I believe, is greater than the number of hours required in the National Guard. But I am not familiar with the details of the National Guard, and I am only giving my impression about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The hearings show that these men in the Naval Reserve may come around once a week, few or many. In the case of the National Guard a certain complement is required that is essential to company command and company drill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They must train two months out of the four years in addition to their drills.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the National Guard men go to camp they get the full pay of their rank. In the case of the Naval Reserve it is very nice for young men to go on an Eagle boat—a Ford Eagle boat, with which the gentleman from Michigan is acquainted—to go down the bay for a little cruise on Saturday afternoon and come back Monday. It is very delightful in New York Bay to go down to Sandy Hook and the Jersey coast and receive pay for the time of their outing.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that I would favor legislation if it were brought in covering that subject. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has such legislation in mind. I think he has in mind legislation that would correct some of the abuses to which the gentleman from Wisconsin has called the attention of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to state to the membership of the House that what the gentleman says is exactly true. I have consulted with him and obtained his views, and they are in entire accord with those that I entertain. If put into effect they would greatly improve what is known as the Reserve Force of the Navy and make more definite, along the line suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the training of these men.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] and I have talked about it many times, and I repeat that our views are entirely in accord; and I have promised myself that as far as I am able his views shall be impressed upon any bills covering this matter.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have covered practically all of the important matters embraced by the conference report. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. MADDEN. Before the gentleman from South Carolina is recognized I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield two or three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I did not know he desired time. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have borrowed this time from the House rather than from my friend, lest some one, thinking much less of him than I do, might be cruel enough to say that he bargained with me for the loan, anticipating the use to which I proposed to put it.

With the agreement of the House to this conference report the work especially assigned to him is done, and, as usual, well done, and soon his face will turn toward the devoted constituency that sent him here to represent it—a great duty which he has at all times and upon all occasions performed sanely.

I am grateful to the people who gave me the opportunity to know PATRICK H. KELLEY, a favorite son of Michigan, an orator who has delighted us with an elegance of speech which but few men possess, with an order of intelligence not commonly found among men, and withal a simplicity of manner and bearing that have placed him high upon the list of gentlemen—a statesman who cares more for the public weal than for his personal gain.

When he came to this House he was at once accepted by the universal comradeship which it is reputed to maintain and which has added to its world-wide fame. Its membership at once recognized his fitness for the great work set before him, and without attempt he soon assumed a natural leadership which many of us were pleased to follow. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I have never opposed his views that I did not believe then, as I believe now, that I might be wrong, because of my great confidence in both his wisdom and his sincerity. Early I offered him my friendship and received his in return. We spoke to and of each other as friends; but what is a better test for lasting friendship, we treated each other as such.

His work fills a great volume and is impressed with his delightful personality, because he has been in all the things which he has accomplished, and in all the things where he was unsuccessful, temperate in his language and tolerant in his treatment, while he struggled by his earnestness to convince others without an effort to persuade them.

He has been known among us all as a man of resolution whose judgment would surrender to a better argument made by a man of sense, but like the "great oak, he would not break, but sometimes bent for friendship's sake." There is not a Member of this House who does not believe that the breaking of this tie is but temporary and that the call will soon reach his ear and demand his return to the public service for which he is so well fitted by nature and so fully prepared by education.

I speak of my friend in public, as I have spoken of him in private, with the always lingering hope and earnest wish that our association may be renewed as our friendship will continue. Tendering him all that I have, I wish deep down within me that success may attend him wherever he goes and in everything he does, and I do not bid him good-by, as one man usually does another, but as friend parts with his friend. I unite with the whole membership of the House in the use of the simple words, "If it must be so." [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, of course I am in hearty accord with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has said, and on a previous occasion I endeavored to pay tribute to the great public service rendered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

I want now to talk about this Naval Reserve item about which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] have been speaking.

Of the increased appropriation carried by this bill $600,000 is due to the Naval Reserve item. The Senate added $1,000,000. Your conferees finally agreed on $600,000. The people who are interested in the Naval Reserve think that even $1,000,000 is less than they should have. I am a firm believer in the maintenance of such an organization; but I am also convinced that unless Congress shall repeal the existing law and enact legislation regulating the units to receive compensation and requiring attendance of a sufficient number of men at a drill to make the drill of any value, instead of making larger appropriations in the future we should appropriate less. In the National Guard 50 per cent of the officers and 60 per cent of the men must attend in order to constitute a legal drill entitling the officers to receive pay.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How would it do to restrict the pay in future legislation to such places as New York and other ports where officers and men can actually give service?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is just what I am going to say in a minute or two, and show good reasons for it. The National Guard reorganization act very wisely provided that the men should not be penalized if they attended a drill and their officers failed to secure a sufficient attendance to enable them to receive compensation. So that act provides that the men shall receive pay provided that during the year they attend 60 per cent of the drills that are held. Now, when it comes to the Naval Reserve organization, in cities along the coast there are live organizations doing good work, not doing what my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says, merely having an outing on Saturday afternoons, but really maintaining an effective organization. That is true of many places on each coast, on the Great Lakes, and on the Gulf. But what do we find throughout the interior of the country? Why, according to the hearings, at Omaha, Nebr., there are 17 officers and 5 men. What kind of a Naval Reserve drill can be held with 17 officers drilling 5 men? Similar conditions exist in Oklahoma and other States. I call them bathtub reservists, because there is no chance for them to be afloat unless they get into a bathtub.

It would be futile, for instance, to attempt to establish an active Naval Reserve organization in an inland county in my district by bringing some men together in a hall in town and having them imagine that they are at sea. That is ridiculous; and I think these expenditures should be restricted to those places where it is possible for the men actually to receive some training which would fit them for service when needed. If the money appropriated here was applied only to those places where there can be actual service on the water, there would be more money than is necessary for the purpose; but if you are going to distribute it all over the country as it is now distributed—to men in Idaho, Kansas, and Nebraska, where there are about five officers to drill two or three men—it will bring the organization into disrepute. I think it is within the province of the Navy Department by regulation to remedy this situation; but if they do not do it, I hope the Naval Affairs Committee before the next appropriation bill is considered in the House will repeal the present law and enact legislation restricting this Naval Reserve compensation to those units which can indulge in training actually preparing them for service.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if there are no other questions, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13696, the independent offices appropriation bill, and pending that I would like to see if we can agree on time for closing general debate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have requests on this side for 75 minutes. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee want?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that he has the advantage of this side by about 50 minutes. But I do not propose to stand on that. I have only three requests remaining on this side, and two of the gentlemen are not now present, and I am not sure whether they will want the time or not. I am willing to agree on 75 minutes on a side and balance the books as to yesterday. I think if we could agree on less time I might be able to give the gentleman some of my time, but I am not sure of that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state that I have promised the time I indicated. I appreciate what the gentleman says as to having the advantage of time on this side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have stated that I am willing to balance the books as far as yesterday is concerned. I have requests from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TURNER], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I do not know whether they will want that time or not.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I suggest that the gentleman take the same amount of time that I do; and if he does not want it, all right. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, to be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further general debate be limited to three hours, to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. WOOD of Indiana was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, there exists to-day in 15 or more States, those States that have adopted an income tax or a classified property tax, a situation, so far as the national banks are concerned, that amounts to a crisis and calls for early congressional action. This is my excuse for again calling the matter to the attention of the House.

The crisis arises by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Merchants' National Bank of Richmond v. the City of Richmond (256 U. S. 635), which changes the interpretation hitherto given to section 5219 of the Revised Statutes. National banks, being instrumentalities of the Federal Government, can not be taxed by the States except by virtue of the authority given by the National Government. The National Government gave that authority in an act passed in 1869, and contained in section 5219, authorizing the States to tax the shares of national banks, subject to two limitations; "that the tax shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located and not elsewhere."

Up to the time of the Richmond decision it had generally been assumed by the States—and as far as I know that assumption has never been seriously questioned—that the words "other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such States" referred only to such capital as came into direct competition with the capital of national banks, and did not apply to the securities and investments of an individual citizen. Acting upon this assumption, many of the States grouped national banks with State banks and trust companies for the purposes of taxation and taxed them as a group at a rate and in a manner different from those that applied to other corporations and to individuals. Moreover, in the course of the last 12 or 14 years some 22 States, in the interest of establishing a sound tax system, abandoned their unsuccessful attempt to reach intangible personal property under the general property tax, and either adopted what is known as the classified property tax or an individual income tax. The result was in many cases, as, for instance, in the State of New York, where a personal income tax was adopted, that the capital stock of national banks was taxed at a higher rate than bonds or notes in the hands of individual investors.

Then came the decision of the Supreme Court in 1921 in the Richmond case, holding that intangible credits in the hands of individual citizens, such as deposits, notes, bills receivable, bonds, and so forth, were within the rule, and that national bank stock could not be taxed at a higher rate than these forms of investment. The court said:

> By repeated decisions of this court, dealing with the restrictions here imposed, it has become established that while the words "moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" do not include shares of stock in corporations that do not enter into competition with the national banks, they do include something besides shares in banking corporations and others that enter into direct competition with those banks. They include not only moneys invested in private banking, properly so called, but investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness such as normally enter into the business of banking. (Merchants' National Bank of Richmond v. City of Richmond, 256 U. S. at p. 639.)

As a result, to-day bank taxes in practically all of those 22 States that have abandoned the general property taxes are invalid, and national banks in those States are not contributing one cent of money to the support either of the general government of the State or the government of the communities in which they do business; and this situation will continue unless Congress gives relief, for Congress, and Congress alone, can give genuine relief.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. If the States levy a tax in accordance with the provisions of the statute referred to, would not the national banks' stock pay the same as other capital assets of a similar nature?

Mr. MILLS. Let me suggest to my friend from Texas that, of course, New York could tax—and I take New York as an example—at its rate of from 1 to 3 per cent the income derived from the stock of national banks; but, as a matter of fact, national banks are great, strong, prosperous corporations, and such a tax is wholly inadequate, if you compare it with those paid by corporations of a similar character—State banks, for instance, and even manufacturing, industrial, and public-utility corporations, all of which pay a much higher rate of tax.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman contend, that, for instance, the national bank should pay a larger percentage on the income derived from its stock than the money invested by J. Pierpont Morgan & Co.?

Mr. MILLS. No; and I hope the gentleman will not draw that red herring across this trail. I know that the names of Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were used in the Banking and Currency Committee of this House as a means of preventing the House from passing any sound tax measure. As far as I am concerned, I say to the gentleman from Texas that I think all banking institutions that do a strictly banking business, whether incorporated or partnerships, should pay a tax on an equal basis [applause]; but I think it is utterly absurd and worse than absurd that such great and prosperous institutions as the First National Bank of the City of New York and the City National Bank in the city of New York should not be paying to-day a fair tax to the city of New York or the State of New York because some smart people have come down here and have been smart enough to bamboozle Congress by saying that the State of New York has not sufficiently taxed private bankers, and, therefore, Congress ought not let them tax national banks. The situation in New York I do not mind saying, in my judgment, is nothing short of scandalous. For over 20 years national banks and State banks alike in the State of New York have paid 1 per cent tax on the book value of their stock. That tax was adopted with their consent.

For years they paid it, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas, without anyone even suggesting that it was a discrimination, without anyone even suggesting it was burdensome, without anyone even suggesting it was unfair, and then came the Richmond decision, which changed the interpretation of the statute which had been universally accepted, and what did these banks do? Not all of them, I am glad to say, but some of them took advantage of this technical advantage. They not only declined to pay taxes, but they actually brought suit for back taxes running to the year 1920. The lower courts held with the State, but the Court of Appeals was bound by the Richmond decision, and decided in favor of the banks. That means that we will have to refund in the State of New York no less than $18,000,000 of back taxes with interest, and that means that the communities of our State are losing $6,000,000 yearly in taxes from some of the most prosperous corporations in the State. How can anyone justify that situation?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. In a moment. The comptroller of the city of New York estimates that it is going to mean a 5-point increase in our tax rate, and ultimately a 20-point increase. A higher tax rate means higher rents for every man, woman, and child in the city of New York. This decision may bring a great windfall to the stockholders of the national banks, but this profit is taken out of the pockets of their fellow citizens; of their former fellow taxpayers.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I have only two or three minutes left.

Mr. DICKINSON. In Iowa we tax intangible property five mills on the dollar. Does the gentleman mean to say that under this decision the national banks of Iowa would be taxed only a similar amount?

Mr. MILLS. Exactly. People will say, Why should national banks pay an illegal tax? Perhaps they should not. I for one would have considered it wise public policy on the part of the banks to pay this tax as a voluntary contribution rather than to appear as tax dodgers refusing to bear their fair share of the burden. [Applause.] But they seem to have gone further. Far from giving the assistance which we had every right to expect in remedying the situation, I have not noticed any wholehearted cooperation upon the part of national banks, but quite the contrary. How otherwise can you explain that in two years it has been impossible to pass through either House of this Congress a bill that will clear up this tangle? Why, gentlemen, those men ought to have been down here not asking but demanding that Congress should act so that they once more would be in a position to pay their fair share of the burdens of Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there any legislation pending?

Mr. MILLS. I am coming to that. As soon as the situation was recognized, after the Richmond decision, a number of bills were introduced, both in the Senate and in the House. Last June, I think it was, the House Committee on Banking and Currency reported a bill which passed the House, but which, in so far as these 22 States are concerned, is absolutely useless, because all it does is to reenact section 5219 as interpreted by the Supreme Court. The bill has gone to the Senate, and this week the Senate committee has reported the House bill with amendments. It would be improper, obviously, for me at this time to criticize the Senate bill. It would be improper to urge prompt action by the Senate. My sole purpose in speaking here to-day is, in view of the early adjournment of Congress, to call this serious situation to the attention of the Members of this House and to the people of the 22 States, who are vitally interested.

If Congress does not give relief—and it is the only body that can give relief—it is going to continue for a year at least a situation of hopeless confusion in the finances of the State of New York and many other States, a confusion which can be justly laid at the door of the Congress, and for which we will inevitably be held responsible.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Given these circumstances, I, as a Representative of the State of New York, have not felt that I could any longer remain silent. [Applause.]

I desire to put in the RECORD the list of States having a personal income tax and a list of those that have adopted the classified tax on intangibles:

Personal income tax: Massachusetts, New York, Delaware, North Carolina, South Carolina, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Missouri, Virginia, and Oklahoma.

Classified on intangibles: Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kentucky, Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Montana, Virginia, and Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. TURNER]. [Applause.]

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent an agricultural district in Tennessee which is located near Muscle Shoals, Ala. The people I represent are vitally interested in the early development of this great enterprise and can not understand why this plant, which holds in store such vast financial possibilities for the future, should not now be serving them.

This Muscle Shoals question is not a new one to the Members of this body. It has been frequently discussed from various viewpoints in committees and on the floor of this House; therefore I do not hope to surprise anyone with many new ideas or facts during the few brief moments I shall address you on this subject. I shall not go into details as to the origin of this great enterprise, how much it has cost the Government up to date, nor how much it will cost in the future to complete it. I only hope to say something that will open the eyes of this intelligent body of Representatives that it may behold the needs of the people who have been promised much but given little—I refer to the American farmer. They work harder, longer hours, and receive less for their services and less appreciation than any other class of people. Their Representatives, from whom they expect recognition and support in the passage of beneficial laws in our legislative bodies, are usually long on promises and short on acts.

Biographies of our Congressmen reveal that about one-half or more Members of this House were born and reared away down on the farm, where we learned by experience something about the hardships and poor returns for labor; therefore our constituents often wonder why we so soon forget those who were left behind. The farmers of this entire country are looking to us as they never have before to assist them in bringing about better conditions on the farm. The operation of Muscle Shoals will help to bring about this needed relief.

They need more and cheaper fertilizer than they heretofore have been getting from foreign and domestic corporations. They believe their wants can be supplied in abundance at a living price when the Muscle Shoals plant is put in operation and run at full capacity. Why delay them longer in their hopes and anticipations? Why does not this Congress, which is composed of sensible business men, act in a business way and make some practicable disposition of this Muscle Shoals project before the expiration of this term of Congress? Of course it will take quite a large sum of money to complete the work necessary to make this plant a paying proposition; but money wisely expended, as I believe it will be in this case, will bring large returns in the future.

Many million dollars have been spent in the West during the past few years on irrigation projects to make arid lands more valuable and to give better and more prosperous homes for the people.

Two summers ago while on a western trip I was told that the Roosevelt Dam, constructed by the Government for irrigation purposes, had cost the Government several millions of dollars and would or had reclaimed more than 100,000 acres of the most valuable land in the world. Can anyone say this was a bad investment? I think not. The enhanced value of this land, by reason of irrigation, will in a few years pay back to the Government all the money it expended and in addition will pay the State in which this project is located, and indirectly to the Nation, millions of dollars in taxes by reason of increased values; and, besides, it has provided many happy homes to farmers and their families who were fortunate enough to acquire land on this Nile of the West.

For many years the Government has been making large appropriations, running into the billions, for the purpose of maintaining a large standing Army and Navy, for taking care of and educating the Indians, for constructing magnificent Government buildings, digging canals and dredging rivers, buying and preserving large forest reserves and national parks, paying increased pensions to our war heroes and increased salaries to an increased army of Government employees, and so forth. These expenditures and improvements have brought about a large fixed annual expense, to say nothing of the expense of the recently acquired war debt, which the taxpayers have got to meet. This tax, in connection with increased State and county and municipal taxes, has resulted in a great financial burden to the people, more especially to the farmers of the country.

I know from personal experience that some of the best farmers, to say nothing of the poorest, have not been able during the past few years to pay their taxes and make a decent living. I would like to relieve the situation by joining hands at once with my coworkers to place this our most numerous class of people on a higher level, where they can live decently, pay their taxes, educate their children, and have a pittance for old age.

There are many things we might do to relieve distressed conditions of the farmers, but just now I believe the best thing we can do is to take some action toward the completion and disposition of Muscle Shoals.

I have lived on or near the Tennessee River all my life but had never dreamed that God in His infinite wisdom had given His people the foundation on this stream for such a vast business enterprise until I visited Muscle Shoals last summer. It took a world-wide destructive war to open our eyes to this field of undeveloped wealth and possibilities.

When we united with our allies across the seas to check the cruel hand of our German foe we sought a suitable place to manufacture munitions of war at a minimum cost. Of the many places suggested Muscle Shoals was finally selected and the Congress of the United States by act authorized and directed the construction of a water-power dam at this place to furnish power to manufacture ammunition in time of war and fertilizer for the American farmer in time of peace.

More than $80,000,000 has been spent on this work, but it is not completed, and unless a great deal more work is done the whole expenditure, so far as being beneficial to the people, might as well be discarded. Now, after spending this large sum of money, are we as Representatives of our people going to sit idly by and see it go to waste because it might cost a few more million dollars to complete it? I am not in favor of pursuing such a course. I think we should before the expiration of this session of Congress make some permanent disposition of this property.

After much thought and due consideration on this subject, I am of the opinion it would be to the best interest of the country to accept Henry Ford's offer to lease for a term of years. With the exception of a few large corporations whose business might be affected, the people of the entire country are favorable to the acceptance of the Ford offer. The masses have faith in Henry Ford and believe that should he acquire this property he will in a reasonable time be giving the farmers all the fertilizer they need at one-half the price they have paid heretofore; that he will employ thousands of laborers at remunerative wages; that he will build factories, furnaces, and railroads to develop the latent resources to be found in abundance in northern Alabama, southern Tennessee, and other sections of the South. This plant is local as to location; as to financial benefit it will be nation-wide.

The operations of this plant along contemplated lines will bring about such an increased value in property in the South and other sections of the country that the Government will soon receive back indirectly, in taxes, many times the amount expended. When completed the Muscle Shoals project will be the largest single business enterprise in the whole world. If we were acting as individual business men and had as much money invested in a proposition as the Government has in this plant, would we hesitate in placing it on a paying basis? Would we not bend every energy to make it pay us dividends? I am sure you will agree with me that we would. We have a right to neglect and let go to ruin our individual holdings if we so desire, but as Representatives we have no right to neglect the property whose care and management is intrusted to us by others.

The Members of this Congress have the opportunity of doing the country a real service and their constituents much good by accepting Mr. Ford's proposition before the expiration of the Congress. Immediate action in the matter will reflect more credit on the present administration than anything we could do. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, some months ago the House passed a bill amending the present existing law permitting taxation by States of the shares of stock of national banks. That bill has been materially amended by the Senate committee and is now under discussion in the Senate. Ordinarily I would have waited until that proposed amendment came back to discuss it, but I came into the room from a committee meeting and I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]. While I did not hear all of his statement, I heard the last part of it in which he seemed to take the position that 32 States of the Union are helpless on this question on account of certain decisions in the Richmond case and the New York-Hanover Bank case. I challenge the accuracy of the gentleman's conclusion. The Supreme Court in the Richmond case and the court in the New York-Hanover Bank case—which some of you will remember I put in the RECORD a day or two after it was rendered, which I think was December 8—I repeat, the Supreme Court in the Richmond case and the New York court in the Hanover case did not change in one single regard the position of the court upon this question ever since Congress first authorized the States to tax the shares of national banks. The apparent difference in the decisions which have been rendered from time to time grows out of a different state of facts; in other words, a different record. I will say to the gentleman from New York that instead of blaming Congress New York is to blame. The New York Legislature, I understand, is either in session now or will be in a few days. To-day under existing law, under the provisions of the bill which the House passed, it can now take care of this if they are willing to make their tax laws uniform and nondiscriminatory. It is not the province of the Congress so to shape its laws that the State of New York can do what the New York court held it was doing, put a heavier burden upon the State and National banks than it puts upon Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co. on the same basis of capital and assets. The decision of the New York court specifically mentioned Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and if the State of New York will amend its tax laws, and with which the gentleman from New York had something to do, and make the private bankers in New York bear the same tax burdens that the incorporated banker does, the situation will be remedied. Now, he said something about the amendment of the Senate. I did not hear the discussion of that. I will say that I can not understand the amendment of the Senate, but when it comes to us if it is better than the House we will take it; but from a cursory reading it looks like it is another one of those tax-exempt proposals. Here is a bill in which the members of the Banking and Currency Committee all sat together. There was no partisan difference on that question.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] and myself all wanted only honest justice and nondiscrimination to national banks. We want the national banks to bear their part of the burden of State taxation, but we do not want them to bear any more; and we do not approve and we do not propose to permit a statute with our consent to be passed that will permit a State like New York to do what has absolutely been done—discriminate against national banks and State banks and in favor of such institutions as Kuhn, Loeb & Co. We have the adjudication of their own courts saying that they have done it. So I say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], instead of abusing Congress, should go to his own legislature and tell them to help themselves by passing a nondiscriminatory tax law and making Kuhn, Loeb & Co. respond to the same rule as the national banks are required to respond to, and then no Federal legislation will be necessary. The decisions are uniform, and the position of the conservative, thoughtful members of the Committee on Banking and Currency has been that we will not disturb a rule of taxation that has been in existence for over half a century, and which has been interpreted from time to time by the courts, and which is well settled, by putting on some new scheme that will cause confusion and litigation and inflict damage on the States themselves. So the only change we made was to meet the progressive proposals of the age by permitting those States that desire to do so to adopt something other than a direct property tax, as, for instance, the income-tax system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. WINGO. So, I repeat, that is the only material change that the House bill made. We propose to stand by the existing rule, which has been interpreted for half a century, that is understood by the taxing authorities in every State, and which has back of it simply one theory, and that is equality of treatment of the national banks and State banks, imposing no less and no greater a burden upon them than upon moneyed capital in the same State held by other people or other corporations in substantial competition with them. We are opposed to letting down the bars and imposing these discriminatory tax laws upon some of those States that are willing to allow a private banker to compete with an incorporated State bank or a national bank and enjoy all the conveniences that the incorporated banker enjoys, and yet when he walks up to the tax collector's office pays about one-third as much of the burden of the cost of Government that affords both of them equal protection. That is the position taken by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What is the theory upon which it is claimed that the private bankers should pay less tax than the national banks or State banks pay?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know, unless it be a question of expediency, which always arises in the matter of an intangible property tax. That is all. In other words, they let these private bankers come in under the intangible property classification, and, of course, everybody knows there is no morality in the intangible property tax favoritism. It is only expediency that has prompted the State to tax at a lower rate elusive intangible property in order to get that property out of hiding, and it is perfectly possible to so draw an intangible tax law as to touch the private banker the same as the incorporated bank. It is perfectly possible to devise a scheme by which a private banker will bear the same burden of taxation that is imposed upon the incorporated bank; in other words, class him as the Supreme Court decisions have classed him—as a banker.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the Government could not prohibit the State from charging more against a national bank than similar property held by private concerns, could not any State in the Union put the national banking system out of business? And if it could put the national banking system out of business, could it not put the Federal reserve system out of business, too?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. I have stated here from time to time the high regard that I have for the Federal reserve system. But I have been afraid that some of the mistakes made in its administration might obscure the real benefits of that system. Its full benefits will not be enjoyed until every eligible bank comes under it. If you discriminate by taxation against the national banks and against the State banks in favor of the private banks, you will eventually drive the national banks and the State banks out of existence. I am not a special pleader for either the national banks or the State banks. I want the national banks and the State banks to bear the same burden. But when you come to private bankers there is no excuse for allowing them to hide behind special favor of intangible classifications. It is just as possible to uncover their assets by an examination of their books as it is in the case of a State bank or a national bank.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the New York law taxes the national banks in a greater amount than it taxes private banks?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I put in the RECORD on December 12 the decision of the New York court in the Hanover Bank tax case. In that decision the court held that it was done, and cited Kuhn, Loeb & Co. If I recall correctly, the facts are that whereas an institution like Kuhn, Loeb & Co. will pay about $80,000, on the same measure of assets a bank like the Hanover Bank would pay $240,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. The exact figures are these: Where J. P. Morgan & Co. paid not exceeding $300 on $100,000 invested capital, the Hanover Bank paid a thousand, and the stockholders of the Hanover Bank had their dividends taxed the same as J. P. Morgan & Co. had on their income tax.

Mr. WINGO. The position of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] is to blame Congress and hold 22 States of the Union helpless. So far as New York is concerned, she can help herself if she will put on her statute books a fair, square, uniform, nondiscriminatory tax law affecting private bankers, State bankers, and national bankers alike. If she will do that, she will have no complaint of the decisions of the courts. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more, so that I may yield to my friend from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] this morning, when I asked a question and compared the City National Bank with J. P. Morgan & Co., said he did not want that red herring drawn across the trail.

Mr. WINGO. I do not blame him. That is the crux of the whole question and is the very discrimination the New York court condemned.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the court of last resort of the State of New York used that red herring as an illustration.

Mr. WINGO. They referred to Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co. in a decision rendered on December 12. It is not I who am condemning the New York tax laws. Her own courts have shown their unfair and discriminatory character. Let them clean their own house and quit quarreling with Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to read a short editorial from the Washington Post of a week ago, entitled "New Tariff Prosperity":

NEW TARIFF PROSPERITY.

Reports compiled by the Department of Commerce show an increase of exports and imports under the new tariff. This is an answer of fact to prophecies of ills that, according to the seers of partisan opposition, were to befall the Nation as the price of protection. Instead of registering a decrease, foreign trade is increasing, and the event is proving that the protective tariff is not only stimulating domestic industry, but is doing so in a manner that does not work loss in other directions.

The administration is warranted in its satisfaction over this result. The protective tariff is working out as its champions foresaw and foretold and the increasing export and import figures cut the ground from beneath its opponents, who spend their fears on imaginary evils and close their eyes to real benefits.

Of course, during the recent campaign there was a good deal of moaning and groaning and a great many word pictures of the world disaster that was to happen because of the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, and you will recall during the preparation of the bill that the favorite indoor sport in this House and at the other end of the Capitol was the reading into the RECORD of sarcastic criticisms from alleged Republican newspapers, all calculated to discredit the policy of a protective tariff. The alleged Republican papers have put on the soft pedal, so for a moment let us turn our attention to the outpourings of one or two of the Democratic newspapers.

Mr. Chairman, the following headlines appeared in the New York World on December 17:

Business boom is under way. Includes most basic industries. Commerce Department announces October the best month since the post-war prosperity. Distributors active, too.

The article itself is a Washington dispatch in which it is stated that the output of the important industries, which are named, was greater during the month of October than in any month since 1920.

It also states that there was a corresponding increase in sales by department stores, mail order and wholesale houses, as well as increased bank clearings. However, no mention is made in this article of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, not even a suggestion that possibly some measure of credit is due to the functioning of that act.

And yet you will remember that the World bitterly opposed this legislation, and through its news and editorial columns hurled invective and sarcastic criticism that evidenced by its tone that this great metropolitan daily had allowed prejudice to warp its judgment. Now, in order to report the news accurately the Evening World is obliged to publish reports which absolutely disprove the free-trade propaganda of its editorial columns.

Supporters of the new tariff bill predicted an increase in our export trade in spite of the gloomy forecast by the Democratic free traders. The Journal of Commerce strenuously opposed the Fordney-McCumber tariff because, it alleged, it would ruin our export trade. Foreign nations, it claimed, would not buy our goods if they had to pay an adequate rate of duty to get their goods into our markets. Now they are singing a different song, for in its issue of December 5 appears the following under the caption:

MORE EXPORTS.

The fact appears that here and there our export trade has improved measurably since the low point some months ago and possibly some further increase may occur. No major change has taken place and is not likely to do so under existing circumstances.

At all events it is of importance to bear in mind that large shipments abroad may not constitute a really prospering foreign business. Nothing is to be gained by selling more goods to foreign peoples than they can be reasonably expected to pay for. Every indication seems to point to a considerable reduction in our imports. An unduly top-heavy export business may do us more harm than good.

So this paper that predicted the collapse of our export trade now admits that it has increased, but comforts itself by stating that "it won't last" and that "even if it does, the export trade is not such a good thing after all." This is the sort of claptrap we are supposed to swallow when administered by the Journal of Commerce. [Laughter.]

The actual enactment of the new tariff bill did not have the disastrous effect predicted by the Journal of Commerce and other free-trade propagandists. On the contrary, exports have been steadily increasing and imports have also increased, so that the entire objection to the new tariff based on the claim that it would ruin our foreign trade has fallen flat and has been disproven. [Applause.]

Volumes could be filled with the vociferous outpourings of our Democratic brethren, descriptive of the dire results of protection. What cared they for the records of our periods of prosperity under protective tariffs? They told us that Europe must pay its indebtedness in manufactured goods because they had no gold. The only logical conclusion to be derived, after reading Democratic free-trade arguments against the tariff bill, was that the Democratic Party was quite willing to open the gates to a flood of foreign merchandise and, as a result, strangle industry, close American workshops, and let American toilers swell the ranks of the unemployed.

I am just reminded that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the would-be leader of the minority, who in the last few months has been endeavoring by a marked display of feverish activity to establish his claim to that position in the organization of the next Congress, became unduly disturbed and excited yesterday over the funding of this foreign debt. He was very much alarmed for fear that Congress was going to allow the commission too much leeway. The Democratic spellbinders on the stump this last fall took particular pains to tell the people that that legislation which we passed regarding the funding commission was futile; that it did not amount to anything; and that the debt could not be paid unless it was paid by goods imported into this country; that we were a creditor Nation, and the Democratic argument was that as across the seas they had no gold the only way that we could ever get this debt settled was by bringing in sufficient manufactured products from Europe to cancel it. Very evidently the gentleman from Texas does not agree with some of his Democratic brethren, because he now appears very much concerned about the payment of this debt which, as I say, out on the stump they endeavored to assure their audiences could only be paid by establishing free trade. Very few of the Democratic Members like to be known as or called free traders; they prefer the more euphonious and seductive title of "Tariffers for revenue only."

Curiously enough, those who advocate cancellation of the foreign debt are largely internationalists and free traders who seem anxious to see Great Britain and the other countries placed in a financial position to pay the private debts owing private investors in foreign securities. They have no special interest in the payment of the huge debt owed to this Government, which, in the last analysis, is the people's money.

The principle of protection has nothing to do with the collection or payment of reciprocal debts. The enemies of protective tariff injected this extraneous matter into tariff discussion to delay as long as possible the enactment of the tariff bill.

A Republican tariff bill is a message to the rest of the world that we intend to keep the standard of wages and living conditions high, that American men and women who supply the brain and brawn in industrial production may prosper. A Democratic free-trade measure is a message to the world that they intend to drag the American workman and his family down to the level of his foreign competitors who work long hours for starvation wages.

At this point I desire to read from the Southern Tariff Advocate, published at Fort Worth, Tex. The article on the title page is as follows:

South owes debt of gratitude to Congress for permanent tariff law. The Fordney-McCumber tariff measure, which has been written into law and whose provisions are now in operation, reflects a broad Americanism that recognizes the right of producers to participate in the burdens and benefits of tariff legislation without discrimination against any product, any section, or any class.

For the first time in nearly a century the interests of the great agricultural producers, upon whose toil and energy rests the progress of the Nation, have been given the same measure of consideration that has always been extended to those who manufacture the raw material into articles of commerce, and justice and equality of effort in tariff legislation has been established.

There are, of course, those inequalities in the measure which are manifest in all human documents, but in a broad sense the law lends encouragement and hope to southern producers, and, when it becomes the fixed policy of succeeding Congresses, it will bring contentment and peace to all our people and insure permanent prosperity to the stricken industries of the South.

The Southern Tariff Association, backed by millions of southern producers, offers sincere thanks to Congress for the splendid achievement attained by the passage of this act.

The following article appears on page 8, December issue, of this publication:

GOODING CLUB ORGANIZED.

At a meeting held in New Orleans recently, officers for the Gooding Tariff Club were elected, and 1,100 charter members were reported for the club, according to Charles B. Claiborne, who presided at the meeting. The following officers were elected: E. A. Burguieres, chairman; Burt Henry, secretary; Charles DeB. Claiborne, treasurer. The club was named the Gooding Club as an honor to Senator GOODING, chairman of the tariff bloc, and as a compliment to the bloc for its support of southern schedules in the Fordney-McCumber bill.

An intensified organization campaign throughout the State of Louisiana will be carried on and local clubs organized with a membership pledged to vote for candidates for Congress and Senate who favor a protective tariff. The membership pledge reads: "I pledge my vote and my influence to the support of candidates for Congress and Senators of the United States whom if elected will vote for a national tariff policy that will equalize the cost of production between this country and foreign countries, to the end that American standards of living may be maintained."

Headquarters will be opened up as soon as arrangements can be made, and plans for covering the entire South with tariff clubs will be inaugurated. The State will be divided into congressional districts, parish and precinct clubs, and it is expected that several hundred tariff clubs will be established throughout the State.

I have quoted these news items in order that the people of the Nation may observe the very marked change in sentiment of the South regarding protective tariff. Of course, we realize that this change in attitude will not elect any Republicans from that section of the country, because southern folks just naturally do not like us and, in spite of all the declarations to the contrary, we are on many important questions as far apart as the poles. It may be productive of much good, however, for in the primary contests of the South the choice of candidates is gradually going to swing to the men who have the courage to espouse the cause of protection, and there can be but one result, and that will be the restoration to private life of the old-fashioned moss-back free traders who have heretofore felt secure in their position because a few long-haired professors of economics have occasionally tossed them a theoretical life preserver. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP], in a speech in 1909, gives rein to his imagination as to how the average Democratic Congressman from the South answers his many requests from manufacturers and farmers to support them in seeking decent protective rates for their products. The following is a quotation from his address, and when you have read it you will feel that our benighted brethren on the Democratic side are more to be pitied than laughed at:

> And when our good southern people themselves try the same experiment of building a factory—and many of them have done so—and a revision of the tariff is announced, forthwith they write their Congressman, usually a modern-day Democrat, and ask him for protection. I imagine they get a reply something like this: "You know I am a Democrat and have made speeches all my life against the protective-tariff principle. But I must confess that my views have undergone some change, and I now have protection proclivities for products in my own district. What you demand is contrary to our Democratic platform declaration, but is essential to us locally as a business proposition. Without appearing to be inconsistent, which really I am not, I believe we can get the desired protection by a duty apparently for revenue only or one simply for competitive protection. I have never had opportunity publicly to favor this sort of protection, because during campaigns, in order to preserve the purity of our race, I have given exclusive attention to 'the negro question.'"

Let me call to the attention of my Democratic friends that there were 11 of the distinguished Democratic Senators, representing their various States in the Chamber at the other end of the building—11 of them who during the discussion of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill supported every rate on products, agricultural and industrial, of their individual States, and in many cases they asked an increase, and received it or a compromise. I believe they showed good judgment in supporting that kind of tariff legislation, but were, to say the least, rather inconsistent when they voted against the bill on final passage. [Laughter and applause.]

I want now to call attention to a speech which was inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee, the speech being made by the Hon. Norman H. Davis, who was former Undersecretary of State, before the Democratic Women's Luncheon Club at Philadelphia. In the speech Mr. Davis purported to state the fundamental differences between the Democratic and Republican Parties, but it is in truth a bitter, vitriolic, vicious attack upon the Republican platform, President Harding, and the tariff bill. I have written to Mr. Davis and asked him for a statistical analysis or abstract regarding this statement, which I propose to read; and let me say that this is just about the kind of a statement that the Democrats made on the stump last fall, except that their figures varied anywhere from four to eleven billions, while Mr. Davis has compromised on $6,000,000,000. He says in part as follows:

> On the contrary, they have become so weak and inefficient, according to their own claims, that they have recently induced the Government to pass the hat around and take up, by means of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, a forced collection from the tax-burdened masses to the amount of at least $6,000,000,000 per annum for the benefit of these industrial paupers.

I wrote Mr. Davis and said that this and similar statements had been made frequently during the campaign, and I hoped that he might give me the figures or an abstract to see how he arrived at this deduction of $6,000,000,000 per annum. As I say, the statement was made that it was going to cost us anywhere from $4,000,000,000 to $11,000,000,000. In contradistinction to that, under the title "Still lying about the new tariff law," I read the following from the National Republican:

STILL LYING ABOUT THE NEW TARIFF LAW.

> The New York World says Christmas expenditures in the United States increased from $3,000,000,000 in 1921 to $6,000,000,000 in 1922, due to the Fordney-McCumber tariff. Arthur Brisbane writes that the increase was from $5,000,000,000 in 1921 to $8,000,000,000 in 1922, "partly due to the tariff." The truth is that much less than half of the articles sold at Christmas are affected by the tariff at all, and that 95 per cent of the less than 50 per cent of such commodities were, of course, in the hands of the jobbers before the new tariff law went into effect in October. On the imports of all classes, a small part of which were of the Christmas-present variety, the increase in tariff collections under the new tariff has been less than $100,000,000, all of which went into the United States Treasury, to decrease by that much the taxes of the American people. The truth, further, is that the increase in volume of Christmas expenditures was not 100 per cent or 60 per cent but about 50 per cent, and the increase in postal receipts shows that the growth in volume of mailings was nearly as great. The advertising columns of the Hearst papers and of the New York World during the holiday season showed that prices were little increased in 1922 over 1921, and every reader of these papers knows that it is asinine to write that there was any such increase in prices as to justify the claim of these anti-protection propagandists that the tariff caused the bigger volume of sales. If Mr. Brisbane and the New York World had only told the truth about the matter—namely, that the astonishing increase of Christmas trade proved the prosperity of the Amerian people—they might not have done as well in calamity howling but they would have contributed much more to the prosperity of their readers and advertisers during the year 1922. If the metropolitan editorial writers who hate a tariff written in the interests of American producers rather than of New York importers and alien capitalists find it necessary to misrepresent the operations of the new tariff, they ought to at least get together and lie plausibly and in unison.

I have read the foregoing mainly to show that these folks are a good deal like golf players—they do not lie alike but lie differently. [Laughter.] The New York World and the Hearst papers claim that the whole spread of $6,000,000,000 was taken up this Christmas, that it cost $6,000,000,000 more this Christmas than before, but Mr. Davis says that it will take a year for the people to contribute that amount.

Of course, just the minute the tariff is taken off an article, naturally the price goes up. We had a great furore here with the agricultural bloc about potash, and they took potash off the tariff list and put it in the free list, and since then it raised 200 per cent in price at one jump and 145 at another and to-day it is 345 per cent higher in just a little over two months.

England has been quoted as a free trade country. I heard the silver-tongued orator, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], tell us what a wonderful country free-trade England was, and in language that he alone is such a master of he pictured the desolation, despair, and despond that would prevail in this country if we had a protective tariff bill.

He pictured the long rows of men and women out of employment, the wheels of industry stopped, the stars ceasing to shine, and earth herself toppled into primeval chaos, and while this kind of doctrine was being served up to us England was casting the free-trade principles of Cobden to the winds, and enacting more tariff legislation; and have since insisted on its remaining on their statute books, as the following news dispatch will indicate:

> Commons upholds act to protect industries—Liberals' attack on measure fails under vote of 269 to 207 after defense by Government.

An Associated Press dispatch to the Evening Star appeared under the above caption, and reads as follows:

> LONDON, December 5, 1922.—The House of Commons last night, after keen debate, rejected by a vote of 269 to 207 an amendment offered by Sir John Simon, Liberal, to the address in reply to the speech from the throne demanding the repeal of the safeguarding of industries act.
> Sir John's attack on the act was based on its protectionist character and the fact that it has been extended far beyond the original intention. As an instance Sir John cited that in the chemical industry the act affected more than 6,000 articles. Sir Alfred Mond, who as minister of health with the Lloyd-George cabinet was one of those responsible for its passage, admitted that the act had gone far beyond the original intentions. He advocated the appointment of a select committee to investigate its administration.
> Sir Philip Lloyd Graeme, president of the board of trade, defending the act in behalf of the Government, argued that it would be extremely unwise to repeal it at the present time.

This act, you will remember, was passed in August, 1921, and was known as the safeguarding of industries act, and carried a tariff of 33⅓ per cent ad valorem on some 7,000 industrial products; the duty to be collected on home valuation. Home valuation in this instance is synonymous with the principle of American valuation, which highly desirable provision was stricken from the Fordney-McCumber bill in the Senate.

I regret that the principle of American valuation was not incorporated in the bill. The argument regarding the provision in the appropriation bill yesterday for a foreign investigation of prices would have been made much less necessary. The proper way to figure an ad valorem duty is on the cost of comparable goods made in America; not on what the price is in a foreign country. [Applause.]

Of course, now that the election is over, the Democrats will quit yelling about the robber tariff and will go ahead and share in the prosperity under its beneficent influence.

The Fordney-McCumber tariff bids fair to be the best revenue tariff ever in force in this country. During the month of October the total amount of duties collected are officially given as $40,135,000, while the duties for November—$41,647,000—are over a million and a half more dollars than during the previous month. If the average shall be maintained during the succeeding 10 months the total amount of duties collected will be over $490,000,000, or over $160,000,000 more than ever before collected in the same period of time.

A protective tariff helps the farmers by aiding in providing a market, in the first place, and at vastly higher prices than can be obtained if their products are not protected.

We all know that it stabilized and steadied the situation in this country, so far as farm products were concerned, when we passed the emergency tariff bill, notwithstanding all the arguments of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], who is the cleverest Member on his side—and I think he will admit it.

Mr. WINGO. I hope I have not aroused the jealousy of my friend.

Mr. CROWTHER. Oh, no; I appreciate the gentleman's ability.

A protective tariff conservatively enacted is practically the only safeguard for the workingman in this country, and such a tariff deserves the consistent support of organized labor. It is nonsense to talk about living wage or saving wage and then batter down the tariff wall that makes decent wages possible in this country.

The tariff law has put the people to work, set the wheels of industry to revolving, and has increased our commerce, both foreign and domestic. People hitherto idle, and hence conserving their meager resources, have now the means with which to buy from their present earnings. That is the unfailing result of adequate protection. Democratic demagogues who preached the doctrine of free trade during the last campaign, who painted word pictures of tremendous disaster to follow the enactment of the tariff law, and who out on the hustings spoke of industrial ruin and starvation following the "robber tariff," have taken to the tall timbers, satisfied for the time being that their false charges have resulted in a temporary political gain of a few seats in Congress.

But you can not fool all the people all the time, and Democratic Congressmen who flatter themselves that any arguments they advanced for free trade as against protection were anything more than incidents in the last campaign are due for a rude awakening when next they apply for support as Representatives in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, when the national bank act was passed in 1864 the question arose as to whether the States should tax the stock of the banks. It had been determined that a bank created by the National Government, which was the national agency, could not be taxed without the consent of Congress. Congress, therefore, enacted that the States should have the right to tax the bank stock of national banks, but that they should not tax it at a higher rate than they did the bank stock of State banks. What was the result? A good many States taxed not the stock but the assets of the State banks, and where a bank invested all of its capital in tax-free bonds, for instance, United States bonds, it paid no tax.

The result was in those States they could not get any tax from the national banks; and in addition to that other States merely taxed the franchise so much and did not tax the stock of its banks. In those States the national banks went free, because there could be no tax placed on the stock of national banks. Now, the Congress met in 1869, and finding that in a great many States the national banks were escaping taxation, they changed the limit and provided that national-bank stock should be taxed, but it should not be taxed at a greater rate than that assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens of such State, and that law went into effect and is in effect to-day, and has been all the time, and worked satisfactorily, and there never has been any abuse of it. Well, we are having trouble now because of certain State regulations. Now, the Supreme Court came along, and over in Pennsylvania the State of Pennsylvania exempted all real estate mortgages from taxation. The national banks set up the plea that real estate mortgages, being of an investment nature and akin to banking, that that being exempt the national-bank stock must be exempt also. The Supreme Court said no; that is not the rule. It must be capital in competition with national banks, and a man who loans money on real estate is not in competition with national banks, because the national banks are not allowed to loan on real estate, and besides the State can exempt one form of capital without relieving the national banks. Then we had another case in which the situation came up where certain other property was not being taxed in the shape of investments. The Supreme Court held it did not relieve the national-bank stock, because the capital that was being exempted was not in competition with national banks and was not of substantial account if it were in competition with it, and consequently they wrote into the law that you could tax the stock of national banks but you could not tax it higher than that in the hands of individuals coming in competition with national banks. Now, that is the state of the law and has been for 50 years, and can not be gainsaid. Now, what trouble brought up this question before the House of Representatives?

The gentleman from New York said awhile ago that the bill we passed did not do any good at all. Well, we added the words of the Supreme Court that it must not be taxed higher than the capital in the hands of individual citizens "coming into competition with the business of national banks." Then we added another provision that where a State desires to tax the income from their capital coming into competition with their national banks it can tax the net income of the national banks, but not higher than it taxed the other capital. Well, that was reported here and we passed it, and the Banking and Currency Committee had only one member opposing it. Now here is a wail that New York is in trouble. Let us see what that trouble is, and let us see whether any justice is found in the case. The State of New York in 1919 passed a tax act in which it provided that the stock of all banks should be taxed at 1 per cent of its book value, not its face value, but its book value, but that the investment of private bankers, and so forth, should be only taxed at a maximum of 3 per cent on their income; that in addition to the tax upon the stock of the bank, that dividends coming from banks should be taxed in the hands of the holder as income. Now, let us see how it works out. How did it work out? In the courts there was found to be in the hands of private bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co.—a whole list is found in this decree of the first court in which the matter passed—that there was $200,000,000 of bank capital in the hands of the following private bankers: J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Speyer & Co., J. & W. Seligman, Hallgarten & Co., Laenburg, Thalman & Co., Goldman, Sachs & Co., and Blair & Co. Well, how are they taxed; not exceeding 3 per cent on the net income. Now, how was it under their bank system were they taxed as stated on the 1st day of January, 1921? If they had losses after that they had no consideration. If Morgan & Co. sustained losses before they were taxed on the net income they were allowed to charge off with their losses. Let us see how it works. You take $100,000 of stock, and that is the evidence before our committee—segregate $100,000 of stock of the Hanover National Bank. It would be taxed $1,000—1 per cent. Segregate $100,000 of J. P. Morgan & Co. capital and 10 per cent would be but a fair net earning for it; if it pays 10 per cent net, it would pay 3 per cent tax, which would be $300. So you have a tax upon the capital of the bank of $1,000 for what is taxed in the hands of J. P. Morgan & Co. $300. And then the stockholder in the Hanover National Bank had to pay the sum of 3 per cent on the dividends he received to the State of New York.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman tell the committee what the private bankers were paying in taxes prior to the passage of the income tax law in the State of New York?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know anything about that, but we are here confronted with the record as made in the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals of the State of New York. But we are here not to determine what these private bankers were paying; if they were escaping taxation it is the business of New York to see that they do not.

It is the business of the State of New York to see that they do not. But the question is, Will we allow the great private bankers of this country to drive out the national banks by having the latter pay three and one-half times as much as the private banks, and then tax the income in the hands of the stockholders the same?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I beg to be excused. I have but very little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, what happened? They went into court and the court found as a fact—and it was unexcepted to by the State of New York—that there was a billion dollars of that kind of capital in the State of New York that was not taxed a cent on its value, but was taxed 3 per cent on its income, while the national banks with only $591,000,000 of capital from start to finish were taxed 1 per cent on their capital and then on their dividends. It went through three courts. The circuit court, the appellate division, and the final appellate court, which makes this statement:

> A long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States defines the business of banking and holds that the words "moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" includes moneys invested in private banking houses such as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and others, together with investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness such as normally enter into the business of banking. The National Government permits State taxation only on terms of substantial equality in law and in fact, and entire fairness and friendliness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. But in New York, as the court says, the shares are taxed by one method and the dividends by another method. Yet they come in here and complain because we do not make provision for New York, to justify and sustain and support that discrimination against the national banks, which are the foundation of the Federal reserve system and which Congress alone can take care of. Then the court of last resort in New York goes on to say:

Dividends from stock in bank corporations owned by resident taxpayers are not included in the list of exemptions. A clear discrimination is made against resident holders of bank shares which are taxed according to their book value, who are also taxed on their income. The shares of bank stock are taxed by one method and the dividends thereon are taxed by another method. Competing moneyed capital in the hands of individuals is exempt from taxation based on valuation and is assessed by one method, according to income only.

Well, they talk about 32 States. I deny that there is any such situation existing except in the States of New York, Massachusetts, and possibly Wisconsin. The matter has been settled practically everywhere else. We have had it before the Committee on Banking and Currency for six months.

What was the situation in Massachusetts? They have a large coterie of private bankers there, occupying the same relative position as J. P. Morgan occupies in New York. Kidder & Co. and Peabody, Cluett & Co. and Lee, Higginson & Co. are the great outstanding firms. National-bank shares are taxed at a high rate. Statements were made before our committee by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], one of the best Representatives from the State of Massachusetts, who said that he had to admit that the national banks paid $2,999,000 in Massachusetts in 1921, when, if taxed on the same basis as the private bankers, such as Lee, Higginson & Co., they would have paid only $490,000. Can the Congress of the United States stand for any such discrimination as that, and say to them, "Here, we put these national banks off in a corner by themselves. Go to it and tax them as high as you want."

We have heard that "the power of taxation is the power to destroy." It is the power to destroy, and so surely as you allow the States to build up a discrimination against the national banks you will have trouble with the basis of our currency system. Now, out in North Dakota they created a State bank, to be run by the State, and exempted it entirely from taxation. Then they passed a law that farms should be taxed at 5 mills, but before you taxed a farm at all you excluded the improvements, and then laid off $2,000 worth of land as exempt, and then taxed the balance 5 mills. Then they came along and taxed the national banks 15 mills, and exempted the State bank from any taxation at all, a competitor that was created for them.

This Congress, when it creates a national agency, has to provide against such a discrimination, because these 48 States have 48 kinds of people in them, and every once in awhile people like that will get into control, and when we let down the bars and allow one State to discriminate against national banks we must allow everybody else to discriminate, and the result is that aggregations of capital in the hands of great private international bankers will get the State to discriminate in their favor as against the national banks, as they have done absolutely and openly in New York, and the result will be the destruction of our national-banking system, for which we are not yet prepared. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, there is an old quotation something to the effect that those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. This should now be changed, so far as prohibition in the United States is concerned, to "Those whom the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment would defeat, it first indorses."

Politicians are sometimes charged with being unethical in conducting campaigns, but in all my experience I have never seen a politician stoop to the methods which the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment resorted to in the recent campaign. Doubtless knowing that in a dry district only a candidate who stood for prohibition and the proper enforcement of the Volstead Act could be elected, this association evidently sought to place the stigma of being wet on the dry candidates and thus through deception encompass their defeat.

The Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment has apparently vowed vengeance upon every Member of Congress who has voted for law enforcement legislation.

No Member of the House, I suppose, would find fault with the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment or any other organization or individual opposed to prohibition if it proposed to change or repeal the amendment by the orderly processes of law; but to attempt to legalize what the Constitution prohibits, or to destroy the machinery for the enforcement of that part of the Constitution, is nothing less than blatant nullification.

But even more vicious than this was the attempt of the association to defeat Members of the Senate and House who had always stood for prohibition and its enforcement by giving them its indorsement. Here are only a few of the candidates for Congress which this association indorsed, although it well knew that they all stood for prohibition and for the carrying out of the Volstead Act:

Hon. B. G. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi; Hon. L. M. GENSMAN, of Oklahoma; and Senator CLAUDE A. SWANSON, of Virginia. I understand there were many others.

Mr. GENSMAN, I am sorry to say, went down to defeat as a result of the association's indorsement of his candidacy. As a general thing, however, the voters saw through this attempt of the wets to defeat dry candidates by deception and rolled up large dry majorities as protest against the action of the wet organization. The reaction was decisive and humiliating to the wet leaders. My own majority was nearly 21,000 despite the handicap which they attempted to inflict upon me. My majority over the same political opponent in my previous campaign for the Sixty-seventh Congress had only been slightly in excess of 11,000.

In my congressional district this organization sent out information which caused some people to label me as a nullification candidate for Congress, and I desire to put into the RECORD the correspondence which I had with it in order to show its duplicity and its vicious methods of campaigning. I give first a letter from Mr. G. C. Hinckley, manager of the wet organization here in Washington, dated September 25, which reads as follows:

Please note tenets of this organization outlined in platform supra. We believe this platform points out the only road to true temperance, better business conditions, and reduced taxation, and the only road leading from excessive taxation and all manner of crime incident to prohibition.

We are receiving inquiries from our members in your State as to your sentiments. In order that we may answer promptly and accurately, we will be pleased to have you answer the following queries:

1. Do you oppose or favor national prohibition and the Volstead Act?
2. Do you oppose or favor the program of this organization?

We feel you will welcome this opportunity to define your attitude and will appreciate an immediate reply. If no reply is received in two weeks the assumption will be that you are not in favor of our movement. The poll being taken by the Literary Digest (two to one in our favor so far) indicates the trend of opinion among thinking people.

Under date of October 5, 1922, I replied as follows:

Your circular letter of September 25 has been received. My attitude on your platform is well known to my constituents, but for your benefit I will repeat it.

1. I favor national prohibition and the Volstead Act.
2. The only portion of the program of your organization in which I can acquiesce is Article III, i. e., "So long as the prohibition amendment and the Volstead Act are the law of the land, they should be obeyed," otherwise I am opposed to your program.

Under date of October 12, 1922, the following reply was received from Mr. Hinckley:

I thank you for your letter of October 5 and note you are not in sympathy with our platform.

On October 30 reports came to me that a letter was being circulated, copy of which is given below, which indicated that the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment was sending out false insinuations as to my attitude on prohibition. I immediately telegraphed Mr. Hinckley as follows:

Your letter, October 18, to G. K. Hubbard, 573 Illinois Avenue, Riverside, Calif., is being circulated in my district in pamphlet form. Statement contained in fourth paragraph of said letter "that LINEBERGER will probably come out openly in favor of our platform" is absolutely unwarranted and libelous in the extreme. My correspondence with you, dated October 5, in answer to your circular form letter, dated September 25, and your acknowledgment, dated October 12, in which you state, "I thank you for your letter of October 5 and note you are not in sympathy with our platform," shows that when you wrote your letter of October 18 to Hubbard you were fully informed of my dry position. If every dry in my district were to support Mr. Randall it would not change my views one whit, as I am for prohibition for moral, sociological, and economic reasons, irrespective of votes or public office, and believe that this reform has proved itself the greatest boon to mankind in the world's history. I demand telegraphic retraction of your unwarranted insinuations and assumptions.

The letter referred to in the foregoing follows:

OUR PLATFORM.

I. Beers and light wines now; but no saloons ever.

II. The liquor traffic should be regulated locally by the States and should have no place in our Federal Constitution, which ought to contain only the framework of government and the great fundamental principles acknowledged of all men and no longer a subject of controversy.

III. So long as the prohibition amendment and the Volstead Act are the law of the land they should be obeyed.

IV. Meantime it is the right and the duty of all who still believe in real temperance, in self-respect, self-restraint, and the force of personal morality to work for the repeal of the Volstead Act and then of the prohibition amendment itself.

OCTOBER 18, 1922.

Mr. G. K. HUBBARD,
573 Illinois Avenue, Riverside, Calif.

MY DEAR MR. HUBBARD: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 27 with contribution of 25 cents, and I am inclosing herewith one of our regular applications for membership, which I trust you will fill in and return at your early convenience.

I am also inclosing literature which I feel sure you will find of great interest.

I am sorry to state in reply to your inquiry that there is but one candidate from the eleventh district of California, PHILIP D. SWING. We have written to Mr. SWING asking for a statement of his views with regard to prohibition, but have not been favored with the courtesy of a reply. This, taken in connection with the fact that he voted for the Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, has led us to classify him as dry.

In the ninth district there is rather an interesting situation. LINEBERGER, the incumbent, has consistently voted dry. However, his opponent, Charles H. Randall, is so rabidly dry as to detract from LINEBERGER'S dry support to such an extent that LINEBERGER will probably come out openly in favor of our platform. He has not done so yet, but under present conditions LINEBERGER is the man to vote for in the ninth district. Randall is running on a Democratic prohibition platform.

For your information I am attaching a list of wet candidates which has been released for publication in to-day's papers.

Very truly yours,

G. C. HINCKLEY, Secretary-Treasurer.

In reply to this telegram I received one dated October 31, 1922, in which Mr. Hinckley said:

You have never been indorsed by this organization, and if you adhere to position set forth in your telegram never will be.

In spite of this correspondence and recognized facts, the wet organization, so far as I could ascertain, did nothing to correct the situation created by the circularization of its letter, although I openly repudiated it and published the facts broadcast. Partly because of this and possibly for personal and political reasons as well, this propaganda is still being distributed in an attempt to discredit me with the dry voters of my district.

It was used in the campaign by those who were interested in the election of the candidate of the Prohibition Party for Congress in my district. Mr. Clarke, editor of the Riverside Press, sent this telegram to my campaign headquarters:

Understand one G. K. Hubbard, of Riverside, is trying to influence temperance voters against LINEBERGER. Hubbard is extreme third party man and has never cooperated with temperance forces of this county in any practical or effective manner. He is apparently willing to sacrifice anything for election of candidates of Prohibition Party.

I found also that another organization, known as the Flying Squadron, whose leaders are party prohibitionists, have filed a report with the Clerk of this House which indicates that in the closing days of the campaign they spent between $800 and $900 trying to defeat me. I challenge any man or organization to show where I have cast a single vote upon prohibition which is not favorable to it and to its enforcement. In my private as well as my public and official life, both here and elsewhere, my conduct is one of strict observance, giving support to the Constitution and the laws of the United States by example as well as by word and vote. Personally, I am willing to renew the pledge which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] challenges Members of Congress and public officials in general, to make. I heartily approve the idea, and consider that it would have a most salutary effect.

As is well known by my colleagues, I have never taken a sanctimonious or "holier than thou" attitude in this or any other matter; but I am willing to hazard the creation of a precedent on the floor of this House in saying that I have never in the slightest degree infringed the eighteenth amendment or Volstead Act since it became the law of the land [applause], and I intend to continue the same attitude in the future. Personally I am convinced that the vast majority of the membership of Congress can truthfully make the same statement. I do not claim to have been a total abstainer before the law went into effect—although, like many others who were not "teetotalers" in a strict sense, I was never what is known as a drinking man. No matter what I or anyone else may have been, it is now our bounden duty to strictly observe the Constitution and the laws enacted under it, which as public officials we have sworn to uphold and defend. This is to be expected of all public officials, no matter how highly or how lowly placed. The welfare and perpetuity of the Republic demand this. No more can be expected of that citizenship which is placed at the helm of its affairs, and this citizenship can do no less if it is to be said of those who compose it, as is the custom among the French, "Ils 'ont bien merité de la patrie," which translated means "They have merited well of their country."

It should be legally and morally just as reprehensible to purchase or consume of the wares of the bootlegger as to be engaged in bootlegging itself. The sooner the public conscience as well as those charged with the enforcement of the law arrive at this practical view of the shameful situation to which the President referred in his recent message, the nearer we will be to the crux and solution of this deplorable and perplexing situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Organizations which go over the country raising money for prohibition and its enforcement and then spend it to defeat Congressmen who have consistently and persistently worked and voted for every prohibition measure, are getting money under false pretenses and show that they are partisans rather than friends of prohibition. Whenever these unwarranted methods are used and the people understand them, the reaction on the part of fair-minded voters is helpful.

There may be instances like this in other congressional districts and they may come up in the future in still other congressional districts, and I made up my mind to present to the House the facts concerning the situation. Members of this House who have stood loyally for the necessary legislation to enforce the eighteenth amendment are entitled to the good will of its friends. When candidates on the various party tickets all stand for the Constitution and its enforcement, prohibition should not be made an issue in their districts. To attempt to tar a man with the wet stick in order to defeat him is dirty politics, no matter who does it.

Now, one thing more. I have been reliably informed that the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment, in order to cover its tracks, failed to comply with the Federal corrupt practices act and file a report of its receipts and expenditures before the election so that the people could know how much money was being spent to defeat Congressmen who stood for law and enforcement and to elect Congressmen who favored the repeal of the national prohibition act and the beer and wine program. I am further convinced that the association's report to the Clerk of the House shows a direct violation of the law. An organization which would violate the law in this respect would not hesitate to stoop to dirty politics and indorse candidates for the Senate and lower House when everyone knew such an indorsement would be a liability instead of an asset. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the rest of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California yields back one minute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 20 minutes.

VALUATION OF THE CARRIERS.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss for a few minutes the valuation work of railroad carriers which is now being conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Yesterday there was some discussion in the House with reference to this work, and inasmuch as we now have under consideration the appropriation bill which provides for the support of the Interstate Commerce Commission and for the work of these valuation experts, I think it might be well that we discuss the activities briefly.

This work was started in 1913 under an act of Congress and is still in progress. The field work of valuation is complete, but the assembling and compiling of the data and the announcement of the result as to all of the railroads will not be completed until July 1, 1924. Even then the work will not be finished, because if the work is kept down to date it will have to be a continuing work. In other words, if this valuation of the carriers, which is the greatest work of its kind ever undertaken by any Government and by any commission, is not kept reasonably current, of course, it will not be of any very great value.

But after the initial process of valuation is complete it will be a much simpler task and far less expensive to keep the work current. To do so will only involve the keeping of the accounts of the cost of additional mileage, the cost of new equipment, betterments, and other capital investments made by each carrier, less a proper charge for depreciation.

ANSWER TO CRITICISMS.

Some Members of Congress in the debate yesterday criticized this work on two grounds: First, that it had taken entirely too long to complete it, and, second, that the work would have but little value after it is completed. In other words, the situation was the same as that in the familiar story which we have heard of the man who bought a horse and after he had kept him for a while met the former owner and said, "There are only two thing wrong with the horse that you sold me. One is, it takes entirely too long to catch him, and the other is that he is no account after I do catch him." That seems to be the theory of some of the Members who discussed this matter yesterday, that it has taken the commission entirely too long to make the valuation and that it will be worth but little after it is completed.

But I do not take that view about the work. I want to discuss these two criticisms briefly: First, the claim that the valuation work has taken an unreasonable length of time, and second that it will be of no practical value after it is complete.

TIME TAKEN TO COMPLETE VALUATION.

As to the time which it has taken to complete the work since it first began in 1913, it is probably true that it has dragged along more slowly than it should have done. That is a common criticism, and in most cases a just criticism, of Government activities. There is, for example, too much delay in enforcing justice and obtaining rights in our courts. It takes too long to get a decision from the Interstate Commerce Commission on rate complaints. The Internal Revenue Department is still at work on auditing certain income-tax returns for 1917, five years after they have been made. There is a great deal of red tape throughout the Government service which might well be cut and the work speeded up along more practical business lines. So I have no doubt that some criticism of this valuation work on that ground of delay is just. But it is well that we remember that during the period of the work the war came on, with its complications and unsettlements, and then still more important is it that we remember that the United States is a country of vast distances and wide expanse of territory. In order that the farmers of the West and the great Northwest and the South and Southwest might exchange the products of their farms and ranches and orchards for the products of the mills and factories of the North and East it has been necessary to develop a closely knit and well-coordinated system of national transportation; not transportation confined merely to 48 different States, but a national system of transportation, and that has been done in the United States to an extent equaled nowhere else in the world. We have built 250,000 miles of railroad.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Steam railroad?

Mr. BLACK. Steam railroad. I thank my friend for the suggestion. That was the meaning which I intended to convey. That is nearly one-half of the railroad mileage of the world. And when it comes to valuing this vast system of 250,000 miles of railroad, with all its equipment, with all its terminal facilities, its cars and locomotives and all its other properties, it has been a tremendous and complicated task. Certainly it is natural that it should take some considerable time to complete it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman tell us how much it has cost to make this survey for physical valuation, and what will be the ultimate complete cost of it?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Up to the present time the cost has been about $24,000,000, and it is the estimate of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the work will be completed and ready for announcement on July 1, 1924, which will be the end of the fiscal year for which we are about to appropriate. With the $1,000,000 carried in the present bill, that will make a total cost of something in excess of $25,000,000.

Mr. CARTER. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that this estimate is finally coming to an end; but I want to remind him that I was here when they started this physical valuation, and ever since about one year after it was started we have been hearing that it was going to be finished by the end of the next fiscal year.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman allow me to reply to my friend from Oklahoma? I think my friend from Oklahoma has unintentionally been a little unfair in his statement. The only promise of completion that I recall was that made by Mr. Prouty, who in his lifetime was the director of valuation, and he stated that he thought the work would be completed by July 1, 1921. But, as I say, the war came on, and with it many complications; and while, as I stated awhile ago, I am not here to take the position that there has not been a certain amount of the usual Government delay, I also state that we should bear in mind the tremendous undertaking which the valuation work involved.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield just one moment further; of course we all realize that it has been a tremendous task, but if I recall correctly, when this authorization was made by the House the statement was made on the floor of the House that the work could be completed in three years.

Mr. BLACK. That might have been stated; but the important thing is the valuation work, and I want now to discuss the value of having accurate information on this important subject and I will direct the remainder of my remarks along that line.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment I will. There seems to be an impression—of course, entirely in good faith—on the part of a number of Members that the valuation work will really be of no value when completed. I think I will be able to show—in fact, I am sure I will be able to convince those Members who have expressed their skepticism—that this valuation work is indispensable. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. Has the commission found any difficulty in determining the basis of valuation?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I understand there are probably some undetermined factors in that matter yet. For example, the commission announces a tentative valuation. The carrier has a right to be heard on that decision and to present reasons why it should be changed, and my conviction is that the Supreme Court of the United States will finally have to settle definitely one of these completed valuations in order to lay down a rule that will govern the decision in all the cases.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, it has not yet been ascertained what elements enter into determining the basis of physical valuation?

Mr. BLACK. So far as I know, no completed valuation has been judicially determined. I mean determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. But, of course, there are a great many decisions as to what constitute elements of a fair valuation of public utilities, and I have no doubt the Interstate Commerce Commission has given full consideration to the rule laid down in these cases.

Mr. LONDON. It is a tentative valuation in the sense of having to have an approval of the court.

Mr. BLACK. No. A tentative valuation is first announced and then the commission, after giving the carrier opportunity to be heard, makes a completed valuation. This completed valuation is subject to an appeal by the carriers to the courts.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. With reference to the cost of the valuation, will the gentleman state that the railroads say it has cost them about $60,000,000, so that the total cost is about $85,000,000, enough to build a good-sized railroad.

Mr. BLACK. I was only speaking of the cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask what was this cost to the railroads?

Mr. BLACK. I understand that they claim to the Interstate Commerce Commission that the cost of the bookkeepers, experts, and engineers and other employees that they have detailed to do the work involved an expense of $60,000,000.

Mr. CARTER. That was to furnish the commission with data and evidence of their side of the valuation?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman could not expect the Government to undertake a great work of that kind and then pay for that kind of work?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; no one is contending for that.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I was only speaking of that cost to show the amount of cost that the valuation has developed ultimately upon the people.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that the railroads do contend that they have spent $60,000,000 to pay the salaries of employees detailed to this work. Whether their statement is true, I do not pretend to say.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman enumerate the factors which enter into determining the physical valuation of the railroad?

Mr. BLACK. In the time which has been allotted to me in this debate I could hardly go into a discussion of the rules and regulations of valuation used by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the elements of valuation.

Mr. LONDON. That is the whole thing.

Mr. BLACK. It is my purpose to devote the rest of my remarks to showing why this valuation is necessary, and I can not at this time undertake to go into all the elements of valuation which the Interstate Commerce Commission uses in its work.

There are only three ways that the commission can get at a valuation of the carriers: First, by pure guesswork. Second, they can get it by taking the statements of the carriers themselves for it. That would neither be wise nor proper. The third way is by making a careful, intelligent valuation of its own. The latter method has been authorized by Congress, and the only criticism I have to offer is that Congress should have required it long before it did.

WHAT IS THE USE OF VALUATION?

Now, why should the Interstate Commerce Commission have accurate knowledge as to valuation? First, there can be no intelligent rate making without knowledge as to the value of the property actually used in transportation. Of course, valuation should not be the sole test. There are other elements which must be considered—the honesty, economy, and efficiency of the management. That must necessarily come in for important consideration. But when due allowance has been made for these factors, then a rate which will not yield a fair return on the property actually used in transportation would be confiscatory and would be so held by the court. Second, in the transportation act of 1920 we made the requirement that all future issues of bonds and securities of the railway companies should receive the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In my judgment, it is one of the very best parts of the act. Whatever may have been the abuses by carriers in the past as to the issues of watered stock and overbonding of their properties, there should be no more of these abuses in the future, and there will be none if their issuance is carefully supervised by the commission under the transportation act of 1920. That work can only be properly done by the commission having correct information as to the valuation of railroad property.

Third, the transportation act of 1920 provided that the railroads of the country shall be divided into groups, and that the roads in each group shall be valued, and the rates shall be fixed so as to yield a fair return in each group, taking the carriers as a whole. It was, of course, recognized that there could be no exact uniformity of earnings, that some roads less advantageously situated would earn less than the average, and that other roads more advantageously situated would earn more than the average return for the group. Therefore, it is provided in the act that where a carrier earns more than 6 per cent it should pay one-half of all the excess into a revolving fund to be administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission and loaned at reasonable rates of interest and upon fair terms of payment for the extension and improvement of transportation facilities in any part of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. BLACK. The commission, I understand, has ascertained that some 43 carriers have earned more than the 6 per cent in 1922 and will, therefore, owe certain sums to the Government under the terms of the act. It seems certain that the commission will have to institute suits against at least some of the carriers to recover the amounts due, and it will be absolutely necessary to have accurate information as to values. Congress should stand squarely behind the commission in its effort to recover this money.

Fourth, the same transportation act of 1920, to which I have referred, provides for the consolidation of carriers into systems under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In order that proper amounts of securities may be authorized upon the consolidated assets of the carriers, it is of course necessary, absolutely essential, for the commission to have some accurate knowledge as to the valuation of the carriers which are to be consolidated.

For the reasons which I have mentioned, which are perfectly obvious, and for others that I might well mention, it is to my mind necessary for this work to proceed to completion at just as early a date as possible. The commission has asked for $1,280,000 to complete this work. The bill under consideration provides only $1,000,000. The members of the commission appearing before the Appropriations Committee say that its work would be seriously impeded and seriously delayed if the whole $1,280,000 is not provided, and, therefore, I believe it is very doubtful economy to curtail the appropriation and thereby run the risk of hindering and delaying the work. The purpose of my remarks at this time is to ask Members to get the hearings and read the statement as to the appropriation required to carry on this valuation work, and at the proper time and place I intend to offer an amendment to increase the amount provided for in this bill to the figures asked for by the commission. If the Members will read the hearings and will consider the importance and necessity of the matter, I believe they will vote to adopt the amendment which I propose to offer. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On January 5, 1923:

H. R. 13316. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked for a few minutes at this time to speak upon the item in the bill which we are now considering, which carries an appropriation of $340,000 for the maintenance and operation of the United States Railroad Labor Board.

During the consideration of the present transportation act when it was before Congress in 1920 I at that time opposed the plan to create the Railroad Labor Board, as I did not believe it would be successful in preventing strikes upon the railroads and in adjusting the wages and working conditions of the railway employees.

FAILED TO FUNCTION.

The Railroad Labor Board has now been in existence for over two years, and no one can deny the fact that it has failed to carry out and accomplish the good results which its advocates predicted for it. It has demonstrated that it has no power to prevent strikes, nor could it stop them when once they started. The board has not prevented the intimidation of workers, the destruction of property, nor the stoppage of transportation. In fact, I believe that the decisions and actions of the board have tended to precipitate many of these troubles.

I want to be fair and say that I do not believe this is the fault of the Railroad Labor Board as it is at present constituted. I believe that it is the fundamental danger which always appears whenever our Government undertakes to make labor contracts for private industries which are not operated by the Government itself. [Applause.] In that respect I want to say that the only basic industries in which strikes have seriously threatened the welfare of our people and cost hundreds of millions of dollars during the last two years are the railroads and the coal-mining industry, and the Government placed its hands upon them during the war period and attempted by law to fix prices, wages, and working conditions.

PRINCIPLE IS WRONG.

I do not believe in the principle involved in the power given to the Railroad Labor Board, as a governmental agency, to establish wages and interfere in the ordinary relations between employers and employees in private industry. When our Government takes this position and undertakes to perform these functions it is drifting near to socialism. Such a policy will take away from the workingman his own individual initiative and at the same time take from the employer the management of his own private business.

I believe that the continuance of a Government board to adjust by authority of law controversies arising between railroad managers and their employees is a step toward Government ownership or the nationalization of the transportation industry. Such a policy is bound to create national organizations of the employees and in a like manner will consolidate the railway executives. This means that the people on each side will stand together regardless of what the conditions may be or the cost to the consuming public. This was demonstrated in the railway shop strike last year.

RESULTS OF NATIONAL WAGE DECISIONS.

The decisions of the Railroad Labor Board which caused this strike were national in scope. With one stroke the board attempted to fix the wages and working conditions of all the railway shopmen in the country. Many railroads would have made agreements with their employees had they been permitted to do so, but they were prevented from doing this by reason of the fact that the action of the Labor Board was so far-reaching and national in its character.

The workingmen on the individual railroads were not allowed by their organizations to adjust their differences with their own employers until all the railroads would settle on the same basis—until after the strike had continued for some time and the damage had been done. This same condition applied to railway operators and managers.

"ONE BIG UNION" CREATED.

The action and decision and, in fact, the very existence of the Labor Board at the time of the shop strike created the "one big union" in the ranks of the employers and employees alike, while the people of the country stood by helpless and suffered tremendous loss and inconvenience. Railroad men and managers are forced into national organizations whether they wish it or not if they are to attempt to do business with the Labor Board.

The "one big union," whether it be among employers or employees, is dangerous to our Government and the public interest, and that is the chief reason why I oppose such tribunals as the Railroad Labor Board. It encourages the spread of mass action among the workers on the one hand and the formation of gigantic combinations of capitalistic interests on the other hand. It prevents friendly cooperation and the practice of the square deal between the managers and men, and it feeds more and more fuel to the devastating flames of class hatred and prejudice which are such a grave danger to the American life of to-day. It destroys the teachings that all men should be given equal opportunities to advance to higher places according to their integrity, ability, and industry. [Applause.]

HOW TO SETTLE LABOR TROUBLE.

I am of the firm opinion that controversies and grievances arising between railway managers and their employees can best be handled and settled between the officers and employees of each particular railroad company or system. It will be a bright and happy day for our country when we get back to a condition of affairs so that the officials in charge of a railroad can run that railroad and the workingmen on that road are permitted to settle their own grievances without being subjected to the interference and dictation of a Government tribunal and "one big union" officials, no matter whether such officials claim to represent the interest of employer or employee.

I say that it is impossible for the Railroad Labor Board to determine what shall be the wages and working conditions on all the railroads in our country without doing an injustice either to one side or the other, and frequently to both. Railroads are operated as a private institution, and they should remain as far as possible a private enterprise, under the proper Government regulation, for the protection of the public.

LABOR BOARD ONLY MAKES TROUBLE.

The very existence of the Labor Board has been a standing invitation to the railway operators and employees to submit every kind of minor grievance to the board for its consideration. The hearings that were held by the Appropriations Committee on this bill which we are now considering will show that Mr. G. W. W. Hanger, who is a member of the board, stated that it has had to consider thousands of small complaints, many of them involving only one or two persons, which could have been quickly settled by the shop committee or grievance committee on a particular railroad.

I am fully convinced that the Railroad Labor Board is not necessary and that it has done very little except to make trouble since it was created. It has done more than that, for it has been the means through which much of the friendly feeling and spirit of cooperation that once existed between railroad managers and their employees has been destroyed. It is costing the American taxpayers $340,000 a year and bringing no good return for the expense. I believe that the time has come when Congress should take steps at once to abolish the board, because by so doing we would not only be saving our overburdened taxpaying public $340,000 a year but we would also be bringing about the restoration of industrial peace on the railroads of the country. [Applause.]

SHOULD REPLACE LABOR BOARD.

I have introduced a bill, which is now pending before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and reestablish in its place the Board of Mediation and Conciliation and Arbitration, as provided for in the Newlands Act, for the settlement and adjustment of disputes between railroad carriers and their employees.

The Newlands Act provided a sane, fair, and equitable way to adjust disputes that might arise in the transportation service. More than 90 per cent of the cases that came before the Board of Mediation and Conciliation were adjusted and approved by both sides to the dispute. During the hearings on the bill which we are now considering, G. W. W. Hanger, who was a member of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, but now is a member of the Railroad Labor Board, was requested to state his views on the workings of the Mediation and Conciliation Board. On page 152 of the printed hearings of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives for the independent offices appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year Mr. Hanger is quoted as saying:

HOW NEWLANDS ACT WORKED.

In the Newlands Act adjustment of disputes operated in this way: The act established a board of mediation and conciliation. The board was to operate only when there was a threatened stoppage of traffic. That stoppage of traffic was usually indicated by a strike vote having been taken, in which the men had voted they would leave the service unless their matters were adjusted. We were called upon by one party or the other, or by both, to come and attempt to settle the matter. We immediately got on the ground and in 9 cases out of 10 of the 100 or more cases of threatened strikes that came before us we were able to settle them by mediation and conciliation, sometimes after very long discussions with both sides—not together, but separately. In the tenth case, however, we could not settle. We could not bring them together.

The law then provided that we should endeavor to bring about an arbitration of the matter, and enumerated a number of stipulations which should go into the arbitration agreement. The law did not make arbitration compulsory, but both the carriers and employees always, or nearly always, felt that they could not refuse to arbitrate, and with the exception of the dispute which resulted in the Adamson law did arbitrate. When the arbitration agreement was signed one of the stipulations provided in the law was that both sides should abide by that arbitration. That ended the matter. There was no possibility of a strike after an agreement to arbitrate was reached. That was the theory of that law.

PRESIDENT INTERVENED.

In the dispute that resulted in the enactment of the Adamson law the representatives of the employees refused to arbitrate. In the meantime the Board of Mediation and Conciliation had received a telegram from the President, who knew the situation was very grave, asking us to induce these men, if possible, to see him before they actually called the strike. His request was acceded to by the employees and you gentlemen know the result. That is the only case under the Newlands Act in which arbitration was not accepted.

I do not contend that the Newlands Act or any other man-made law will be an absolute guaranty under all conditions against strikes, but a comparison of the record of the work of the Railroad Labor Board and the Board of Mediation and Conciliation should convince any fair-minded person that the last-named board is far more likely to get favorable results.

SECRETARY DAVIS OPPOSES LABOR BOARD.

On October 14, 1922, Hon. James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, in a speech delivered at Athens, Ohio, said:

I am confident that every industrial dispute can be settled if both sides will sit down in a spirit of fairness and justice to discuss the matters at issue around the council table. * * * As to disputes in the field of transportation I have very clear and definite views. I am utterly unable to discover the wisdom of any such quasi governmental partisan institution as the Railroad Labor Board.

To my mind the experience of the board has demonstrated that it is incapable of fulfilling the high hopes of those who proposed and supported it as a means of industrial peace on the railroads. It was created by the Esch-Cummins Act, designed to meet an emergency and to return the railroads to private ownership. By reason of the constant tendency of both employers and workers to press their differences to the highest authority for settlement, each seeking to win an ultimate advantage, the board has been swamped with a mass of minor cases which might easily have been adjusted in the localities where they originated by man-to-man negotiations. Every minor controversy between a switchman and a yard foreman has ultimately found its way to the congested docket of the board. Its proceedings have thus been hampered and delayed out of all reason, with the result that parties to all of these disputes have become irritated and disgruntled. The system designed to foster a better feeling between workers and employers has unfortunately worked out with directly opposite result. It has had the effect of making every petty trade disagreement a matter for Federal determination.

TIME TO GET RID OF THE BOARD.

Mr. Chairman, I am in full accord with this statement of the Secretary of Labor, and I repeat that I believe it is high time for Congress to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and permit the railway carriers and their employees to settle their own disputes in an orderly way without having a Government board to pass upon every little trivial question that may arise at any time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. I agree, of course, absolutely with the gentleman from Ohio that it is highly desirable to have employees and railroad managers negotiate their own agreements, but the point that comes to my mind is what will be done when mediation will not mediate and conciliation will not conciliate. In 1916 Congress had to pass the Adamson law because mediators under the Newlands Act had reached the point where they could go no further and the Nation faced a complete tie-up of its transportation facilities, and the Adamson law was rushed through in two days, without any consideration on the part of the Congress, or I might more properly say without sufficient consideration.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Let me answer the gentleman from Texas by saying that the Railroad Labor Board could not settle the shop strike of last summer, and I am of the firm opinion that if there had been no Labor Board we would not have had that strike.

Mr. BLACK. They made a decision as the agency of the Government and that stands as a decision by the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes; that is true; but it did not settle or prevent the strike. The gentleman from Texas knows that the only way the strike was settled was by individual negotiation between the railroad employees and the railroad managers.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, I agree with him that it is highly desirable to have that done wherever it can be done, and I am not affirming that the Railroad Labor Board is a full solution of the problem, but it does seem to me that we have to give some consideration to the situation which arose in September, 1916.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman from Texas has again referred to the threatened strike of September, 1916. But the fact is that there was no railroad strike at that time while the Board of Mediation and Conciliation was functioning, and there was a nation-wide railroad strike last year while the Railroad Labor Board was functioning; and, as I have already said, I do not believe that strike would have taken place if the Labor Board had not been in existence.

STRIKES INJURE EVERYBODY.

Mr. Chairman, I do not deny the right of the workers to strike. No man should be deprived of the right to cease work if he so chooses, and, on the other hand, no man should be prevented from working if he desires to work. But the strike is a clumsy instrument to be used, because it nearly always injures those who use it as well as those against whom it is used and also the innocent bystanders—the general public. Therefore we should urge the uses of the processes of conciliation, mediation, and arbitration as a means of settling labor disputes.

Strikes will be averted not by the Government passing laws to take away from the workers the right to strike but by the removal of the causes for strikes. The Government alone can not remove these causes, but it can encourage the removal of causes for dissatisfaction among the workers, such as the long workday, inadequate wages, and the taking of an unfair proportion of the profits of industry by capital.

RAILROADS MUST RUN.

One thing I am sure of, and that is that our Government will never permit our transportation systems, through which the industrial lifeblood of the Nation passes, to be tied up or paralyzed by any class or interest very long. [Applause.] I am sure that the public, which is always in the very large majority, would not tolerate any such condition of affairs, and it is with this thought in mind that I express the hope that a policy will be established that will avert railroad strikes in the future. After careful investigation and consideration and talks with representative railroad managers and workers I have come to the conclusion that the best thing that can be done at this time to insure industrial peace on the railroads is to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and permit the railroad operators and their employees to cooperate peacefully and harmoniously in the settlement of whatever differences may arise relative to wages and working conditions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what I propose to say in reference to one item of this bill will probably accomplish no substantial result, but it does seem to me that it is a matter of sufficient importance to call to the attention of the committee and the country. By virtue of my membership upon the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries I have had a great deal to do, in connection with my colleagues, with this shipping proposition and the activities of the United States Shipping Board. When the war was over and we began to take stock of the liabilities of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation it was found that there was pending against them a great number of claims amounting to a great many hundreds in number, and hundreds of millions of dollars in value. On July 27, 1921, Mr. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations of the House with reference to those claims and suggested that in order that there might be a fair and equitable settlement of them, in order that the claims to the Government should receive fair and equitable consideration, the adjustment and settlement of those claims should be taken exclusively out of the hands of the Shipping Board itself and its legal staff and that an entirely independent commission should be established for the purpose of settling those claims. I desire to incorporate in the RECORD the very fine argument, it seems to me, that Mr. Lasker made before the committee at that time in support of that proposition. He said:

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Lasker, what do you think, as a general policy for the Government, of turning over to the Attorney General's department all these adjustments?

Mr. LASKER. I do not think that should be done.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As it is now, we have adjustment boards in a half dozen or dozen or more different departments of the Government passing on claims, adjusting claims, and allowing claims; and the real legal department of the Government, which is intended to protect the interests of the Government and is prepared to do so, or ought to be prepared to do so, has practically nothing to do with it until its opinion happens to be asked.

Mr. LASKER. I will answer that and tell you what we are doing in the premises. You said you were going to take it up later. I will take it up now, Mr. Chairman, or later.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you take it up now.

Mr. LASKER. I think it ought to be separate from the Attorney General. It ought to be a separate and distinct department, because it is a business department. * * * In our own department I will tell you what we have done with these claims. The claimants come before employees of the department. They have no faith, and they can have no faith that they are before judges who are unprejudiced. The men on the claims board, if they are your own employees, want to make a good showing because they think that on that the raise in their salaries is based. It is not fair, and I believe it works against the Government.

I think that the people come in with such padded claims that before we get through most of the people get more than they are entitled to, but that does not do them very much good because of the inefficiency and the delay which very often forces them into an embarrassing position before they get their money.

So I went to the President and I said, "I wish you would permit us to establish a claims commission independent of the Shipping Board, a commission to pass on these claims. We will appear before them by counsel and the claimants will appear before them with counsel. The claimants will not have the nerve to come before such a commission with padded claims, provided the right type of men are on the commission; but they will come before such a commission knowing that there will be dispatch, because the commission has no other business, and that they will get a fair deal. The Government, too, will get a fair deal."

The President permitted that, and we appointed a claims commission. I believe we have on it five very distinguished men, men who must challenge the respect of all who come before them. The chairman of that claims commission is Judge Walter D. Meals, of Cleveland, Ohio. The other members of it are Mr. Homer Ferguson, the president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Yards; Mr. F. W. Wood, who was formerly president of the Maryland Steel Co.; Commander Richard M. Watt, who was formerly chief construction officer of the Navy; and Mr. Arthur W. Teele, who is vice president of the Public Accountants' Association of the United States.

These five men can not be fooled; three of them are practical ship contractors. I anticipate that the claims will be settled expeditiously and fairly, as never before in a Government department.

But I quite agree with you that it ought not to be necessary for us to establish our own commissions. These assets should be taken over by another department and all these claims should be taken over, and we ought to have to appear before that independent tribunal, because look at this: If we are utterly incompetent, if we are cheating a claimant, if we have wasted the money and the claimant can prove it, there is nobody to check it. We can get away with murder under this system. * * *

It is an awful system, but, of course, that is the fault of the Government.

Now, after that terrific arraignment against the system in vogue, Mr. Lasker recommended, and the Appropriations Committee authorized, the establishment of an independent claims commission to do the very things Mr. Lasker had suggested. That board was authorized, it was appointed, and began its functions about a year ago, and if you take the pains to read the report of this committee—if you listened to the remarks of the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. WOOD of Indiana] in this House yesterday—you will see that this splendid commission, representing as it did an independent method of arbitration, free from Shipping Board alliance, free from any interest or claim, you would see that they have no doubt saved to the Government of the United States scores of millions of dollars in their fair and impartial settlement of those claims. There is still remaining, gentlemen of the committee, pending before the Shipping Board to-day, some $57,000,000 of unadjusted and unpaid claims, yet with this splendid record of this independent board of arbitration, the fine effect of whose work and whose efficiency has been so highly commended by the chairman of the subcommittee, without rhyme or reason, without any satisfactory explanation except that they had already served long enough to lay down certain general principles of procedure, therefore their services were no longer considered necessary, and they are arbitrarily dismissed from the service of the Government, and we find the Shipping Board going back to its original pernicious and unjustifiable system, which its own chairman so forcefully condemned in July, 1921, and for the settlement of these $57,000,000 worth of claims still pending against the Shipping Board we are reverting to the old system, which he himself says is murder and under which they can get away with anything. I would like to have some real explanation from somebody who knows as to why this splendid agency of the Government, set up for such a splendid purpose, and which has accomplished such fine results for the Government of the United States, by somebody's whim or caprice should be summarily dismissed from the further service of the Government. [Applause.]

I know, gentlemen, that it was not because they were anxious, as has been suggested here, to get back to their private employments, because at the hearings before our Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asked Judge Meals, the chairman of the commission, a question as to why they were giving up their labors, and the answer of Judge Meals was such as to show that this suggestion is not correct. Mr. HARDY asked Judge Meals this question:

I am going to ask you a question, and you can answer it or not. I want to know what in the devil is the matter? I want to know why the commission is being dissolved?

Judge Meals said:

Well, you ask me, as I said awhile ago, rather a delicate question.

I would like to have some answer from the committee and from gentlemen interested in all the claims pending against the Treasury of the United States as to why this splendid board was dissolved, and why we are going back to that putrid system of allowing the board's personnel, under their control, to judge of the facts and the law under which these claimants may be denied their day in court and by which there may be no equitable settlement of these claims?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Who has the power to dissolve the commission?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to have the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations answer that question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. What is it?

Mr. GARNER. I say, who has the power to dissolve this commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Shipping Board itself. It is a pure matter of administration.

Mr. GARNER. Then, perhaps, the gentleman who appeared before the committee, perhaps Mr. Lasker himself, desired to have action taken on this matter?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will read the hearings, he will find all the information he wants as to why this board has been discontinued.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Indiana gave us as one of the reasons why this board was being dissolved that the members of it were anxious to get back to their private employment. That is not the real reason. As the truth comes out, they are being in effect dismissed from the service of the Government without rhyme or without reason.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will answer the gentleman's question, if he will permit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. A year ago we had a hard time to organize this commission. The commission served its purpose and did it well. They have done all that they ever could do; they have established a basis of policy upon which these claims could be settled. That is all that they have ever done or could do, no matter how long continued.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This commission went into the facts of the cases and made representations to the Shipping Board as to the amount any claimant should be allowed, or whether or not his claim should be allowed or denied.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand, the gentleman from Alabama made what purported to be a statement to the effect that the Shipping Board would have influence with its own employees in the settlement of these cases. Now, is the gentleman from Indiana going back to that identical, monstrous system?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GARNER. Very well.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have got as the basis for the settlement of these claims the principles laid down by the commission, so that it is only a matter of figuring and accountancy. I want to say to the gentleman this, that there are a certain number of claimants who are honestly, perhaps, urging the amount of their claims who are wanting to make an appeal from certain settlements that have been indicated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this work of the independent claims commission, as I said yesterday in a colloquy with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], has been such splendid work and has saved so much money, no doubt, to the Government of the United States, and has given such universal satisfaction to these claimants who have propounded their claims before the Shipping Board, that in view of the fact that the gentleman says these claims ought to be finished up by the 1st of July this splendid organization, which did such valuable service, should have been continued until all these claims were settled and paid.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the change in the attitude of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I wish to express my appreciation of the splendid commendation he has made of the judgment of the committee that established this commission a year ago.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am still commending their good judgment in establishing the claims commission, but not their subsequent action in abolishing it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I promised to give a moment to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement by Gov. Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Railroad Labor Board, as to the number of the board's decisions that were violated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. REECE. It is simply a statement by the chairman of the Railroad Labor Board concerning the board's decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the document referred to:

STATEMENT OF BEN W. HOOPER, CHAIRMAN OF THE LABOR BOARD, AS TO NUMBER OF BOARD'S DECISIONS VIOLATED.

The Railroad Labor Board has received many inquiries in regard to the number of violations of its decisions. The people are apparently anxious to ascertain the extent to which the decisions of the board, without the sanction of a penalty, have been respected by the parties.

A careful check of our records shows the facts set out below:

From April 15, 1920, to December 15, 1922, the full period of the board's operations, 11,414 disputed questions were referred to it. Of these, 9,244 have been disposed of. Of the total number of disputes, 961 did not reach the status of regularly docketed cases.

The cases regularly docketed, as in a court, numbered 10,453. Of these, 8,534 have been disposed of. Many of these cases, involving the same general questions of wages and rules, were consolidated under one docket and decision number.

There are in the United States 201 Class I railroads and 892 short lines. Of the Class I carriers, 58, and of the short lines and miscellaneous companies, 56, are alleged to have violated decisions of the board.

The violations that have occurred on the short lines affect a comparatively small number of men, but involve the same principles as those on the large railroads.

On the Class I roads there have occurred 61 cases in which the board has formally held that its decisions have been violated. Of these, 46 are comprised in the so-called "contract" cases, in which the carriers let to contractors, independent, or claimed to be independent, the work of certain classes of their employees. These cases can hardly be characterized as direct and unquestioned violations of the board's decisions, inasmuch as the contracts were entered into under a claim of right, and the legal question involved is now before the Federal courts from one road. It must also be noted that, after the board decided that such contracts could not operate to arbitrarily change the established rules and wages of the employees, all but a few of the railroads implicated withdrew from their contracts. If, in view of these facts, these 46 contracting cases be omitted from the 61 cases in which the board has declared violations, there will remain 15 violations on Class I roads. As to this remaining number, a considerable portion of the roads have complied with the board's adverse decision. Just how many roads have not done so, the board is not fully informed. One case from the Pennsylvania Railroad is involved in a lawsuit in which the carrier attacks the board's decision.

In the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic case the violation of the board's decision, consisting of a wage reduction by the receiver, was authorized by a Federal board.

In addition to those cases wherein the board has formally held its decisions to have been violated there are 76 cases pending before the board in which it is charged that Class I carriers have violated decisions, but upon which charges the board has not yet taken action. Many of these are contested by the carriers, and a majority of them have been heard and are ready for decision.

A large percentage of the alleged violations involve unauthorized reductions of wages and unauthorized changes in rules.

In cases complaining of such wage reductions the board has decided seven in favor of the employees and one in favor of the carrier.

In cases complaining of arbitrary changes in rules the board has rendered 10 decisions upholding the employees and 2 sustaining the carriers.

Only two of the board's decisions have been attacked in the courts, in both cases by the carriers.

In only one instance to my knowledge has an employee gone into court to assert his rights under a decision of the board. In that case the Supreme Court of Mississippi gave judgment in favor of the employee and upheld the board's decision.

There have been no violations of the board's decisions by employees, unless the shop strike and the Missouri & North Arkansas strike should be so accounted. In the shop strike, however, it must be remembered that the shopmen did not accept the board's decision, and, consequently, claimed that they did not violate it but exercised their legal right under the transportation act to reject it.

The strike on the Missouri & North Arkansas might be classed as a violation of the board's decision, but the employees claim that the carrier in the first instance violated a decision and that they in the second instance declined to accept one.

There is no way in which the employees can violate a decision and remain in the service, because such violation would mean discharge.

Let me cap these naked facts and figures with two conclusions: First, the board's decisions have been respected by both parties to a degree that is remarkable, in view of the great number of decisions and the trying and unsettled period through which the railroad industry has been passing. Second, the enforceability of the decisions of this board or any tribunal of similar jurisdiction is more desirable for the protection of the rights of the employees than for any other purpose.

BEN W. HOOPER,
Chairman United States Railroad Labor Board.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 29, 1922.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds (within iron fence), $5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I notice in the report of the Budget Committee the estimate for improvement of the White House grounds is $10,080, and the committee allowed $5,000. What was the occasion for the reduction?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Prior to last year this appropriation had been $5,000. We came to understand last year that if the appropriation were made $10,000 all the necessary repairs might be made and that the grounds would be put in condition where they could be maintained thereafter with the usual appropriation. But it is like all these other appropriations—after you get a new figure fixed once they try to stick to that new basis. When we gave them that $10,000 two years ago we thought they would go back to the $5,000, but they did not.

Mr. STAFFORD. What improvements were made then that would not be made under this reduced appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We were told that during the World War something had happened to some of the trees and shrubbery. They put in some sheep there to cure what might have happened, and instead of curing it they seemed to have done some damage by themselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this to cure the damage done by the sheep?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that had something to do with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, in view of the statement of the gentleman, I think this would be proper to relieve the damage done by the sheep.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHITE HOUSE POLICE.

Salaries: First sergeant, $2,140; 2 sergeants, at $1,800 each; and 30 privates, at $1,660 each; in all, $55,540.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee what became of the police who used to be detailed from the District force to the care of the White House? Were they discharged from the police force or were they kept on the pay rolls of the District just the same, in spite of the fact of this additional appropriation of $55,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This House passed an act putting the White House police under the direct control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, so that the appropriation formerly carried in the District bill for their support was transferred to this bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the personnel the same as it was?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether it is the same personnel or not, but it is simply a transfer of authority and supervision.

Mr. BRIGGS. What I am trying to ascertain is whether or not under that transfer of authority a new set of police were obtained for the White House grounds and the other police who used to be there were turned back to the District, to be used in the city, so that there is really an actual increase in the District police force for general purposes amounting to 30 men?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether there has been a change in the personnel or not.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am speaking about the number of officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will allow me, the bill which we passed provided that there should be only one change, and that an officer of the national park police was to be transferred to the police force and the existing police force should be continued, and that the present established Metropolitan police force should be increased by the number who had been heretofore assigned for the protection of the White House and grounds.

Mr. BRIGGS. In other words, there was an increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been an increase in the permanent force of the Metropolitan police of the District to the extent of the number who were on duty in the White House and grounds, save one, and that one was transferred from the national park commission.

Mr. BRIGGS. That was what I was asking. In other words, there was an increase of 30 in the Metropolitan police.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was an increase of 30.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice in the newspapers of the District there seems to be a disposition to clamor for more policemen, as though they had never had any recent increase. It was my recollection that that change had resulted in the increase which has been stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are great numbers of men in the District who would like to parade around in the uniform of a policeman.

Mr. GARNER. And draw the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended; including personal and other services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $280,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] if he has any information that will qualify him to make a forecast as to when it may be expected that legislation will be enacted that will bring about a cessation of the work for which this particular appropriation is made? We have been hearing all through two Congresses that there is to be legislation. Nevertheless we are appropriating every year, and so far as I know there is no prospect that we are going to have legislation considered here during the present Congress with a view to bringing to a close the activities of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may or may not have been present yesterday when we discussed this thing. I inveighed against the delay. To my mind there is no reason why something should not be done toward the winding up of this affair. During that discussion the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] arose and said that they were now having hearings with reference to a bill that had been introduced for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the Alien Property Custodian. I hope it will be done. It ought to be done.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Of course, it ought to be done, in view of the history and traditions of our country in respect to the general question of confiscating or not confiscating property that belongs to individuals who were identified with an enemy country. Yet apparently the thing is lagging along so that this time next year we may be engaged in the same performance that we are engaged in now—of appropriating a great sum of money to maintain the operations of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I stated yesterday, and I wish to reiterate it to-day, that the gentleman who is at the head of the Alien Property Custodian administration has been doing everything in his power to try to get the action of this Congress with reference to winding up the affairs of his trust, and he has suggested what I think is the most practical way of getting rid of at least a portion of it. Ninety-three per cent of all these trusts represent funds aggregating sums of less than $10,000 each, and only 7 per cent consists of trusts of $10,000 or more.

Out of the $350,000,000 in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, $50,000,000 would pay off all these smaller trusts and make an allocation of $10,000 to each of the larger trusts, which would be a very great relief to those who are interested and a very long step toward the ultimate winding up of this affair. Now, that is the thing that is under consideration, as I understand, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is any member of that committee here?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] was here yesterday, and during the general debate stated that there was a probability of a measure disposing of this property soon being reported.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair to say that while perhaps the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] states the attitude of the Alien Property Custodian in regard to this matter, there are other departments of the Government that are vitally interested in the action taken looking toward the disposition of this property; and at least one reason why legislation has not been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as I understand it, is that these other departments have not been in a position to make a recommendation as to the disposition of this property.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman be a little more definite and tell us what the departments are, and the difficulties they are encountering?

Mr. MAPES. That can not be done by me, because I am not familiar enough with the situation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will relieve the gentleman of responsibility by stating that there is a matter involving our foreign relations, with reference to claims that we may have for the confiscation and destruction of property of American citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is a foreign relations matter involved in this question, and it is delicate in its nature, with reference to the amount of claims that some of our citizens may have for the destruction and confiscation of their property. But it is so infinitesimally small as compared with the amount of property that we have in our hands after we have adopted the policy that we are not going to have a general confiscation scheme, that it strikes me there is no reason why the Government could not protect itself with reference to all the claims we may possibly have and yet relieve the great distress that is caused by reason of our keeping this property.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. MAPES. I do not know whether the gentleman from Indiana knows it or not, but the bill to which he especially refers has only been before the Committee on Interstate Commerce a short time, and there are a multitude of ramifications to this alien-property proposition which I imagine men who have not given it special consideration and study never dreamed of. It is a matter that can not be disposed of without very careful consideration and without a full knowledge of the situation.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I wish the gentleman would be a little more specific and elaborate to the House whether he knows of any other important legislation where Congress has been derelict in its duty.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, I expect every Congress has been criticized of being derelict in its duty; in fact, that is a criticism that can be made against every Congress that we have had.

Mr. GARNER. I was very glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana agree with some who have criticized Congress in saying that Congress had been derelict in neglecting to pass legislation of this character.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is the easiest thing in the world to criticize. It has been the custom of ages to criticize Congress for not doing the public business. I think this is a splendid time to emphasize the fact that instead of increasing the number of this body we should reduce the number, so that we can have more individual responsibility.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think that the disease is becoming a little worse all the time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Perhaps, like all other diseases that are progressive, it may be getting a little worse, but we can not help it any by picking the scabs off of the sore; we can better employ ourselves by prescribing a remedy.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In connection with the Alien Property Custodian, it has been suggested that there are numerous difficult and complex problems in the situation. It is a well-established principle of international law and of morals among civilized nations that the property of the individual national should not be confiscated or held to pay claims against his government. There should be no difficulty on that score. The Alien Property Custodian has possession of property not only of former Austrian and German subjects, but he has in his possession property of persons who were in no way connected either with the German or the Austrian Governments. Owing to a peculiar construction of the rule adopted during the war, residents of territory temporarily occupied by the German or Austrian Armies were held to be alien enemies. Their property was seized by the Alien Property Custodian. This situation should be relieved immediately. There is no excuse for the nonpayment of these claims.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think that if we could arrive at some method of adjustment of these trusts amounting to $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, and the German nation could get hold of it, that it might contribute to ease the financial condition of that country?

Mr. LONDON. That is a helpful suggestion. I was speaking of the claimants who owed no allegiance to Germany but who were residents of territory temporarily in control of the German Government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do not think, gentlemen of the committee, that you ought to jump at conclusions in this matter, in expressing offhand that there has been dereliction on the part of anybody. A great deal of property was seized by the Alien Property Custodian during the war for the purpose of preventing that property being possibly used against the United States in that war. At the end of the war, as you all know, the German Empire was dissolved and a German Republic took its place. By the operation of the treaty of Versailles the German and Austrian Empires were, to a considerable degree, dismembered and their credit reduced to such a point that there is absolutely no hope of any citizen of the United States being able to get his claim satisfied against those governments by ordinary processes. I think for about two weeks the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have been having hearings every day on a bill upon this subject. This bill proposes to turn back property in value not to exceed $10,000 to these aliens, and one of the matters being debated in that committee is whether we should not go further and turn back everything we can turn back except such amount as will secure the American payment.

Bear in mind this fact, that the treaty we negotiated with the German Republic provides in itself that the German Government shall take care of the claims of its own people that arose from the taking of this property by the Alien Property Custodian, and that so far as our treaty with the German Government is concerned Germany has assumed these obligations. Bear in mind something else also, that there is an amount of claims, approximately $15,000,000, growing out of the sinking of the Lusitania that every man here thinks ought to be paid. There are other claims aggregating large sums for the destruction of American property. There is no way on earth to get those claims paid unless some pressure is brought to bear on the German Government by withholding these moneys, or a part of them, until those claims are adjusted.

Everybody here knows that if we turn back what we have now difficulty will arise with the European allied countries if we attempt to get money out of the German or Austrian treasuries aside from this particular fund.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the limit were placed at $10,000, will the gentleman state how many of these claims could be satisfactorily settled?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. About $50,000,000 worth.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How many claims are there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Ninety-three per cent of the claims are less than $10,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the only purpose of my question—to get the number.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did I understand the gentleman to construe the German treaty with us to the effect that the German Government as now constituted have agreed to be responsible for the claims of our nationals against the former German Government?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; the claims of German nationals against our Government. The German Government has assumed those claims.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman find any precedent in international law for holding the individual nationals of a foreign Government responsible for the personal claims of our nationals?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, there are plenty of precedents. This is a controversial question before our committee. We are not in agreement about it. It is being debated. At the proper time when the bill comes to the House those precedents will be cited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We are going along very carefully. I have no authority to speak for the committee, but speaking for myself I do not want the membership of this committee to get an idea that the matter is being neglected. Every man on that committee is spending all of the time he can in trying to find out what is right about this matter, with the general disposition that we are going as far as we can. As far as I am personally concerned, I will go to any limit to give back this property. I want to bear in mind one thing, and that is that these Americans who have just claims against the German Government ought to have payment of their claims, and until the time comes when we get to a place where we know their claims are secure, I am not in favor of settling them. I am speaking only for myself; I do not know how the committee feels.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman will recall that the proposition is to pay American claimants to whom there was owing German marks at the time we entered the war in the present value of the mark.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There was something like $40,000,000 owing to the American claimants in 1917, and now they propose to pay these American claimants in marks of the present value. There are some of us who feel that with that situation we ought to investigate before taking action.

Mr. RAYBURN. Has not all the property belonging to Americans been returned?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Practically all of it except the $40,000,000 that we are talking about, which consists of deposits in German banks that were caught there during the war and are now depreciated in value if repaid in marks. Here is something else that is to be considered. There is now pending in the courts a suit to set aside the patents that the Chemical Foundation took over. That is a part of this subject matter, and that suit ought not to be disturbed until it is decided. It is going along as speedily as it can. There are also questions involved in the dealings between the State Department and the Governments of Germany and Austria. The Army and the Navy to-day are in possession of 7,000 of these patents which they are using whenever they find it necessary, and the question of how far we ought to go to give back to alien nationals property which has been found to be somewhat essential in the carrying on of the war, under patents which we ourselves granted as an act of grace to foreign citizens, ought to be very carefully considered. Those things are being considered by our committee, and I think I am safe in saying that that bill will be reported into the House during the present session for some action. We are going as rapidly as possible, and I was told by the chairman to-day that but a few witnesses remained before the conclusion of the hearings.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. As the law stands to-day, has the Alien Property Custodian the right to pay any claim at all?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; he can pay some.

Mr. LONDON. Which can he pay now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He settles some from time to time. There have been quite a lot of them settled. I do not know what the character of them is.

Mr. HOCH. I think something like $200,000,000 worth of claims, as I remember the figure, of nationals of those so-called succession States, carved out of Austria-Hungary, have been paid, something like a third of the total value taken over.

Mr. LONDON. The custodian has authority under the law as it exists to do that?

Mr. HOCH. Yes; and he has settled those.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I hope the House will not be precipitate in its action about this matter.

Mr. GARNER. Has the custodian authority to settle any claims that he desires?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, no. The claim has to be settled under the rules established and under the law.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will yield, the trading with the enemy act as amended gives the Alien Property Custodian authority to settle with every claimant except alien enemies or allies of alien enemies, and would cover, I think, all of the cases without any additional legislation suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think so.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What is the attitude of the gentleman's committee toward claims of this sort——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. I was referring to the property of American citizens located in Germany destroyed during the war itself and in the conduct of the war.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, there are some of those cases. Now, I am simply giving my own idea. The committee has not had any determination of these matters, but witnesses have appeared showing, for instance, that American property in Belgium was destroyed by the German Army marching through there, where it has been dissipated and destroyed and where they have no means on earth of getting compensation except through this alien property, and so far as my own personal viewpoint is concerned the first thing I am thinking about is the claims of American citizens, and I do not take much stock in any kind of philosophy that is all the time thinking about some citizen of some other country, in a sort of mushy sentimentality, and forgetting about Americans who have just claims.

Mr. TILSON. I think the gentleman is right; but this is the kind of a claim I had in my own mind, where an American citizen owned a large factory in Germany and during the war this factory was destroyed by a bomb falling from an allied plane which was bombing that place. It happened that the property of an American citizen was destroyed by an English bomb in the conduct of the war.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, in this case I understand if they have any just claim they file it before the Mixed Claims Commission constituted by the State Department, which seems to have jurisdiction of these matters and before whom these claims are to be filed, and when this Mixed Claims Commission reports and finds the total of the just claims of American citizens against these enemy countries then we will have something fixed and certain to work upon and some sort of a yardstick by which we can measure how much of this money can safely be paid back and at the same time secure just American claims.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in reference to this matter I think it is fair to the committee to say that the Alien Property Custodian has no discretion as far as the settlement is concerned over this property that he has in his hands, and under the act creating the Alien Property Custodian it must remain there until there is some affirmative act of this Congress describing and defining the manner whereby it can be disposed of.

Mr. GARNER. How did it dispose of the $20,000,000 worth?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. By virtue of the fact it was property that came into his possession of those who were determined not to be alien enemies, many being American citizens who had taken out their first and second papers. I expect I have as many of those in my section of the country on account of its cosmopolitan character as anybody. I know he has no discretion about settlement until there is some affirmative action of the Congress in so far as he is determined an alien enemy. Here is one trouble: We continued at war 18 months after the war stopped, when the rest of the world was at peace, and, of course, the act creating the Alien Property Custodian provided that after the cessation of the war certain things shall be done. The limitation did not begin to run until the resolution was passed declaring ourselves at peace. Here is another thing that has complicated the matter: Under the so-called Versailles treaty, signed by the then President of the United States, all of these claims of Americans against the German Empire must be settled out of what is in the Alien Property Custodian's hands. But even admitting all of these handicaps, all of those who have claims of $10,000 or less may be settled, still leaving some $300,000,000 in the hands of this trustee. If it is possible to put in one bill a provision whereby the whole thing can be wound up, it should be arranged, and these fellows with $10,000 or less, amounting to 95 per cent of the whole, may be relieved.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I merely take the floor at this time in order that there may be no misconception as to what is going on in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We have been in hearings for about two weeks. We found that the Alien Property Custodian holds of German property in value about $400,000,000. We have before us a bill that provides that this property shall be returned to aliens owning $10,000 or less. We had the Alien Property Custodian before us for three days. We had a representative of the War Department and a representative of the Navy Department. We have not yet been able to get anybody from the State Department, although some say there is some spooky reason in the State Department why this property should not be returned, but we have not been able to get anybody up here yet from that department; but of those we have heard, there has not been given one good reason why all of this property should not be returned at an early date. [Applause.] I do not know why. The gentleman from Ohio, of course, asked the most natural question in the world a moment ago as to why $10,000—why not $25,000, why not $100,000, why not all of this property and get out of it? The German Government has returned all the property of the people of the United States had in that country except this money, and they are ready, after negotiations, to return that. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] about holding this as some sort of a guaranty that our citizens will be paid, there is not a self-respecting nation on the face of the earth to-day that will confiscate private property to pay the debts of another nation. [Applause.] And the only thing, the only reason on this earth that there could be for holding this property of German nationals would be either for the purpose of confiscation or the threat of confiscation.

We are not going to expect in this country any such thing as that. We need not expect that of anybody else. I do not think there could be a more immoral thing ever thought of than to take the property of an individual or national of any government on earth to make good the debt of that government. All the people of the country pay taxes just alike to support the government, and if the German Government owes the citizens of the United States money, the German Government should pay that. We have got the property of those people up to $400,000,000 or $500,000,000, and we are carrying on an expensive bureau down there with many, many questions about the propriety of many acts down there. We should get out of this business, I say, at the earliest date possible.

A young man was before the committee the other morning who told us how we could arrange about patents. He said there are many patents that the Army and Navy desires to use. That is the simplest thing in the world. You do not have to keep men's property and take a part of the money of these aliens. If the War Department or the Navy Department has a patent that belongs to a German that they want, they could condemn the property and keep it for the use of the United States Government and pay for it, as they ought to do. That is an easy matter. But there is nothing that the United States Government can gain by holding this property any longer, except to create questions that the Alien Property Custodian can not answer, questions that the Secretary of State or his representatives will not come down to answer, and to carry on an expensive bureau and put our country in a light that we do not want it to be put in. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who has just spoken. He discussed a very interesting question, and one that we may be called upon to pass upon quite soon.

Personally I have always had a very definite and a very decided notion as to what it is proper to do with the property of alien enemies seized during hostilities. I think we entirely overdid the business of taking over alien enemy property, or so-called alien enemy property, during the war. A great deal of the property seized never should have been taken. I never have believed that any civilized nation was justified in confiscating the property of an alien enemy to pay a claim against his country. If I had my way about it, and everybody had agreed with my view, we should long ago have restored the property held by the Alien Property Custodian—all of it—under conditions that would have insured the return of all the moneys and property taken by Germany from our nationals during the war.

When we adopted the peace resolution it will be recalled that a majority of the Members of the House were of the opinion that for the time being, at least, we should hold these properties; and the peace resolution provided that the property should be held until otherwise provided by law. And then later we negotiated a treaty with Germany. While I do not recall the exact language of that treaty, my recollection is—and I would like to be corrected if my recollection is not accurate—that Germany agreed in substance that we might hold this property until the question of claims between the two Governments was settled. Of course, we must assume that Germany entered into that obligation freely and without coercion or restraint.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What she agreed to do was that she would pay these claims herself—that is, the German Government agreed to pay these claims?

Mr. MONDELL. She also agreed that we might hold this property pending settlement. The situation, then, is not just what it was before these things were done and accomplished.

Now, since the negotiation of the treaty with Germany we have provided for this joint commission that is to settle the questions at issue between the two Governments. That joint commission is at work, and actively at work, at this time. I think that in view of this situation there may be some question as to the wisdom of returning all this property at this time. It is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us. In theory I think we are all agreed that we should not and that we shall not confiscate private property; and, holding that view, we might have left out of the peace resolution any reference to this property and returned it. Holding that view, we might have made no request of Germany for an agreement relative to holding this property. But we did these things, and the mixed commission is at work, and very earnestly at work.

And so we must view this matter not wholly from the standpoint of theory, but from the standpoint of theory as affected by what has actually occurred and in view of the actual condition.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Mixed Claims Commission is not passing upon any of this alien property which our Government has in its hands.

Mr. MONDELL. That is correct, and while we personally hold the view that we should not confiscate private property, nevertheless and notwithstanding we did, in the peace resolution, take action that indicated an inclination to hold this property for a time; and there could have been no other reason for doing that except the thought that possibly our claims would be more speedily settled if this property was not all returned. I think that must have been in somebody's mind when gentlemen voted that way. It must have been in somebody's mind when the treaty was negotiated, because the treaty was quite definite, as I recall, on that subject. Then comes the mixed tribunal. The mixed tribunal ought within the calendar year to be able to make a report.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, this peace resolution was simply an act of Congress pending the determination of the course that Congress would take with reference to this property and when.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but if, when we adopted the peace resolution, we had been desirous of making effective the view that under no circumstances shall we confiscate private property we might very well have left all reference to this property out of the peace resolution. We injected it into the peace resolution, however. Then later we negotiated the treaty, and later still arranged for the mixed tribunal, and they are now at work.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the gentleman right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I do not remember the exact provisions of the treaty myself, but my recollection is that the German treaty provided that we should retain all of the rights that we had under the Versailles treaty, and the Versailles treaty, if I recollect, had a provision in it providing that these matters should be settled out of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian. Is that correct or not?

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] seems to have that provision of the treaty before him.

Mr. LONDON. The preamble of the treaty refers to the resolution adopted by Congress.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What resolution?

Mr. LONDON. The peace resolution of July 2, and the preamble cites two sections of the resolution, although the resolution consists of a larger number of sections. It cites section 2 and section 5, the latter section relating to the question now under consideration. The treaty itself, however, makes no reference to the question of confiscation of the property of individuals.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not in direct terms.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Except that it adopts the Versailles treaty.

Mr. MONDELL. The treaty very clearly accepts the action relative to that property in the peace resolution and preserves our rights under the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. HOCH. I think it will be found that the treaty of Berlin elaborated and specifically adopted the clearing-house plan which was put into effect by the Versailles treaty.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It did.

Mr. HOCH. While I agree with the gentleman that we ought to turn this property back, whatever odium there is attached to this matter attached originally to the plan conceived at Versailles.

Mr. GARNER. That is my understanding of it. The Versailles treaty made this arrangement, and the Berlin treaty merely confirmed the rights that this Government obtained by reason of the Versailles treaty.

Mr. MONDELL. And accepted the provisions of the peace resolution relating to it.

Mr. HOCH. And various European nations proceeded to make settlements on the theory set out in the treaty of Versailles, which was this clearing-house arrangement.

Mr. RAYBURN. But that was a question of claims of individuals against the Government. It was not a question of alien property held by the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. The peace resolution refers specifically to such property and the treaty adopts the peace-resolution provision. Now, that does not mean that we shall confiscate private property. I do not think there is anyone here who imagines we will. But since all that occurred we have appointed a commission that is now at work. Now, I have no question but what that commission will work quite as speedily at least as it otherwise would if there are a considerable number of people who are anxious to have large properties restored to them. I have been entirely in harmony with the proposal to restore small properties. I think it is most unfortunate and a reflection on our country that we have not proceeded along that line before this. I think that ought to be done. The gentleman from Texas says the limitation of $10,000 is purely arbitrary and is not logical. Well, any limitation we might make would be arbitrary and not wholly logical. You either return part or you return all. While I agree, of course, that there is nothing sacred about the limit of $10,000 any more than there would be about $5,000 or $25,000, I think it would be well to proceed along the line suggested in the legislation now under consideration. I think we should consider the matter very carefully before we propose or contemplate turning back all this property, just at a time when the commission is considering the claims of American citizens.

Mr. MADDEN. We have claims amounting to $300,000,000 against German nationals and the German Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Those claims will never be paid out of this property. We are all agreed on that, but there is a time for everything. The Good Book reminds us of that. There was a time when I should have liked to see all this property returned. I have not been in sympathy with the view that it is good public morals to hold private property as a hostage; but we have reached a stage in our relations with the German Government when it seems to me it is the part of wisdom to retain at least the large properties in the hope that by so doing we may somewhat expedite the work of the mixed commission. That may not sound generous, but it is very practical.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Understand when I say this I am expressing my own individual view and that of no one else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is very unfortunate, because there can be only one thing—either confiscation or the threat of confiscation.

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is not quite a threat.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then it is no bluff at all. But I want to ask the gentleman if it is his conception of the treaties that we have with Germany—the Berlin treaty taking in whatever part of the Versailles treaty is necessary—does the gentleman think that some properties that we hold of German citizens come under that head, that they are not a claim against the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. I know that when we passed the peace resolution we were thinking of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian, for we specifically referred to it, and that when the treaty was negotiated our representatives had it in mind, as clearly indicated by the treaty. Our negotiations now under way ought to be completed within the year. Right in the midst of those negotiations some gentlemen who have not been hitherto disturbed about this matter think now that we ought to turn all this property back without any regard to the effect it will have on the negotiations. I can not agree with them. I think we should promptly return sums and properties up to $10,000 and go no further for the present. We may be desirous of being generous, but we can not forget that our Government and people have claims pending.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not the design of the treaty at all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TREADWAY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "Alien Property Custodian."

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when the peace resolution was before the House I gave some little study to this particular question and to the status of alien property that was sequestrated and has been retained by the United States. As the result of the examination, I came to the conclusion that during the existence of the war the United States had the naked right under international law and in the absence of treaty stipulation to confiscate every dollar of that property if it saw fit, whether it belonged to the German Government or to German nationals. However, so far as that view is concerned, we must remember that we had entered into a treaty with Prussia in 1828, providing that we should not do that very thing. However, we did sequestrate the property under the terms of the trading with the enemy act. We did sequestrate it on the theory that any sovereign has the right to sequestrate property of an enemy in order that it may not be employed against that sovereign during a state of war. Had a legal state of peace come into being without our making any stipulations with the German Government about that property, it would have reverted automatically to the German nationals or to the German Government, according to its original ownership. Gentlemen will recall the precedent that arose as an outcome of the American Revolution. In the peace treaty of 1783 it was provided that British nationals should not be impeded in the collection of their debts. Pending the war States had enacted legislation undertaking to confiscate British debts owing by American citizens. After the war that question went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in a case brought by Georgia in the Supreme Court to enjoin the payment of a debt by a citizen of South Carolina to a British subject on the ground that Georgia had sequestered it and confiscated it and it had become the property of the State of Georgia, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the State had a right to confiscate the property during a state of war, but it also held that the act of the State of Georgia, which it was claimed had confiscated the property, in fact did not confiscate the property but merely sequestered it, and the court held that the British national was entitled to a return of his property and the collection of his debt. Similar decisions were rendered in other cases arising in other States.

But in the present case when Congress passed the peace resolution, as was suggested a moment ago by the gentleman from Wyoming, it contained the following language:

All property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, and of all German nationals which was on April 6, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or under the control of or has been the subject of a demand by the United States of America * * * shall be retained by the United States of America until otherwise provided by law or until the German Government shall have made suitable provision for the settlement of claims of American citizens.

Now, my idea is that the passage of the peace resolution had no legal effect and did not accomplish the purpose which gentlemen who proposed it had in mind. But while the state of war still existed, while we were still at war with Germany, the Secretary of State and the President negotiated what they called the treaty of Berlin. That treaty incorporates two sections of the peace resolution. One is section 5 which specifically retains the right to hold all German property that had come into possession of the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman's time is extended three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In addition to that provision the treaty of Berlin went further and provided that the United States and its nationals should have all the rights that were provided for them in the treaty of Versailles. Now, based on those two treaties, the treaty of Berlin and the treaty of Versailles, both of which gave the Government the right to retain the property, the United States Government and the German Government have appointed a mixed high commission that is now engaged in passing upon and fixing the claims of American nationals against the German Government and the claims of German nationals, if any.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it deals only with the claims by Americans against the German Government.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not suppose there are any claims by the Germans——

Mr. MADDEN. The law did not contemplate anything but the American claims.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman from Texas agree with the gentleman from Wyoming that this property we already hold and know how much we hold is a part of this mixed commission proposition?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No. The gentleman did not follow me, or he would not have asked that question. I said under the Berlin treaty and the Versailles treaty the United States has the absolute right to retain the property, and if it sees fit to subject it to the claims of American citizens. The mixed commission has no control over the property, except it has the jurisdiction and power to ascertain what the claims should be and the amount of those claims. When the report of the joint commission is made known it will then be the duty of the Congress and the administration to decide the question as to whether or not alien property will be subjected to the payment of those claims.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the gentleman from Texas would not return this property at this time?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The "gentleman from Texas" is only outlining what the legal rights of the Government are. I am sure the gentleman from Texas will not be permitted by the gentleman from Wyoming and his followers to decide the question. I have just said that Congress and the administration would decide that. But I have no disposition to dodge the question. Frankly, I would not return all of it just now.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the gentleman from Texas who goes further than I do as to the right of the Government to confiscate, would not think it wise to return all of the property at this time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. For once I agree to a degree with the gentleman from Wyoming. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. I look upon this as an extremely important subject. One of the things that most surprised me when I returned to the House and was reappointed on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and we took up the consideration of the peace resolution, was a provision in that resolution which read as follows:

And all fines, forfeitures, penalties, seizures, and sales imposed or made by the United States are hereby ratified, confirmed, and maintained.

I violate no secret when I say that at the first meeting of the committee when we took up that resolution I said that I would not support it. I was asked why, and replied: "This is a deliberate attempt to ratify, confirm, and maintain the sales made by A. Mitchell Palmer and Garvan, his assistant and subsequent successor, which resulted in Garvan becoming president of the corporation which bought for a small fraction of what they were worth, and has ever since owned, the very valuable patents for making dyestuffs and other products." My statement was disputed. It was declared that I was not correct in my interpretation of that phraseology. I insisted that that was its only possible purpose. Then the gentlemen who insisted that I was mistaken said that we would have the Alien Property Custodian, Thomas W. Miller, appear before the committee, make plain the purpose of the provision in question, and show that I was in error. The Alien Property Custodian came to the committee, presented a brief in which he acknowledged that the purpose was what I had declared it to be, and before the committee meeting had ended consented to the striking out of the word "sales."

I read from that brief during the debate on this floor on June 30, 1921, when the peace resolution was under consideration:

And all fines, forfeitures, penalties, seizures, and sales imposed or made by the United States are hereby ratified, confirmed, and maintained.

Referring to that language, the brief admitted that it was inserted in the peace resolution—to avoid any ambiguity and so enable the custodian to complete any program of sale that he has made without the possibility of contest at law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was Mr. Garvan?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; not Mr. Garvan. That was the present custodian, Mr. Miller, and our American Legion friends here can testify as to what he attempted to get them to do at the national meeting in Kansas City of the American Legion. I was informed that he wanted them to pass a resolution to accomplish virtually the same purpose, and that his attempt was defeated.

Mr. Chairman, when Congress enacted the trading with the enemy law it was never contemplated that the Alien Property Custodian should act otherwise than as a common-law trustee, to keep the property in his possession, care for it, use such of it as might be necessary to pay for the expense of its keep, and then turn it back, expenses deducted, to the owners. In the debate in 1921 I said, and it was and is the truth, that the sales were at a price so grossly inadequate as to constitute what in law is called a badge of fraud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps I may be indulged to refresh the gentleman's memory by a somewhat immodest allusion. The gentleman may recall that I was designated by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to manage the bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I remember it very well.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not know that this matter was coming up to-day, and I have not refreshed my recollection, but it is quite distinct in my own mind that the assurance was given by me time and time again in that debate, especially through the interruptions of the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Hill, that the Government proposed to do nothing else except to impound this property.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is correct.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And hold it so that it might not be available either in principal, in increment, or by credit to carry on the war by our enemy.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that it was the purpose of this Government, as soon as the war was over, not to continue to exercise its lawful powers to hold, and I believe the Government had the power to do so, but to do the clean, ethical thing, and return it in due time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia is entirely accurate in his statement. I disagree, however, with one statement which the gentleman makes, or which at least seems to present his view, and with the direct statement which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] made. It is true that in a decision of the Supreme Court it was held that a belligerent government has the right to seize the property of belligerent nationals, noncombatants, and use it where necessary for the purpose of such Government in the prosecution of a war.

But after the treaty of 1828 you can not find, Mr. Chairman, during the nineteenth century any treaty to which the United States was a party which would enable the German Government to seize any property in Germany of the distinguished gentleman from Texas and sell it there to recover a debt which might be due a noncombatant citizen of Germany for injuries inflicted during a war by the military forces of the United States. Yet that, in principle, is precisely what is being demanded shall be done here. No one knowing the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, the former governor, would ever believe him capable of advocating a course for our Government that would be so unjust.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In just a moment, and then I will. When we made the treaty of 1828 with Prussia we, in my judgment, deliberately declared the principle therein set forth to be forever a principle of international law so far as the Government of the United States might be concerned. In no treaty we have since made has there been a provision to combat in principle the provision of 1828, the Berlin treaty, until now when we seem to have done something which perhaps modifies it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin must have misinterpreted me, or he would not have made the statement he did. I stated in my remarks that where we have the naked right in time of war to confiscate an enemy's property, when peace came that right ceases; and in the case of Germany we had given up that right in the treaty of 1828, so I do not see the point of difference between the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Perhaps I did not understand the gentleman and was therefore mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to have three or four additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not true a noncombatant is entitled to protection, both as to person and property, even when the territory is occupied by enemy forces?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Undoubtedly. That is a principle of international law recognized by this Government more than once, formally recognized. I agree with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] says, that there is no good reason why all of the property should not be turned over now. I know the widow, now in Germany, of an American citizen who died in this country. She lived here for many years, went back to Germany before the war, and there has since remained. She left in the United States securities and other property of the value of $32,500. The Alien Property Custodian seized this property, and that widow, 70 years of age, with $32,500 of revenue-producing property, is dependent upon the charity of friends in Burlington, Wis., who know and love her. That is not an isolated case; there are many others like it. This thing is becoming a national scandal. Why did the man who is now Alien Property Custodian want in 1921 to ratify and confirm all sales which had been made by his predecessors in that office and all sales and contracts for sales which he himself might make? Listen to his language. He told us why. I called the attention of the House to it in June, 1921, when the peace resolution was up. He wanted these confirmed—to avoid any ambiguity, and so enable the custodian to complete any program of sale he has made without possibility of contest at law.

Mark those words—"without possibility of contest at law."

He, having control of the property of owners, some of them thousands of miles away, widows and other helpless persons, wanted the right in his discretion to sell any of the seized millions of property without any possibility of contest at law. Why was he so solicitous? He had in his possession hundreds of millions of dollars of property of owners, some of whom were far away.

Mr. Chairman, here is what I said on June 30, 1921, in that debate, and it exactly confirms the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] made here a moment ago. I will read from the report of my speech:

And I stop right here in my reading from that record to ask any gentleman here to arise and tell the House if, during the six months' debate, beginning in the spring of 1917 and ending in September, 1917, there was ever a word on this floor or in the Senate said by Senator or Representatives urging that the Alien Property Custodian be given the right to take that property and in his discretion, at public or private sale, dispose of it. The debates were very elaborate and exhaustive. Some of the distinguished participants in that debate are here now before me, and they can rise and say what their understanding was. Every one of them will admit—they will not only have to admit, but they will be glad to say—that their only understanding was that the Alien Property Custodian was to take that property as custodian, and so keep it that it would not go to waste or be seriously injured, and that it should be sold only when a sale should be necessary to prevent waste, and that the proceeds must be retained and turned into the United States Treasury.

That, as I before remarked, confirms what the distinguished gentleman from Virginia just said.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Pardon me just a moment, and I will.

Mr. Chairman, to show how public opinion is sometimes influenced by propaganda, it is rather interesting to remember that a newspaper in the West said, after that speech, "COOPER attacks the administration." And yet the President of the United States himself, just one year later, in June of 1922, ordered the present Alien Property Custodian to demand back from the purchasers all of the property that had been sold by his predecessors, the exact property the sales of which the custodian himself had one year before sought to have forever ratified, maintained, and confirmed. In June or July, 1922, the President himself directed that suits be brought to set aside the fraudulent sales to which I had directed the attention of the House in June, 1921.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In order that the RECORD may be entirely clear I wish to suggest, subject to confirmation, that the amendments to the alien property act were not considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Simply the one the gentleman refers to?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. They were put on as a rider on an appropriation bill at the request of Mr. Palmer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish that to be made clear. I never was consulted about these amendments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They were put on as riders on an appropriation bill, and not one Member in a hundred had the slightest idea of what was really being done.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the gentleman consider himself as rather fortunate in having been vindicated within the short time of one year? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

Salaries and contingent expenses, including traveling expenses; per diem in lieu of subsistence; supplies; stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $150 for street car fare; in all, $144,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: One at $7,500, one at $6,000, three at $4,250 each, eight at $4,000 each, three at $3,600 each, one at $3,500, two at $3,250 each, five at $3,000 each, two at $2,750 each, three at $2,400 each, and five at $2,000 each.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WATSON. I do, in order to make an inquiry. According to the hearings, the Bureau of Efficiency has the power to send an investigator to any bureau and make inquiry as to the efficiency of that bureau. The investigator, as I understand, reports back to the Bureau of Efficiency; and after the bureau digests the report, to whom does it make a recommendation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is supposed, under the organic act, that the Bureau of Efficiency is the agency of Congress—to make recommendations to Congress.

Mr. WATSON. Not to the bureau investigated?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. WATSON. How many instances do you know where recommendations have been made to Congress and Congress has taken cognizance of them to improve the bureau concerned?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There have been a great many instances where the activities of the bureau have been productive of good results. The Post Office Department, I may say, furnishes a good example of improvements made in consequence of the investigations of the Bureau of Efficiency. I do not know how many reports have been made by the bureau to Congress. I do know that there has been some resistance against the Bureau of Efficiency entering into various departments of the Government to make investigations, because those departments felt that it was an intrusion upon their ancient and long-established practice.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose the bureau makes a recommendation that there should be three less clerks, and that the clerks should be dismissed? Does the chief of the department come before your committee the following year and ask for the reinstatement of the clerks dismissed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know what the experience has been in that regard. I do not know what experience other committees have had.

Mr. WATSON. There seems to be nothing to show what have been the effects of the labors of this Bureau of Efficiency. I know that this money, $144,500, is recommended to be appropriated, but I do not know what good has been derived out of the appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. My observation has been that the Bureau of Efficiency has been an efficient agency, and has taken a considerable part in the establishment of efficiency in the Government service. In my opinion it has been the means of saving to the Government many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that the Bureau of Efficiency was engaged at one time in reviewing the work of the Treasury Department, and prior to that time, at the request of the then Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, they investigated the Post Office Department to improve its methods of administration. Shortly after the improved methods recommended by the Efficiency Bureau were adopted by the then Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson. Will the gentleman tell us whether during the last 12 months the Bureau of Efficiency has made any other recommendations and whether their recommendations have been carried out by any other department?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I have one instance in mind, which is spoken of in this report. The recommendation of the Efficiency Bureau to the Chief of Finance in June last as to the bookkeeping methods in his office have been put into effect. I will state that the Bureau of the Budget depends very largely for its information upon the investigations made by the Bureau of Efficiency respecting the work of the respective departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have any investigations been made at the request of any particular department?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I think they have gone into the Department of Commerce, particularly into the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and also in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Brown, the head of this bureau—I presume he is still its head—used frequently to appear in the Halls of Congress, and particularly in the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations. I have not seen him lately, and do not know whether he is incapacitated or whether he is digging into the old, antiquated, musty, red-tape methods of doing business in some particular department, so that he has not been able to make his usual rounds of calls at the Capitol.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think he is spending his time in cutting red tape and improving the efficiency of the Government service. I think the Bureau of Efficiency is the greatest agency for saving that the Government has ever established.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. How much does the gentleman think this bureau has saved to the Government in the last 12 months?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I could not say in exact figures, but I think I can say without any hesitation—and the evidence will bear me out if investigation is made—that it has resulted in a saving of millions of dollars.

Mr. BRIGGS. Do they submit a report?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; they submit a report every year. I wish the gentleman would read some of them.

Mr. BRIGGS. I assume that the chairman of the subcommittee has investigated this matter for the purpose of ascertaining the justification for this appropriation. The gentleman says he thinks they can make a showing. I am asking whether there has been any actual showing as to what they have done.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think one of the greatest compliments ever paid to the Bureau of Efficiency was paid by the gentleman from Texas who was Postmaster General, who stated that there had been a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars in the Post Office Department alone by reason of the adoption of the methods prescribed by the Bureau of Efficiency; and I want to say this in compliment to General Burleson, that he invited the cooperation of the Bureau of Efficiency for the reformation of the conduct of the business of that office. Some departments have resisted that bureau and that is the trouble now.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is what I wanted to know. Is it not true that even though they have made efforts perhaps to bring about a certain degree of efficiency, at least have suggested programs along that line, that those programs and suggestions have not been accepted, but that really nothing has been accomplished in the last 12 months or 2 years?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. More has been accomplished in the last 12 months than ever before, because the various departments are beginning to realize the true value of the work of the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. BRIGGS. But the gentleman can not name any one of them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I have just named one—the Post Office Department.

Mr. BRIGGS. That was more than two years ago.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have named the Budgetry Department, which depends very largely on the information it receives from the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Indiana about Mr. Burleson's administration of the Post Office Department. Is it not a fact that under his administration, following out some of the recommendations of the Bureau of Efficiency, the Post Office Department during his administration maintained itself?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely true, at least as to a part of his administration.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But that since that time we have not been quite as fortunate?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will not admit that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman state just what the deficit in the Post Office Department is this year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can not state the exact amount.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is about $80,000,000, is it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You will find that by reason of extensions, and by reason of the economy of the present administration it will be nearer self-sustaining at the end of the next fiscal year than it has ever been before. Up to this time the Post Office Department has never been self-sustaining.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I hope it will be. I am not trying to criticize the present administration, but I am trying to obtain information.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana how the Bureau of Efficiency gets its opportunity to work in these various departments? Do the officers request the assistance of the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate their work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Unfortunately they do not. I was not a Member of the House at the time the Bureau of Efficiency was established, but it was established for the purpose of doing what its name indicates—trying to get greater efficiency in the different departments and bureaus of the Government.

Mr. WATSON. How does the Bureau of Efficiency know when to make its investigations? Perhaps it gives notice to some department or bureau and says, "To-morrow we are going to send an investigator to look into the efficiency of your office."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; they have the right to go into any of them at any time. The manner in which they do it is a matter of detail.

Mr. WATSON. I should think the bureaus would object to it, unless the investigators are very wise and tactful.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is one of their great troubles. The different departments have their archaic methods of doing things. That is one of the faults of the Government. There are departments of the Government that overlap one another in their transactions to the extent of millions of dollars per year. There are 27 purchasing agents in the Treasury Department.

Mr. WATSON. And when anyone in the House proposes improved methods it is objected to as new legislation, and you say it is not according to the old law and forms.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is our fault; and I think the criticism is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend a ruling that I made when I was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union a few days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to do the unusual thing of saying a word in commendation of the President. I am going to commend him for his stand on what I consider a very important matter, owing to the fact that he is being attacked elsewhere for what I regard as one of the most righteous acts of his administration, and since no one on his side has so far come to his defense in this House.

Recently the House adopted a conference report on a pension bill that possibly constituted the most radical departure from the principles of economy on which both parties were elected of any measure that has yet been put over. It passed this House by an overwhelming vote and passed the Senate without a roll call. It imposed upon the American people an extra burden—and, in my opinion, an unnecessary burden—of about $100,000,000 a year. The President vetoed that measure and, I understand, is now being attacked and criticized for that veto. I think he did right, and I am going to ask to have read in my time an editorial from the Indianapolis News which was reproduced in the Washington Post a few days ago, which, I believe, reflects the sentiment of the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

A RIGHTEOUS VETO.

[From the Indianapolis News.]

One reading President Harding's veto of the Bursum pension bill finds it hard to believe that Congress could ever have passed such a measure. When it did so it simply gave another proof of its carelessness in regard to the public welfare and the interests of the people. The immediate effect of the bill would be, as the President shows, to add $108,000,000 to the expenditures of the Government, and that at a time when there is an almost strident cry for economy and lower taxes. Mr. Harding is well within the truth when he says that he is willing to "venture the prediction that with such a precedent established the ultimate pension outlay in the half century before us will be $50,000,000,000." It is time to be thinking of other and sounder precedents if we would escape what might amount to bankruptcy—would be bankruptcy in a nation less able to pay taxes.

The following indictment of Congress is none the less severe because framed in mild language:

"The act makes no pretense of new considerations for the needy or dependent, no new generosity for the veteran wards of the Nation; it is an outright bestowal upon the Government's pension rolls, with a heedlessness for the Government's financial problems which is a discouragement to every effort to reduce expenditures and thereby relieve the Federal burdens of taxation."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field force: For salaries of the field force of the Civil Service Commission, including employees heretofore detailed to the commission from other departments and offices, $272,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except 2 at $3,300 each, 3 at $3,000 each, 7 at $2,500 each, 1 at $2,400, 2 at $2,200 each, and 6 at $2,000 each.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. When this item was being discussed in general debate I made some inquiry as to the increase of the appropriation over that carried in the estimate, which, according to the report, was a quarter of a million dollars or more above the amount recommended by the Budget. As I recall, the gentleman said it was a matter of transfer. I recall some years ago when this appropriation was limited solely to the local district officers, and now I am told by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WOOD of Indiana] that it is purported to have the Civil Service Commission have a nosing, smelling, investigational force to pry into the activities of all the civil-service work of Government employees in the field. This is something entirely new. It was never contemplated that the Civil Service Commission should employ inspectors, supervisors, sleuths, or whatever you may call them, for the purpose of passing on the efficiency of the work of the field force of various departments. I would like to know what is the purpose of this extra appropriation under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken in referring to this field force as a "nosing committee" in an obnoxious sense. I do not think I am capable of telling all the things that they do, but it is a part of the national growth of the civil-service business. I can remember myself of the establishment of the civil service. The gentleman who is secretary now was secretary at the time of its inception. He told me that when it first commenced they moved all of their effects in a handcart from one office to another, and there were but very few under its jurisdiction. It is one of these growths that has been constantly gaining with the passing years, and will continue to gain as long as this policy is maintained.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman in his remarks in explanation of the bill to say that the Civil Service Commission is taking on new activities of inspection work among the various departments of the Government in the field.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman misunderstood me. They have had a field force all the while. It has been detailed from the various other departments heretofore, the War Department, the Agricultural Department, the Navy Department, and all the various departments with reference to their particular wants contributing to the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. The War Department never had any clerical force in the field in inspection work.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; but the civil service has had details from the War Department for years. The trouble is that there is a divided responsibility. They were paid heretofore for the details from the War Department out of the war appropriations, yet the services they were rendering were for the Civil Service Commission. So the gentleman himself, being of long experience, knows it would be more efficient to have them directly under the responsible head for whom they are working.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether it is a good business policy. There have been field officials connected with the Post Office Department with which I am somewhat familiar, and that is an inspectional force which goes out and makes surveys in the various post offices.

It is far better in running the Post Office Department to have that force under the control directly of the postal officials rather than have it a subsidiary or a sidelight of the Civil Service Commission, with all the red tape that characterizes that commission.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas] having taken the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13696, the independent offices appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS FOR CATTLE BREEDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State concerning a request made by the Secretary of Agriculture that specific authorization be obtained from Congress that will enable the Department of Agriculture to be represented by a delegate in the International Congress for Cattle Breeding, to be held at The Hague in August, 1923, by the payment of the expenses of such delegate (estimated at $1,500) out of the regular funds provided in the Agricultural appropriation act for animal husbandry investigations (general expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry) for the fiscal year 1924.

I commend the request of the Secretary of Agriculture to the favorable consideration of Congress as in the interest of an important industry of the United States.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 10, 1923.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the message will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to question the policy, but there have been some of these messages referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the information of the Chair that formerly that was done, and these matters were reported out of the Committee on Agriculture while that committee made appropriations. But latterly the policy has been to refer them to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 11, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

903. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the claim of Anton Anderson, of Chinook, Wash., for $170 as reimbursement of the cost of repairing his fish trap, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 13765) granting an increase of pension to Alice Parrigin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPEAKS: A bill (H. R. 13766) granting an increase of pension to James Phelps; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILSON: A bill (H. R. 13767) for the relief of F. Joseph Chatterton; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13768) granting a pension to James McIntyre; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6791. By Mr. DEMPSEY: Petition to abolish discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms, signed by 43 citizens of the city of Buffalo, N. Y.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6792. By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, opposing House bill 4388, which aims to regulate Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6793. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Oliver Bros. (Inc.), New York City, N. Y., favoring a 1-cent "drop" letter rate, and opposing any bill providing for a reduction in second-class mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

6794. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, relative to the immigration policy of the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6796. Also, petition of Mr. John R. Ruckstell, C. P. A., of San Francisco, Calif., indorsing Senate bill No. 2531, regulating the practice of accountancy in the District of Columbia; also, resolutions adopted by the Insurance Brokers' Exchange of San Francisco, relative to the Fitzgerald bill (H. R. 10034); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 9, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seneca and Baileyville, both in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PEPPER presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further class interests at the expense of the United States Treasury and the already overburdened taxpayer, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation in any way tending to weaken the financial system of the United States, which has proven a successful bulwark against possible money panics during the stress of war, especially proposed laws to absorb the credit facilities of the Nation for the furthering of private interests, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4287) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to amend the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1003) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 4281) to appropriate $500,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of eastern Washington, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 265) to stimulate crop production in the United States, reported it without amendment.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1004) thereon.

I desire to state that I shall ask to have this bill taken up for consideration as soon as the agricultural appropriation bill has been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3846) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," approved August 9, 1921, and I submit a report (No. 1002) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

I will state that the only purpose of the bill is to allow the officers of the Army to administer oaths, so that in investigations where the testimony of a soldier is required, as he is in the Army, the testimony may be received through the officer administering the oath.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that it will take no time, I shall not object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; I would not ask for its present consideration if I thought it would take any time.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act approved August 9, 1921, entitled "An act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Provided, however, That all persons authorized to administer oaths under the provision of the one hundred and fourteenth article of war or the Regulations of the Army and Navy be, and the same are hereby, authorized to administer oaths, take affidavits, and certify to the correctness of papers and documents for the purpose of the administration of this act and the war risk insurance act, as amended."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make collections and refunds of taxes out of the proceeds of sales of property held in the Treasury; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A bill (S. 4319) for the relief of Adam K. Baylor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4320) for the relief of Joseph F. Thorpe; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4321) granting a pension to Cora Carlin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4322) for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana; and

A bill (S. 4323) for the relief of Philip T. Post; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4324) to amend "An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products"; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 4325) to authorize the sale of certain Government property and appropriating the proceeds thereof for the erection of buildings and the purchase and installation of equipment for use of the engineering division of the Air Service of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4326) for the relief of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11939) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, an address delivered by my colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], before the University of Arkansas upon the occasion of his having conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS TO UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS ALUMNI ASSEMBLY JUNE 7, 1922, BY HON. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON.

Senator ROBINSON spoke as follows:

STORM SIGNS ON THE HORIZON OF INTERNATIONAL POLITICS.

These ceremonies appropriately celebrate the expiration of a half century since the establishment of the university. Throughout this period it has been an essential part of the educational system of Arkansas.

No more accurate test of a civilization can be found than in its moral and educational institutions. Those States which have become glorious in all that justifies pride and patriotism have been foremost in maintaining centers of learning.

Human wisdom can no more measure the beneficial results to society derived from great schools than it can determine the evil effects of illiteracy on citizenship.

The university effectively coordinates with the common and high schools of the State. Its importance as a necessary factor in Arkansas's educational scheme is constantly growing.

Signalizing appreciation for the relationship which the university bears to the welfare and progress of the State, and the influence which it exerts on the lives and labors of our citizens, we have assembled as former students to revive the memories and renew the associations of bygone days. For many of us this is a time for retrospection. We recall labors long completed and forms that have vanished. By a magical feat of memory we bridge the chasm of the years and live again in the golden glow of life's morning sun. We wander back down the highway of life and stand at the well-spring of inspiration. We scent the incense of lost loves and disappointed hopes, like the fragrance of withered flowers ascending from long-neglected altars. We hear again the half-forgotten melodies and faintly failing rhymes of youth. We remember with mingled sadness and amusement the petty rivalries and jealousies, the successes, and the failures of our student days. We thrill at the recollection of loyal friends and devoted companions from whom we parted long ago. Fancy resurrects visions of loveliness buried beneath the débris of time.

In the charm of this presence and under the spell of these memories we consecrate our talents and resources to the upbuilding of our alma mater.

PRESENT ADMINISTRATION OF UNIVERSITY ABOVE FACTIONAL POLITICS.

Every friend of the university must rejoice in its present administration, free from the influence of selfish factions. Political control of State-fostered systems of education is logical and perhaps inevitable. Whatever the disadvantages of such control, it is attended by the reciprocal influence of the citizen and the school upon each other. There has never been a time when the authorities responsible for the government of the university have displayed more marked regard for its best interests than is exemplified at present.

While notable instances are known of leadership by uneducated men, as a rule chiefly those enjoying the advantages of college instruction have been called to prominence. In industry and in all the professions our colleges and universities have supplied leaders. It is the duty of advocates of education to expose the weakness of the methods and agencies now employed and to strengthen and improve them in every possible way. No permanent benefit will result from this occasion if our activities are confined to the mere sentimental expression of tender recollections. The unity of desire among the students and alumni of the university for higher standards of service and usefulness should communicate itself to all the citizens of our beloved Commonwealth.

American citizenship needs rebaptism in the sacred faith of the fathers who founded this Republic. Civil rights and liberty are menaced by unrestrained propaganda. We became accustomed to organized sinister influences during the war. The United States often resorted to systematic stimulation of public opinion as the most effective means for stamping out sedition and for securing loyal support of its war policies. Enlightened public opinion, when honestly expressed, forms the just basis of political policies in a representative government. Through propagandist methods excessively employed since the war every public issue has become the subject matter of misrepresentation. Wholesome public opinion is thus distorted and perverted. Institutions of higher learning are powerful factors in the formation of ideals and in the direction of economic and political policies. These great agencies of civilization have not been left untouched by propagandists. In notable instances social heresies in conflict with orthodox rules of morality and anarchistic theories violative of all just interpretations of the Constitution have found root and nourishment in American colleges and universities. Nothing is worse needed to cure the sociological neurosis prevalent among the people than well-grounded respect for the institutions underlying our civilization. Concurrently with this revitalization of American citizenship should proceed the reestablishment of respect for our Government among the peoples of the world. The influence abroad of American political institutions has been unnecessarily discredited, both through our own indecision in dealing with other governments and through the failure of foreigners to comprehend the conditions which make imperative a distinctive and independent course by the United States in international politics.

WEAK FOREIGN POLICY.

The United States has no well defined foreign policy. A contest is in progress between those who favor isolation, or nonparticipation in world affairs, and the advocates of sympathetic cooperation with other governments. The American method of dealing with international questions is often characterized by hesitation and indecision. Because of this our people are misunderstood abroad, and our Government has become unpopular throughout the world. The nations associated with the United States in the Great War condemn as selfish the neutral attitude we at first assumed, and they deplore the refusal to participate in arrangements for the peace and the rehabilitation of Europe.

It is not likely that the policy of nonparticipation in the affairs of other nations indefinitely will be continued. World conditions are changing and international relationships are constantly growing more intimate. The forces of progress compel us to deal with other peoples, and to do this intelligently we must first procure accurate information respecting the political and economic problems of other countries which vitally affect commerce and amity among nations, and then share responsibility in their solution. The United States can not enjoy immunity from responsibility incident to a policy of isolation, and at the same time obtain the benefits which can only be derived from sincere cooperation and helpful association with other peoples and governments.

The Senate justified its refusal to admit the United States to the League of Nations chiefly on the ground that membership would involve us in European politics. The 51 nations in the league regard our Government as unduly suspicious of their good faith in efforts peacefully to compose international difficulties.

Washington refused representation on the Reparations Commission created under the Versailles treaty. It seems probable that this attitude will be soon reversed and membership accepted for the necessary protection of American rights and interests. The almost hysterical insistence of the impoverished peoples of Europe that we assist in the complex task of reestablishing European finances by participation in the Genoa conference was denied by the President on the ground that political rather than economic purposes inspired the conference. However wise this action may be deemed, it is apparent that the prosperity of our own industries is intimately related to the reasonable and correct solution of problems which we have refused to help work out.

The Washington conference accomplished some things helpful to mankind in its present distress, and effected other engagements of doubtful value from the dual standpoint of international justice and the interests of the United States.

Through its deliberations a reduction was arranged in the programs for capital ship construction by the four great naval powers, Great Britain, France, Japan, and the United States.

At the same time the practical result of the conference was to give Japan naval supremacy in the Pacific Ocean and to leave the insular possessions of the United States at her mercy. The agreement not to establish naval bases or further fortifications in the Pacific admittedly has that effect. Land armament, which constitutes the chief military burden, was left undisturbed, while preparations for aerial and submarine warfare were not materially restricted.

THE FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The four-power treaty has little value to the United States. It is a distinct triumph for Japanese diplomacy. In the opinion of oriental statesmen it substitutes for the Anglo-Japanese alliance an arrangement by which the Japanese policy of expansion in the Orient, if not insured by them, may be executed free from interference by the United States, Great Britain, and France.

Articles 1 and 2 are the gist of this important document. Article 1 binds the four powers to settle by conference disputes among them respecting their insular rights and dominions and therefore adds little to existing arrangements under arbitration treaties already in force.

Article 2 constitutes a defensive alliance. It provides that if these rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the parties to the compact will communicate fully and frankly with one another in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken jointly or separately to meet the exigencies of the particular situation. This, in practical effect, can only benefit the Japanese Empire. Neither the insular rights of France, Great Britain, nor the United States are in danger of attack from any outside power. Japan, however, is under the necessity of either reversing her policy or of defending against China and Russia when they revive sufficiently to strike.

JAPANESE AGGRESSION.

During the last 30 years the outstanding feature of Japanese history has been the seizure of territory and industrial concessions on the Asiatic mainland. No other nation has made material progress equal to Japan during the last quarter of a century. She justified these aggressions as necessary, to provide for the overflow of her dense population and to obtain the resources essential to development in peace and to defense in war. In nearly every instance the Japanese advance has been characterized by economic penetration supported by military power. The engagements entered into at the Washington conference, particularly the four-power treaty, are likely to encourage rather than to prevent the Japanese advance in both China and Russia, because they leave the United States, heretofore the friend and protector of these nations, in close alliance with Japan and without power to make effective protest in their behalf.

THE OPEN-DOOR POLICY.

The open-door policy, first proclaimed by the United States, theoretically has been accepted by the world as securing the territorial integrity and political independence of China, as well as admitting all nations to her commerce on equal terms. The trend of events since the beginning of the Great War, including the proceedings of the Washington conference, has been to give Japan special or paramount interest in China.

Japan seeks recognition of an oriental policy akin to the Monroe doctrine, through which she will establish and maintain a position of power and influence toward Asia and the regions of the Pacific comparable to the attitude of the United States toward the remainder of the Western Hemisphere. An important distinction exists. The United States maintains the Monroe doctrine solely for the protection of her own territory and the feebler nationalities against Old World aggression. Neither aggrandizement nor selfish benefit in any other form can come to this Government through the Monroe doctrine. In contrast, the chief object of the Japanese policy is the extension and enrichment of the Empire of the Rising Sun. Her design is to remove every obstacle to the dominance of Japanese civilization in the East, a civilization decisively antagonistic in its ideals and institutions to our own.

DENATIONALIZATION OF KOREA.

Korea loyally supported Japan as an ally in the Russo-Japanese War. No sooner was victory achieved than Japan annexed Korea, and with indescribable cruelty suppressed her institutions. The Japanese language was forcibly substituted for the Korean language, and the entire press of the nation was placed under Japanese control.

Religious intolerance, economic pressure, maltreatment of Korean leaders, educational, social, and industrial discrimination, were practiced. The Japanese police were given judicial power. In 1915 approximately 60,000 Koreans were brought to trial under police authority and only 7 were acquitted. In the four years from 1913 to 1916, inclusive, 221,000 persons were tried and only 496 acquitted.

By these oppressive measures and methods the Japanese sought to crush Korean civilization.

There is a reverse side of the picture. Official corruption in Korea was stamped out, new industries were developed, highways were constructed, agricultural and mineral production greatly increased, and the foreign trade of Korea multiplied three to one in the short period of seven years. Extensive public improvements and comprehensive economic and civic reforms were accomplished under the efficient but tyrannical rule of Japan.

A CURIOUS REVOLUTION.

About the close of the Great War and while the denationalization of Korea by Japan was still in progress, one of the most curious and romantic incidents of history occurred. A bloodless revolution, free from every form of violence, Bolshevism, and terrorism, was secretly planned by the Koreans. On the day fixed for the rehearsal of the funeral of a former Emperor more than 200,000 people came pouring into the Korean capital. A declaration of independence was solemnly drafted, in which it was declared that a new era had dawned, that the world of force had passed away, and a new world of righteousness had come. Great throngs of white-clad people in enthusiastic but peaceful demonstration marched through the streets of the capital singing the Korean national anthem and shouting "mansei" (hurrah).

The Japanese troops were called out, the paraders were dispersed, hundreds of them were trampled down, and every Korean prison filled with harmless patriots. A rule of blood and iron was enforced, resulting in the torture and murder of hundreds. Thus was merged Korea, for 2,000 years an independent nationality, into the Empire of the Rising Sun.

Korea had the assurance of Japan in the beginning that the occupation was only temporary. While her denationalization was taking place, she also had the solemn obligations of the United States and Great Britain in treaties that her territory would be respected and her independence preserved. History affords no more glaring instance of treachery. The blood of a murdered nation blots the record of Japanese progress and stains with shameful perfidy the honor of Great Britain and the United States.

THE ROMANCE OF THE FAR EASTERN REPUBLIC.

The effect of secret engagements and public events since the beginning of the war on Japanese domination of the Orient is further illustrated by Japan's attitude toward Shantung, Manchuria, and Mongolia and by her persistent occupation of Siberia.

While there has been no express repudiation of the "open-door policy," but, on the contrary, reaffirmation of it by the Washington conference, Japan unquestionably has been left secure to take whatever course she chooses in the Far East. The results of the conference are construed there as acquiescence in Japan's aggressions. It is not unlikely that the experience of Korea will be repeated in Shantung, Manchuria, and Mongolia, for no power is likely to assert itself against Japan for China's protection. China is distracted by war, and Japan, by fanning the flames of civil conflict, can execute her policy in China with little interference.

While the threat of immediate war in the Far East has been alleviated, the real causes of conflict remain unadjusted.

In Japan is the only colored race of modern times to strike an effective and successful blow at the white race. In Siberia the "yellow peril" is imminent. The four-power treaty does not mitigate, on the contrary, it aggravates, that appalling menace.

When the Russian armies, which for three years had held the long eastern battle line with courage and unequaled sacrifice, gave way before the armies of the Central Empires, the Allies asked the United States and Japan to send troops into Siberia to maintain military communication over the Trans-Siberian Railway, and to support the Czecho-Slovaks. The United States sent her quota. Japan furnished three times the number she was requested to supply. When the war ended the American troops were withdrawn. The Japanese occupation continues without substantial justification.

The only promise Japan would make to the Washington conference respecting the evacuation of Siberia was ambiguous and indefinite, giving justification for the fear that she intends to pursue the same course there which was taken in Korea. No distinction of importance can be made between the Japanese military policy in Siberia and that formerly applied to Korea.

The war produced no more gratifying result than the Far Eastern Republic. So many important things have happened recently that even the best informed have experienced difficulty in keeping abreast with progress throughout the world. Amazing ignorance exists in the United States respecting the origin, constitution, and government of the Far Eastern Republic.

It occupies that portion of Siberia extending from Lake Baikal to the Pacific Ocean. The whole of Siberia equals in area the Continent of North America. That portion which constitutes the Far Eastern Republic is about the size of the United States. The Trans-Siberian Railway bears a relation to Siberia similar to that of the River Nile to Egypt. The Far Eastern Republic comprises the largest and richest undeveloped area in the world. It has more than 60,000,000 acres of arable lands, with less than three and one-half millions in cultivation. The total population is only 2,000,000, of which 65 per cent are farmers. Three hundred million acres of forest reserve, immeasurable deposits of gold, silver, lead, iron, copper, coal, tungsten, and oil make the Far Eastern Republic rich in resources beyond the power of the mind to grasp,. Less than one-fifth of its resources have been investigated.

The Government sprang into existence with the consent of the parent authority in Russia in 1920. It is democratic in form and in fact. Sovietism receives neither support nor sympathy in this model Old World Republic. The constitution, adopted last year, provides universal suffrage and adequately safeguards individual liberty and the right of private property.

No confusion of opinion exists among those familiar with conditions in this new democracy. The elections which established the present Government were fair and free from corruption in any form. The people are law-abiding and devoted to their institutions. Finances are on a gold basis, and revenues are ample to meet expenditures.

The Washington conference left Japan in military possession of this new democracy. In the light of history there is not the slightest likelihood that she will voluntarily retire from this rich and thinly populated land which so readily affords space and opportunity for her expansion throughout the future.

Nothing in the attitude of Great Britain or France affords ground for belief that either will seek to retard the Japanese advance in Siberia. The United States have been rendered powerless effectively to protest against any aggressive course Japan may choose to take, for by the action of the Washington conference the supremacy of Japan in that part of the world is assured.

The "open-door policy" inevitably will be abandoned or rendered nugatory. Japan will retain in China all she desires of the territory already occupied, and she will advance whenever she chooses. She will undermine democracy in the Old World by destroying the Far Eastern Republic and by establishing a government by the yellow race over peoples of the white blood who aspire to the enjoyment of liberty under institutions as liberal and as glorious as Caucasian civilization has created.

MENACES OF RIVAL ALLIANCES.

The great European wars of modern times, without exception, have resulted from rival alliances.

The effect of the exclusion of Russia and Germany from the Washington conference and of the adoption of the four-power treaty was the creation of a Russo-German alliance. In the Senate debates we who opposed the treaty announced the expectation that Germany and Russia would unite. No one, however, anticipated that before the delegates to the Washington conference returned to their homes Germany and Russia would enter into an open treaty—as they did—mutually agreeing to cancel all claims for damages against each other, and to pursue an amicable policy for the promotion of their commerce and industries.

The statesmen who controlled the Genoa conference frantically denounced this arrangement and threatened to penalize Germany and Russia by limiting the authority and privileges of their representatives in the conference. The Reparation Commission, however, decided that the treaty in nowise interferes with its jurisdiction. The formation of the four-power alliance by the Washington conference already has resulted in a rival alliance between the two outcast nations, who have balanced their books, become fast friends, agreed to forget the past and to work together in the future.

This apparently generous and wholesome arrangement effected by open treaty does not tell the whole story. On the 8d of April Germany and Russia entered into a secret military alliance by which the former agrees to supply the red army with weapons and materials necessary to equip the 180 regiments of infantry and 20 infantry divisions of heavy artillery. The German general staff undertakes to reorganize the Baltic and Black Sea Russian fleets and immediately to supply 150 wireless equipments and 500 new airplanes. The Russian Army staff guarantee the establishment of factories in Russia for the manufacture of poison gas, airplanes, and arms, and agrees to maintain not less than 18 infantry and 8 cavalry divisions on the west Russian border.

Russia even now, while her people are suffering from famine and civil war, has a well-trained army of 1,400,000 men. The population of Germany and Russia aggregates 240,000,000. If Japan continues her present course toward China, Germany and Russia inevitably will bring China into their alliance. When this occurs, if it ever does, when China, advised, organized, and trained by German and Russian officers, awakens from her age-long slumber, her people like numberless yellow ants may swarm out in every direction and threaten civilization. The day is not distant when Japan will be held to account for every wrong she has inflicted upon China and Russia. Whether or not China combines with Russia and Germany, Japan can not long prevent efforts of the white race in Siberia to throw off her yoke.

DISCORD BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN.

At no time during the last 10 years has complete accord subsisted between the United States and Japan. There have been threats and counterthreats, with secret preparations for possible conflict.

Unquestionably this Government should make every concession consistent with national honor and justice to other friendly powers to establish amicable relations with the Japanese Empire. Further than this we need not, should not, go.

No justification exists for a policy toward Japan in conflict with the fixed convictions of our people concerning the differences between the two Governments.

Frankness in defining the American position, even if it annoys Japan, will avoid the breach certain to occur if we mislead her to believe that the United States ever will tolerate, much less approve, the Japanese position touching immigration, land ownership, and race equality. All these are domestic questions which the American public rightfully may determine without intervention by any foreign power.

International law recognizes as indispensable to national autonomy the exclusive right of every nation to determine its domestic questions. The Congress will decide who shall be admitted to the United States. Each State will settle for itself the conditions of land ownership within its limits. The Japanese demand for recognition of race equality raises social issues and antagonisms which originate in the natural instincts of human beings and which, therefore, can not be adjusted by treaties or by statutes. The American people regard the Caucasian as the moral and intellectual superior of the Mongolian race, and they would condemn as contemptible and treacherous any course of dealing with Japan which would involve this well-defined conviction in uncertainty or compromise.

The Washington conference necessarily left these domestic questions unsettled. However, the tension because of them has been relaxed through the gratification of Japah at our acquiescence in her oriental policy.

The controversies of international character which heretofore have disturbed amity between the United States and Japan relate to the Asiatic mainland and were adjusted in the Washington conference to please the Japanese.

Whatever may be the technical construction of the language employed, the effect of the four-power treaty in world politics has been to make the United States an ally of Japan and consequently to attract against the United States the suspicion and mistrust which Japan's aggressions have stimulated everywhere.

How hesitating and difficult has been the moral progress of humanity throughout history! Ignorance, prejudice, and suspicion have prevented the adoption of practicable methods among nations for the prevention of wars. The best, indeed the only comprehensive, plan yet suggested for preserving world peace is the League of Nations, in which are combined 51 powers mutually pledged to respect and preserve the territorial rights and political independence of one another.

The United States rejected membership in this organization and allied themselves with France, England, and Japan, the three nations in the league whose domestic conditions and foreign relations are most likely to occasion war.

When the armistice was signed mankind, wounded, impoverished, grieving, prayed for protection against the foolishness and barbarism of war. American statesmanship signally failed. It proved impotent in the presence of the supreme opportunity to glorify victory by safeguarding against the catastrophe of future world conflict. Through the pitiable failure to grasp that opportunity American statesmen shamed the memory of those who fought and died that wars might end and that peace might abide.

These recent mistakes in our foreign policy occasion disappointment; they do not justify despair. In the clear light of subsequent events it is often less difficult to discover errors than to anticipate them. Great problems do not present clear alternatives of choice and action. They appear clouded with confusion, enveloped in prejudice, and distored by falsehood. Vital issues rarely can be solved by logical process or patent plan; usually they are worked out in devious ways and by manifold forces often difficult to define.

In spite of mistakes and indecision in foreign policy, our Government has emerged from the smoke and thunder of world conflict strengthened and fortified in the patriotism of its citizens. Slowly the storm clouds are disappearing, while rainbows of promise beautify the skies.

Our people advance hopefully, if with faltering leadership, to the fulfillment of destiny; the exemplification of loyalty and devotion to liberty, justice, and enlightenment; the manifestation of sympathy, helpfulness, and candor in our relations with foreign governments.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BALL.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on January 9, 1923, the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] delivered a very interesting and thoughtful address at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, before the Veterans of Foreign Wars. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

A FEW RAMBLING THOUGHTS.

Senator BALL spoke as follows:

"Just one month ago to-night I attended a banquet at this hotel, given by the Society of the Sons of Delaware, of Philadelphia, celebrating the one hundred thirty-fifth anniversary of the ratification of the Constitution of the United States by my State, Delaware. At that dinner Mr. Irving Bachellor, one of our leading authors, was one of the speakers, his subject being 'What is the matter with America?' Since the recent election I had feared the American people had held, at least to some considerable extent, the United States Congress responsible for our shortcomings. But Mr. Bachellor told us the fault was in our American homes, that the families lacked the strong executive head that they in our earlier day possessed, and that the boys and girls were not given the lessons of obedience nor taught the importance of industry that was ground into us as youngsters. This discourse so impressed me that I have given some study to our general conditions, with the idea of ascertaining how much of this discontent can be traced to the failure of Government agencies to properly function. We are all well aware that things are not normal, that there is a general feeling of discontent—a feeling that certain branches of the Government are not functioning as they should. Our Government is of such a nature that to get the best results it must be a Government by parties, the party in control always being held responsible for the results. If everybody is prosperous and content, that party receives the commendation. If the country is not prosperous, then that party must accept the criticisms and the responsibility. But in my short legislative experience I have learned that it is sometimes very difficult to enact important legislation—legislation that the party in power deems essential for the carrying out of its policies, though they may have a reasonable majority in that body.

"This condition as to the personnel of our legislative bodies would cause us to conclude that the method of selecting the candidates for the various offices by the great political parties is not entirely satisfactory. The last few years there has been a tendency to change from the old convention plan of nominating to what is termed the direct primary. In the old convention plan, by the common primary, the parties elected delegates to a convention, and that convention, after due deliberation, selected the candidates to be voted for at the general election. The charge was made against this method that a few strong men could control that convention and thus nominate the ticket, and that these few men, in making those nominations, made them for their own advancement and not for the general good. In other words, the cry was made of 'boss rule.' The people in their might determined to overthrow this situation; and as a result of this campaign, claiming, as they did, that it was in the interest of the masses against the classes, the convention method of nominating gave way to the popular method of direct primary, where the people themselves make these nominations. If this were strictly a democratic form of government, this would seem to be the proper way to make these nominations; but ours is a republican government, a representative government, where certain power is delegated by the people; and in delegating this power our forefathers no doubt saw the evils of the strictly democratic form.

"I have absolute confidence in the integrity and wisdom of the majority of the American people, and if the direct primary enabled the majority of a party to nominate their candidates, I would be an advocate and loyally support that method of making nominations. But in practice we find the majority of the party is generally defeated, and that a minority make these nominations. If there were but two candidates for any particular office, then one or the other, of course, would receive that majority, but in practice we find there are generally many more than two candidates, and frequently the man receiving the plurality—and thus the nomination—will not receive more than one-third or one-fourth of the total vote. We find further that the loyal party supporters, the people who believe in the principles adopted by that party at its national convention and for which it has stood for the years past, divide their vote among three or four candidates representing the party principles, while probably one candidate, professing to be a Republican or a Democrat but whose principles differ from either party, will receive the solid support of a class which frequently is sufficient to make the nomination over any of the true loyal men. Thus the will of the majority is defeated, and the minority representative becomes the candidate.

"If this were not a government by parties, probably this would not be so serious a matter. I firmly believe that our Government, if its success, certainly if its efficient functioning, depends upon parties, the direct primary, as I have described, destroys the power of parties to legislate, and permits a few by a combination with the minority party to either defeat legislation entirely or to prevent the carrying out of the policies for which that party stands pledged and for which the people at the previous election gave their vote.

"This causes general dissatisfaction, and the party is charged with using platform pledges only to win votes when in reality that party is probably conscientious and loyal to its principles but utterly helpless when it comes to vote those principles in proper legislation. If our Nation is safer in the hands of individuals with no party vouching for their acts—with nobody with a future depending upon the result of its acts—then the direct primary probably may work out the ends that its advocates claim for it; but if we are to depend upon party government, and hold the party in power responsible for its acts, thus making the party's future dependent upon the carrying out of those acts, then, in my judgment, the sooner we get back to the convention form of nomination, the sooner will our Government be as it was intended, a government by parties, and the party in power able to legislate and meet the demands of our Nation.

"In nominating the delegates to attend a convention which names the candidates for the representative offices, the people have, in the naming of these delegates, their choice in this selection.

"The real object of any form of primary is, or should be at least, to select the very best available man of the party who can be obtained to fill that office; for certainly the more patriotic and capable the official, the better will be his administration.

"Thus, my greatest objection to the direct primary is its tendency to destroy parties and party power. I do not claim that when a party outlives its usefulness that there is any excuse for its being continued, but in that event it should be replaced by another party more nearly representing the sentiment of the people at that time, otherwise we can have no permanency in our financial, economic, or industrial conditions.

"It is impossible to conceive of a House of Representatives, composed of more than 400 Members, each elected upon his own platform and fighting for the principles for which he stands, to accomplish any legislation, and should by combination any legislation be passed, would there be an assurance of its permanency?

"There is nothing that affects the prosperity of a nation more than uncertainty as to its important policies. Without parties all would be chaos and our Government could not function.

"Another serious objection to me to the direct primary is that it enables the cities with their dense population to always hold the power in making nominations, and thus the rural districts with their important farming interests find themselves without the representation essential for properly protecting their interests, where the vote is taken by the entire State, and certainly there is no interest of greater importance to general prosperity than is the producer of foodstuffs.

"I believe it is the duty of every American citizen to freely criticize the policies of this Nation when he believes those policies wrong, and he can suggest legislation that will correct these evils, but to always find fault, to always criticize and tear down without suggesting something better seriously interferes with our return to normal conditions. Conditions may not be as satisfactory in this country as we would desire, probably as the majority of the American people think they should be, yet the United States is in infinitely better condition than is any other nation of the world. Congress has enacted much legislation for which the party stood pledged, but where it has failed to fully meet the expectations of the people who voted that party in power, this failure is traceable to the direct primary. The rights of a minority party must always be protected, but for successful legislation the majority party must be able to legislate—must be able to carry out its pledges to the people—if that party is going to bring prosperity and happiness to our American people.

"I realize that by taking this position I shall be termed a reactionary and ultra-conservative. I am sufficiently conservative not to follow those policies which to me seem to be driving our Nation too far into the unknown."

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there are Senators absent who want to be present when the Senator from Maine is speaking. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Ball	Fletcher	McCormick	Robinson
Bayard	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sheppard
Borah	George	McKellar	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	McKinley	Smith
Broussard	Hale	McLean	Smoot
Bursum	Harreld	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Cameron	Harrison	Myers	Sutherland
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Townsend
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Underwood
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Couzens	Kellogg	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Kendrick	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Keyes	Pepper	Watson
Curtis	King	Phipps	Weller
Dial	Ladd	Poindexter	Willis
Dillingham	La Follette	Pomerene
Ernst	Lenroot	Ransdell

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent from attendance upon the Senate because of a death in his family. I wish that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is engaged in the work of the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon I endeavored to occupy the floor with a few brief remarks, but there were before the Senate matters of such very great importance to the farmers of the country that I was very glad to yield for their consideration. First of all was the matter of a little appropriation of $10,000 asked by the Senators from Louisiana for the eradication of a disease that has struck the sugar-cane section of their State and other States of the South, and which appealed to me as a most worthy object. I was glad, indeed, to yield for that purpose, although a point of order was very properly made and sustained against the amendment in the form in which it was presented. I am very glad that the Senator in charge of the Agricultural appropriation bill [Mr. MCNARY], with his usual courtesy, very willingly offered to take the matter up with his committee, and I understand that this morning a report is to be made recommending the allowances asked for.

The amendment which I am about to offer is of a most unusual character; in fact, so unusual that I think possibly it will interest the people of the entire country, because it is very rare for a Senator to rise in his place and ask that an appropriation be stricken from a bill. While Senators spent the latter part of yesterday afternoon discussing appropriations asked for and needed by the agriculturists of the country the amount of those appropriations did not exceed $250,000. The appropriation which I shall ask to have stricken from the bill is sufficiently large that the whole amount asked for for the Department of Agriculture, even though the appropriations discussed yesterday may be allowed, will be much less than the total recommended by the committee.

As the subject of my text I want to refer back two years, or perhaps a little more, to a matter which was under consideration by the Senate and was very carefully considered at that time. For two sessions of the Senate I was very glad to oppose the measure which was finally enacted into a law by the Senate and the House. In order that it may be well understood, I want to read just what was said by the proponents of the measure as to the reasons given why the bill should be enacted into a law. The Senator from Iowa at that time, Mr. Kenyon, the sponsor of the bill, said in presenting it—and I am reading his exact language—

> The justification for any such measure as this at all is in the report of the Federal Trade Commission showing what has been done in the way of combination among the packers.

He further said if there was no reason for supposing that there had been a combination, the enactment of this law was entirely unnecessary.

President Wilson in 1917 asked the Federal Trade Commission to make a careful investigation of the business of the five big packers of the West. The Federal Trade Commission made such an investigation and reported thereon, and the report was about to be acted upon when the bill referred to was presented to the Senate and the whole proceeding turned from the Federal Trade Commission to the Agricultural Department.

The purpose of that bill, as then stated, was to prevent any great deals or combinations between the five packers, which, it was stated, were likely to be consummated. Up to that time no deal had been made and no combination had been entered into by the large packers of the country. Hardly, however, had that bill been passed before two of the great packing companies of the country began to negotiate for a combination; and since the enactment of the bill the greatest combination of commercial enterprises which was ever conceived in the world's history has been consummated. So, despite the alleged reason and purpose for the enactment of that law, it has proven ineffective and altogether unnecessary. That deal has been consummated and the bonds issued under it have been sold within the past week.

It was further stated that it was necessary to take from the five large packers the control of the stockyards where the cattle were sold, and a commission was formed to bring about that result. After the expiration of two years nothing has been done, and the packing yards are in precisely the same position that they were at the time of the enactment of the law.

Another object of the bill was—and that has been attained—to prevent the large packers from merchandising goods outside of those produced in their packing plants. That purpose of the law has been effectuated at a cost to the farmers of the country of more than $500,000,000 last year. The big packers in the sale and distribution of their meats all over the country, shipping in carloads, can use only 65 per cent of the space in their cars, while the remainder of the cars may be used for other purposes. In dealing in so-called unrelated commodities the packers came in competition with another class of business men. The law prevented their dealing in unrelated products, and in so doing it stopped the sale of those products of the farmers.

Further than that, the sponsor of the bill stated that the execution of the law would be very inexpensive; that it was not going to cost anything; that it could be executed by the Department of Agriculture with the clerical force which they already had in the department. Mr. President, standing right where I now stand, I remember, as Senators on the other side of the Chamber will remember, that I stated that the first appropriation would be at least $200,000, and that, inasmuch as the Republican Party was then in power, it would provide places for 60 deserving Republicans. I do not take any special pride in referring to anything I may have said as enabling me to remind Senators, "I told you so," but, as a matter of fact, I came numerically within five of the number of officials which it has required to enforce that law. It took 55 officials, at salaries on an average of $3,000 per annum, and $30,000 for office expenses.

Last year the appropriation asked for was $200,000. This year, under the pending bill, $410,000 is asked for. That means that in less than five years we shall be building up in the Agricultural Department another great bureau at an expense of more than $5,000,000 to the country, a bureau which will not benefit the farmers of the country a single cent, but which will be distinctly to their disadvantage.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Has the Senator from Maine made reference to the assurances which the Senate received when the bill was passed that its administration would involve no expense to the Treasury?

Mr. FERNALD. I have just referred to that, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire. It was stated on the floor on this side of the Chamber that the bill, if enacted into law, would be inexpensive; that it could be enforced by the Department of Agriculture through the officials already in the department, and that no extra expense need be involved.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator further if he has spoken at all of the contemplated combinations that are now in process of formation and which were to be entirely prevented by the mere enactment of that legislation?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I stated that such a combination was never dreamed of until the passage of that law, and now, as every Senator on this floor knows, the greatest combination of capital which has ever been known in the world's history, with two exceptions, has just been consummated and its bonds have been sold.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who first rose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Maine, who has stated that the appropriation of $200,000 came within 5 of giving 60 deserving Republicans good jobs, for how many will this proposed increase provide?

Mr. FERNALD. It will increase the number to at least twice as many, and it will make places for Republicans. I do not assume that the Republicans are any worse than are the members of the party of my friend from Florida. Under this legislation, if our Democratic friends should come into power, I should expect every one of these officials to be turned out and Democrats substituted for them. What I claim, Mr. President, however, is that we have gone far enough with mischievous farm legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before the Senator gets away from the combination between the Armour Co. and the Morris Co. let me ask him, Does the Senator think it was a bad thing to bring about such a combination?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I do not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, the Senator is not complaining about that?

Mr. FERNALD. Not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was merely going to suggest that the Secretary of Agriculture has assented to it, has he not, and also the Attorney General?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know; but I do know that the bonds have been sold.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator knows it could have been prevented by the administration, if it had seen fit to prevent it, under the law, does he not?

Mr. FERNALD. I presume so. Right in that connection, however, let me say——

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. FERNALD. Let me answer the question of the Senator from Arkansas first; I desire to carry that idea a little further along. Whenever the Government interferes with any business in this country there always follows an increase in the price of the products of that particular business. I remember back in 1910, when we first began to use automobiles and gasoline engines on our farms in New England, the farmers made a contract with the Standard Oil Co. of New York to deliver gasoline on the farms in Maine for 11 cents a gallon. We undertook to disintegrate and divide up the Standard Oil Co., until to-day there are some 28 or 29 Standard Oil companies, and the price has advanced just about half a cent a gallon every time a new company has been formed, until to-day it is 27 cents a gallon.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. If regulation upon the part of the Government is responsible for the increase in price, the Standard Oil Co., then, ought to have been for Government regulation, ought it not?

Mr. FERNALD. The units of that company ought to have been held together. Let me say to the Senator along this line that the great packing companies of Chicago had built up an enormous business in other products than meat products which they produced. Why were other men who were interested in lines of business which came in competition with that of the five great packers desirous to have the packers abandon that field? Was it because the packers were selling goods at a higher price to the consumers of the country? Certainly not; it was because they were delivering goods to the consumer at a much less cost than could be done in any other way. They bought goods in large quantities. Everyone who knows anything about the canning business knows that the larger the order the lower the price. An order for 10,000 cases of goods can be packed much cheaper than an order for 1,000 cases. The packers bought their goods not by carload lots but by trainloads from California to Maine.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I will be glad to yield in just a moment. Because of the exceedingly large quantities which they purchased they bought at a very low price, and they bought on a cash basis, so that a canner in Maine who took an order from one of the large packers knew that the moment the goods were loaded on the car the draft would be sent to him. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he is mindful of the fact that the consent decree under which the packers agreed to abstain from handling groceries and other unrelated commodities was not a part of the so-called packers control act and had nothing whatsoever, so far as I recall, to do with that act? The Senator remembers that the two things were entirely separate; that the consent decree was the act of the court, while the packers control act was the act of the National Legislature.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; but the unrelated activities of the packers came under the provisions of the bill to which I have referred and those activities were stopped; the packers were prevented from selling groceries and from selling canned goods outside of those produced by them. I remember, as the Senator from Wyoming must remember, and if the Senators from California were present they would recall, that farmers and fruit growers came here from California and begged that the decree might be set aside, for it made a difference of $40,000,000 worth of goods to the State of California alone and affected every other State in the Union. Just so long as we proceed along these lines, placing obstructions in the way of business, just so long will the farmers suffer. From the time a commodity is produced on the farm until it is placed on the table of the consumer every single obstruction that is placed in the way of any intermediate transaction comes home to the farmer; he has to settle and receive a lower price for his goods.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to ask the Senator if he has any definite reason to believe or any information to the effect that the great packing houses are now complaining that the present packing law is a detriment to their business?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the packers got exactly the bill they wanted to get. I remember that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], standing where I am now standing, held up that bill and told the Senate that it was the bill which the packers wanted. The Senate, however, had determined to go after somebody; somebody had been successful in business and they were determined to punish somebody. That is what we have been doing for the last four years—trying to punish everybody in business.

I repeat, the packers got exactly the bill they wanted; and the Senator from Wisconsin, standing right here—and sometimes he is a little troublesome to this side of the Chamber, and I do not always agree with him—held that bill up to the Senate and said, "There are 10 provisions which have been written in this bill with a sharpened lead pencil by an agent of the packers themselves. I know the packers want this bill as it is." I told the Senate at the time that they would be entirely satisfied with it. They have made just as much money selling meat as they would have made if they had to do a little more work and handle groceries.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. When the packers handled groceries, canned goods, and so forth, they shipped them in their own cars, did they not?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And that practically amounted to a rebate; so that they had their goods handled cheaper than any grocer could have his goods handled?

Mr. FERNALD. They did.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the Senator willing that rebates shall be given to the packers in order that they might destroy all other people engaged in the distribution of groceries?

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to answer my friend from Arkansas. I want everybody in this country to have the right to deal in any commodity that is produced here, and especially farm products. I will say to the Senator, however, that in the instance cited it did not amount to a rebate. The packers were merely loading their cars to capacity, and they afforded the best avenue for the distribution of farm products that has ever been conceived. The business had been built up during the course of 50 years, but with one stroke of the pen we destroyed it. If the law shall be repealed to-morrow, as I hope it may be, it will take 10 years for the farmers to begin to get back to where they were when the bill was passed. The law has destroyed the market which had been created.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield further to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator said in answer to the first question that it was a rebate. Now he denies that it is.

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, well, it is not a rebate; it is simply using the entire capacity of a car.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; and by that means they got cheaper transportation for their goods than the wholesale grocer could have gotten for his, did they not? If that is not a rebate, what is it?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, well, in some instances they were delivering goods to the consumer at a less price than the wholesale grocer—only in some instances—because wherever a wholesale grocer could send a full car of goods he could get just as low a price; but it is not expected that a retail man down here who buys 10 cases of canned goods could buy them at the same price that a man who bought a thousand cases or a carload could buy them.

I yield now to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that at one stroke of the pen Congress destroyed that business of the packers?

Mr. FERNALD. It destroyed that part of the business. It destroyed the part that was of interest to the farmers of the country.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. Then, as I understand also, the Senator says the packers wanted it destroyed?

Mr. FERNALD. They were perfectly willing. The packers are quite satisfied with this bill. They make just the same percentage that they did before. They were obliged to do a little more work before.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, why should they not be satisfied, when under its provisions and since its passage they have made the greatest combination among them that was ever known?

Mr. FERNALD. Absolutely; and, Senators, if it is to be the policy of this Government to start out on all these different tangents, legislating for classes, building up bureaus down here, by and by there will not be any farmers. Why, only a few years ago we started two other commissions, with five men. To-day there are 2,200 in one commission and some 1,200 in another, and we have to build buildings here for their accommodation. We have not room enough. The streets of Washington are crowded with people who are in these different bureaus.

What I claim is that everything that is done by this bill could have been done by the Federal Trade Commission. They have all the facts in the case. They have all the law necessary under the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton antitrust law. No combination of capital of such an enormous amount ever was conceived until this bill was passed, and now every man in the Senate knows what is going on here.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. Very gladly.

Mr. KENDRICK. I want to ask what combination of capital under the packer control act the Senator refers to.

Mr. FERNALD. I am not a lawyer, as the Senator knows; but I simply know that $60,000,000 worth of bonds were offered by one of the large concerns which has just combined with another one of the large packers, cutting down the number to four, and the bonds have been sold. I know that. I do not know what provision there is in the bill, but I know that the packers are quite satisfied with this bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KENDRICK. I just want to say that the $60,000,000 referred to was not an increase of capitalization growing out of a combination. It was a refunding plan, and up to this time there has been no merging of any packing-house interest. There has just been discussion of it.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I understand that it is now under consideration by the Agricultural Committee; but, long before any investigation by the committee was started, all the details of this deal were known to every business man in the country, and why do they want $60,000,000 in bonds if they are not going to enlarge the business?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I can inform the Senator. I think the Senate ought to know. This $60,000,000 is just to refund a debt incurred during the war at a higher rate of interest. I think it might very well be made plain. This great packing company is attempting to reestablish its business under the great difficulties of the times through which we are all passing, and in no sense of the word does it involve an increase growing out of a combination. It just transfers from an obligation that much of capital to capitalization of the business.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator is a very intelligent man, and a very lovable character——

Mr. KENDRICK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FERNALD. But I am sure he has been reading the daily papers for the last month and knows what is going on in the business world; and he knows to-day that representatives of the great packing houses are in Chicago, and, if I mistake not, they are in this city on this very purpose, taking it up with several of the committees here; but the consummation has been made.

Mr. KENDRICK. On what purpose?

Mr. FERNALD. To see whether Congress, now that it is all done, will ratify the proceedings, I suppose.

Mr. KENDRICK. If that be true, I have no information to that effect.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator certainly has been reading the daily papers. All I want is for the farmers of this country to know who their friends are. It is not necessary for a lot of swivel-chair farmers, who would not know corn from beeswax, to come up here and tell the Senate what is needed, and how many bureaus are needed here, and how we must broaden the activities of these bureaus and every year double up, first, one hundred, then two hundred, and now in the second year asking for four hundred and ten thousand dollars; and yet the Senate spent the whole afternoon yesterday trying to determine whether a little appropriation of $10,000 should be given to eradicate some disease that affects the cane-growing belt in the South. Let the farmers of this country know that every dollar of this is absolutely wasted. Let them know who are the real friends of the farmer. Let them know that there are a few of us here who are trying to economize.

Senators, why do we talk about economy all the time and still go on increasing the appropriations? Here is an opportunity to strike from the bill almost half a million dollars that is useless and wasted; and if this bill goes through, in about two years we will have to build another large office building here to accommodate this particular bureau. We increase these things from time to time; and if you on the other side want to make positions for another 125 deserving Republicans, go ahead and pass this bill, and let the farmers know what you are doing.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Judging by the last returns, where would we find the 125 deserving Republicans?

Mr. FERNALD. You will find them in Maine. That is about the only place now.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the only place where there are any left.

Mr. FERNALD. We have a few left down there. It is fortunate that this comes now, because if it had been two years ago, under the Democratic administration, you could not have found one in any State. But, my friends, what I want the people of this country to know is that we are trying to economize; that we are not going to start out on any new proposition here; that we do not propose to increase these appropriations. If they had come here and asked for a reasonable amount, that might have been another thing; but it is the same old story. They start in with four or five people, and every one of them has to have a stenographer in the first place; then they have to have roll-top desks; then they have to have offices in some building; then they have to have assistants; and then they must have experts. Everything that is contemplated to be done in this bill can be done by the Federal Trade Commission, who have expert attorneys, expert accountants, expert auditors, expert men in every department, that are able to carry out the provisions of this bill. All I ask is that we repeal that law, now that we know that it is an injury.

You say, "How does it affect the farmers?" It affects the farmers very little in regard to the $400,000 that is asked for. I realize that a man here speaking in terms of hundreds of thousands of dollars does not get much attention from the country. A few hundred thousand dollars does not make much difference. In the State of California alone, after this bill was passed, the fruit growers there came down here—representative men, farmers and fruit growers—and begged that a decree be made whereby they might sell their products as they had been selling them, through the regular channels. I want to say, Mr. President, that whenever the Government of the United States undertakes to interfere with any business, blocks in any way the progress of distribution, or undertakes to change the methods of the distribution and sale of products, it always affects the farmers. They are the men who are finally taxed; and not only in California but in Maine farmers cut down their acreage last year because they had no sale for their goods.

It is quite an undertaking to start out and get a market. You would be astonished if you should go down here to the grocers of this city and undertake to sell them any particular product. First of all, they would want to know what you knew about that product. Then they would want to know if it had been on the market. They would want to know all about it, and it would be the hardest thing in the world. It takes years and years to build up a business of that character, and when this bill was passed it stopped that method of distribution.

I want the farmers of the country to understand that this is an expensive thing; that it is a useless, wasteful piece of legislation. I want them to understand that what we mean to do in this country is not to interfere with business and try to punish everybody who is undertaking to carry on business, but to be helpful. Let us pass some legislation and try to help somebody or something.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I call the Senator's attention once again to the fact that the distribution of these products in connection with the unrelated products was stopped by the consent decree months before the other bill became a law.

Mr. FERNALD. I have not the date, but I do not recall that that was the case.

Mr. KENDRICK. I think the Senator will find that to be true; and if the present packer control bill deals with it, it only deals with that question in conformity with the consent decree.

Mr. FERNALD. As I recall, nothing of that kind was presented—in fact, I am certain about that—until after the passage of this bill. Then the whole thing came up, and it was finally turned over to the Department of Agriculture. The Federal Trade Commission were about making and had made an investigation. That investigation stopped entirely after the passage of this bill. What I want to do now is to turn this business right back to the Federal Trade Commission. The Senator knows that under the Sherman antitrust law there is plenty of law whereby the Federal Trade Commission can punish any combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does the Senator recall the fact that the packers wished to be relieved of the authority of the Federal Trade Commission and have it transferred in this way?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I do.

Mr. KENDRICK. That would indicate that nothing in the law has proved damaging to their business.

Mr. FERNALD. I recognize that the packers are very well pleased with this bill.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask my friend from Wyoming a question?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. He is a great cattle grower, and familiar with the practical side of this matter. I want to ask him whether or not, in his opinion, speaking from his experience, the passage of the act that we passed with regard to the regulation of packers a year or two ago has really been helpful in any way?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me, I shall have a word to say at the first opportunity on that particular point in connection with this appropriation; but, as a reminder to the Senator from Maine, I want to call his attention to the fact that the consent decree was put into effect by Attorney General Palmer, and that the packer control act was passed after the change of administration.

Mr. FERNALD. I admit that is so.

Mr. KENDRICK. May I not ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] if his recollection on this point is to that effect?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, it is common knowledge that the act was passed after the consent decree was entered.

Mr. KENDRICK. And the consent decree was in effect before the packer control act became a law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The packer control act was passed August 15, 1921.

Mr. FERNALD. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. What was the objection to the packers handling groceries and other products?

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator will find in the discussion on this floor, as I recall, no statement of mine opposing that economic distribution. I always insisted, in our committees and in other places, that it was unwise to impose upon the packers any restriction that would interfere with economic action. I had no such plan or purpose in my legislation, and refused, in fact, outside of the Chamber, to include that provision in the bill.

Mr. FERNALD. Does the Senator think it would be a wise thing to stop the drug men from selling cigars? That would be the same class of legislation. Would it be a very wise move to stop grocers selling medicine?

Mr. KENDRICK. I would place no such restrictions on any business.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator and I agree on that. No restrictions ought to be placed on any kind of business. Now I want to read from a speech of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENDRICK. I insist that the packers control act does not do that, but it was the court's decree that did it.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator thinks it would be a wise thing to set that decree aside, does he not?

Mr. KENDRICK. That is a matter I have not considered. If the Senator wants a direct answer to that question, I have this to say, that I think the entire packing-house situation should be let alone, let go ahead in a normal way, like any other business.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator agrees with the packers.

Mr. KENDRICK. I do to that extent.

Mr. FERNALD. I have just said that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in his place here said that 10 provisions were written in with a sharpened pencil by one of the agents of the packers; that it was exactly the bill they wanted. What I want to say is this: That the farmers of this country have worked under a disadvantage every day since that law was enacted, and not only has it cost this Government this year an appropriation of $410,000—which is an absolutely useless expenditure of money—but it stopped the marketing and distribution of more than $500,000,000 worth of farm products in 1922.

Mr. CARAWAY. In the interest of historic accuracy, may I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it was not the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate——

Mr. FERNALD. No——

Mr. CARAWAY. To which the amendments were suggested by the attorney for the packers. That was a bill which passed the House and which came here, and if I may be permitted to say it, votes on the Senator's side of the Chamber substituted the bill as it passed the House for the Senate committee bill.

Mr. FERNALD. With sufficient help on the Senator's side.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was opposed to it. I will look up the record and see just who did vote for it.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator will find there were several on both sides of the Chamber who voted for it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall be much surprised if that is the fact.

Mr. FERNALD. The farmers themselves know what is to their advantage. Let me read what one of the largest farmers in Iowa said. I am reading from the evidence of Mr. J. S. Blackwell, of Muscatine, Iowa. He said:

> I am sorry that a Senator from a prosperous State like Iowa has to be the father of this bill, in view of the great prosperity that we are now enjoying. I do not think such legislation should originate from a State like ours. * * * Iowa's land values have increased by leaps and bounds within the last few years—from $50 to $500 an acre, and in some places more than that. This is due to the packers more than any single thing.

And Mr. Blackwell knew what he was talking about. He is the largest hog raiser in the State of Iowa.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator give the date?

Mr. FERNALD. Let me finish reading this.

Mr. FLETCHER. I just want the date of that.

Mr. FERNALD. This was before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in 1921, I think.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I suggest that the Senator making that speech was Senator Kenyon, for whose confirmation as a judge the Senator from Maine voted. He was appointed Federal judge by this administration.

Mr. FERNALD. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. CARAWAY. Senator Kenyon was the Senator being criticized, and he was made a Federal judge by the present administration, and the Senator from Maine voted for his confirmation.

Mr. FERNALD. I did, and he is a very able judge, I have no doubt.

Mr. CARAWAY. A very fair man.

Mr. FERNALD. A very fair man, I have no doubt; but he was mistaken in this matter. I want to finish reading from Mr. Blackwell's testimony. I want Senators to know that this is the evidence of a farmer, the largest hog grower in the State of Iowa, from which State the sponsor of that law came. He went on to say:

> This is due to the packers more than any single thing, and I want to tell you why. Iowa is the greatest hog-producing State in the Union. Besides, it is one of the foremost cattle-producing States, as well as one of the leading States in the production of poultry, eggs, and butter. Now, all of these products of our farms practically are sold to the packers at the ready cash market every day in the year.

Then he goes on. I am not going to read it all, but he was very sorry that his Senator should sponsor such a bill as that, and the farmers from one end of the country to the other have been injured by the enactment of that law, which placed a block of obstruction in the way of distribution which was the most economical way for distributing farm products from the farm to the consumers' tables.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator is still confusing the consent decree with the packers act, which were not related.

Mr. FERNALD. I will set that aside and say nothing more about the consent decree.

Mr. CARAWAY. The packer control bill had nothing to do with distribution. It had everything to do with the matter of the packers combining, so that they could get from the farmer his live stock at practically their own prices, having no kind of competition in the buying of farm products.

Mr. FERNALD. That is not true. This man from Iowa says——

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. Let me say to the Senator that more than 80 farmers appeared before that committee, giving the same testimony.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would not be willing to concede that all the wisdom in the world is contained in 80 farmers from the State of Iowa. There is something left outside of that 80.

Mr. FERNALD. They came from all over the country.

Mr. CARAWAY. Any farmer who protested against that legislation because he said it interfered with the distribution of farm products does not need to be answered, because from a reading of the bill it will be found that he did not know what he was talking about. A farmer is no more likely to be right than anybody else, if he does not know what he is complaining about.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator——

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. FERNALD. I will allow him to conclude his speech if he wants to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. FERNALD. The farmers are the men who understand what the fatted calf is, and they are beginning to realize, just as the Senator from Wisconsin said, that that law was written in the interest of the packers. An agent of the packers appeared before the committee, their ideas were written into the bill, and the bill was passed because the Senate had an idea at that time that they had to punish somebody.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator was complaining that they did not punish the packers, that they made them rich.

Mr. FERNALD. The farmers punished themselves, because they stopped distribution. Does the Senator want any further information about that? I have told him what this man said, and I submit that that man who raises hogs knows as much about marketing his hogs as any Senator on this floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to know whose hogs he raises.

Mr. FERNALD. He raises his own hogs, and he is one of 80 men who appeared from the State of Iowa, or who came from all over the country, and I am sure the farmers know as much about marketing their goods, whether hogs or corn or horses, as any Senator on this floor. They are not swivel-chair farmers, mealy mouthed manipulators of modern business, trying to upset every provision that has been made in the last 50 years. They want to sell as directly as they can from their farms to the consumers' tables, and I want the farmers of this country to know, as they do know, that the Senate is ready now to put an end to the attempt to punish somebody and are going to give a little helpful assistance to the farmers.

Several bills have been introduced which deal with the subject of aid to the farmers, and I am in favor of all of them that will in any way assist the farmers in getting their products to market. What the farmers of this country want more than anything else is a market for their goods. They do not want credit. Most farmers can get credit. There has never been a single farmer in my State, to my knowledge, who has asked any help of any agency in Washington, but they ask for markets, and that is what they are deprived of by this law. I want them to understand that the Senate of the United States here and now is ready to stop enacting that kind of legislation, that they are ready to stop building up great bureaus here, that they are ready to stop bringing men here from partisan motives, giving them positions as clerks and auditors and expert accountants. I want them to know that the Senate of the United States is ready to put a stop to bringing men here to undertake to govern the farmers' business, and that we are going to allow the farmers and business men of this country to carry on their business in their own way, as they have for 50 years. Whenever a man has built up a large business, instead of undertaking to punish him let us give him some helpful aid.

I have had my say about this. I told the Senate two years ago just what would happen. I take some little personal satisfaction in referring to it, because I stated at that time almost precisely what has happened on account of the passage of that bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the speech which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has just made. He has made some statements which have greatly surprised me. The first among them is the statement that the packer act, passed August 15, 1921, is really a law passed by the present Congress in the interest of the packers and not in the interest of the farmers and the stock raisers of the country. That is an alarming statement, and if it be true it ought to receive very serious consideration from this body and from the people of this country as well.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD. I based my statement on the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who held up the bill—the Senator will find the incident in his remarks—and said that inserted between the lines, written with a finely sharpened pencil, were provisions that were placed there by an agent of one of the large packers; and Senators now present remember that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator made the statement, as I understood him, not upon the secondhand statement of somebody else but upon his own responsibility, for it was a positive and affirmative statement that this was a law in the interest of the packers, and a law with which the packers were content.

I was here when that bill was under consideration. I did not extensively participate in the debates. But it was the general impression in this body, and that impression was corroborated by the attitude of Senators who were supposed to be in sympathy with the position of the packers, that the packers' interests of the country were fighting the measure tooth and nail. Those of us who gave it our support supposed that we were enacting legislation that would restrain the packers from doing certain things which they had been habitually doing, greatly to the injury of the people.

The measure was enacted into law since the present administration came into power. Responsibility for its passage rests upon the shoulders of the present administration. Responsibility for its administration and enforcement rests upon the shoulders of the present administration. If it was a measure in the interest of the packers, the party responsible for its passage ought to have made that fact known when we were discussing the bill and when they were insisting upon its passage.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at this moment. If the act is in the interest of the packers, then the Senate of the United States, in my judgment, has been deceived. I have read some of the main provisions of it, especially the provisions which restrain the packers from doing certain things that they had heretofore been in the habit of doing, and I undertake to say that the act was not a measure in the interest of the packers. I undertake to say if the provisions of the law have been enforced, it has not operated in the interest of the packers; and, if it has operated against the people and in the interest of the packers, it is because of defective and faulty administration.

So far as I have examined this act, there is not a line, in my judgment, which is in the special interest of the packers and which is against the interest of the country. But it does no good to write a law in the interest of the people and against the manipulations and exploitations of the packers unless those in authority shall effectively execute and administer that law. I am not here to say that the law has or has not been executed in a way to make it effective, but I am here to say that if the act has failed of its purpose of restraining the packers in the robbery of the people of the country, it is because either the Attorney General of the United States or the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, since its enactment into law in 1921, have failed in their duty to the people of the country in its proper enforcement and not because of inadequacy of the law.

The Senator from Maine made another very significant statement.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator has been here for a long time; he is a very able Senator, and is familiar with all the bills that come before us. He was very familiar with the packers bill——

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I am not very familiar with it.

Mr. WATSON. I rather think the Senator made a speech on the measure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think I did. I think I made some brief observations, but no general speech.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator certainly heard what the Senator from Wisconsin said about the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not recall anything he said. Does the Senator mean the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not recall anything he said about it. I do not think I heard him speak on it.

Mr. WATSON. He said two or three times on the floor that the measure was passed in the interest of the packers, and that many of its main provisions were written into it by the attorney for the packers. He made that statement repeatedly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the Senator from Wisconsin said about it. I know the Senator from Wisconsin has some views about things sometimes characterized by the other side as radical. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if he thought when he voted for the measure that it was in the interest of the packers? Does the Senator think that any Senator who voted for it thought it was a measure in the interest of the packers?

Mr. WATSON. The Senator wrongly accuses me. I voted against it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator voted against it?

Mr. WATSON. I certainly did.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did the Senator vote against it because it was in the interest of the packers?

Mr. WATSON. I voted against it, first, because I am against legislation of that character altogether; and I voted against it, secondly, because of what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said about it, and he was familiar with it.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the first time the Senator from Indiana has ever allowed his vote in this body to be controlled by the views of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WATSON. That is quite true, and I may never again do so; but, nevertheless, the Senator from Wisconsin, more than anybody else, knew about the legislation. He was familiar with the character of it; he had followed it from the beginning to the end; and he stood upon the floor of the Senate and made positive statements. I believed what he said about it, and I believe it now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Was not that speech made on the conference report?

Mr. WATSON. It was made both before and after the conference report was presented. It was made on the conference report, too. Let me ask my friend a question, if he will permit me. The Senator from North Carolina said he was deceived about the character of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. WATSON. I understood the Senator to say he was so deceived.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said if the act was in the interest of the packers. I did not think then and I do not think now it was or is in the interest of the packers.

Mr. WATSON. I think the Senator from Wisconsin did make the same statement on the conference report as on the bill just before it was passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I just this moment came on the floor, and learn that my part in the debate upon the legislation of another session is under discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to say that I am yielding to him because the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has just indicated that something the Senator from Wisconsin said very largely controlled his vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not conceive of my ever having had any influence upon any vote the Senator from Indiana cast upon legislation.

Mr. WATSON. I made the statement, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, that it was the first time it had ever occurred, and probably would be the last. Of course, the remark was jocular.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I suggest that the Senator ought to be congratulated for being right one time?

Mr. WATSON. I voted right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have been in attendance upon an investigation ordered by the Senate which is now being conducted by the Committee on Manufactures, and I have had no opportunity to hear any of the discussion that has been taking place in the Senate since it convened this morning. I knew in advance that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] was going to offer some amendment with regard to the packers' legislation. He said to me that he would be glad if I could be present. I replied that it would not be possible for me to attend upon the session this morning. He now informs me that in the course of his remarks he said something in commendation of my position with regard to the packer legislation.

I would like to say, if I am not trenching upon the kindness and patience of the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all. The Senator may take all the time he wants.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I opposed many of the provisions of the so-called packer-control measure at some stage of the proceedings while the bill was before the Senate. The exact parliamentary situation with respect to the measure is not at this moment very clear in my mind. If my memory serves me, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported the Senate committee bill, which was the Norris bill.

Mr. WATSON. It did.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was in favor of the Norris bill, and I was not in favor of the House bill. I believe that during the consideration of the measure the Senate finally substituted the House bill for the Norris bill.

Mr. FERNALD. That is right.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; the Senate did that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And the provisions of the House bill were attacked, my recollection is, by the then Senator from Iowa, Mr. Kenyon. I know they were attacked by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and I made such opposition as I was able to make to certain provisions of the bill. I recall very distinctly that in the course of the debate I denounced certain provisions of the bill as having been written into the bill before it passed the House at the dictation of the packers. During the debate I produced the bill here in which appeared the interlineations in the handwriting of the packers' attorney. I had all the facts upon such high authority that I challenged contradiction. The interlined provisions of that bill and their authorship was made very plain to the Senate in the course of that debate and had been incorporated in the House bill before it was passed.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I can read the exact language of the Senator, if he will allow me to do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pardon me, that perhaps is not so material. If the packer bill which finally became a law had been passed by the Senate in the form in which it came from the House and was substituted for the Norris bill, I never would have voted for it, because it seemed to me to be at that stage of the proceeding a bill very much more in the interest of the packers than in the interest of the public.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield presently. But in the latter stages of the consideration of the bill certain amendments proposed by the then Senator from Iowa, Mr. Kenyon, were incorporated in the bill, and with those amendments, which greatly improved the bill, though it was far from being a satisfactory measure, I voted for the bill.

I remember one of the amendments which the then Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] offered in the last stages of the consideration of the bill was an amendment which gave the Secretary of Agriculture control over the bookkeeping of the packers so as to enforce uniformity in bookkeeping. That was a very essential thing as a part of a regulatory measure. The interstate commerce law was very greatly improved in the public interest when the Hepburn-Dolliver Act was under consideration and section 20 of that bill was adopted, clothing the Interstate Commerce Commission with authority to impose a uniform system of bookkeeping on the railroads, thus enabling the commission to supervise in some degree the railroad accounting system.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not attempt offhand to recall the various provisions of the packers' control legislation and the modifications made by the Senate to the House bill, but I voted for it, although with some misgivings. One of the provisions of the measure which I believed then and which I now believe was very detrimental to the public interest was that provision which deprived the Federal Trade Commission from the exercise of any authority over the packers and deprived the commission of any right to investigate them, no matter how unfair their trade methods might become.

I believe that we should have continued the authority of the Federal Trade Commission over the packers in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture. The Federal Trade Commission is the best investigating body that the Federal Government ever established. It has rendered incalculable service to the people of this country in many lines of business. I believe the law should be changed; that the packers' control act should be amended in that particular; and that where the Federal Trade Commission finds that some trade or practice of the packers is against the interests of the public they should have the power and authority to prosecute investigations. That commission is far better equipped to do that work than is the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield presently, if the Senator from Maine will excuse me just for the moment.

It is true that the packers' control act, according to my recollection, provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may call upon the Federal Trade Commission to conduct such investigations, but the law imposes too great an obligation and too great a labor upon the Secretary of Agriculture, and it is vesting too much power in the hands of one man. The Secretary of Agriculture is an exceedingly busy man. He has a great department of Government to administer. His appointment is essentially a political one, and for many years and under both parties there has been more than a vague suspicion that the packers have exercised a large influence in the Department of Agriculture.

I believe, therefore, that the most important thing that the Senate can do with respect to the packers' control act is to amend it, leaving the packers' control act in existence as it is to-day, but modifying it by restoring to the Federal Trade Commission authority to investigate not only when they are called upon by the Secretary of Agriculture so to do but when upon their own motion they believe a condition to exist which, in the interest of the public, requires investigation. I have introduced such a bill as that.

I wish to also say that while I voted for the packers' control act with grave misgivings I believe that, in a measure, that act has been helpful to the public, and I believe it should be continued in existence. I think, however, that it ought to have the amendment made to it to which I have referred.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, and then I will yield the floor, or if permitted to retain the floor I shall answer any of the questions the Senators have sought to propound to me while I have had the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for merely a moment in order that I may make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to remind the Senator from Wisconsin that the former Senator from Iowa, Mr. Kenyon, and many other Senators who voted for the compromise measure of the House of Representatives stated that it was not what we wanted, but there were sufficient Senators on the other side who opposed giving the Federal Trade Commission the power to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers to force the consideration of the compromise bill. I remember, however, that many of the Senators who opposed the Federal Trade Commission having those powers also voted against the compromise bill and opposed all legislation designed to curb the meat packers' trust. That shows whether the packers desired the legislation or not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I have the floor, I will yield to the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Maine, both of whom sought to interrupt me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall not assume to take the floor away from the Senator; but if the Senator will yield to me a little further, I will endeavor, if possible, to answer the questions which Senators on my right desire to ask.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield first to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. I have no question to propound to the Senator from Wisconsin, as he has confirmed exactly the statement which I made; but I shall be glad to read exactly what the Senator said, as I have referred to it, in order to make the quotation exact. I stated as nearly as I could remember what the Senator said. This was his exact language:

> First, the selection of a committee of three; and I was told by a member of the House committee the other day on this floor that that committee was pretty carefully selected. This committee takes the Haugen bill and writes into it seven important suggestions made by the attorney for the packers—

That is precisely what I stated—

> Radical suggestions, suggestions that completely changed the character of the bill as it was first introduced.

That is the main part of what I said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. Just a moment. I stated that the Senator from Wisconsin—with whom I do not always agree, and who had been somewhat troublesome to our side of the Chamber at times—held up that bill and said there had been from 7 to 10 provisions written in it by an agent of the packers. What I have read clears that situation, and the Senator has confirmed my statement.

I merely want now to ask the Senator, as he has already expressed himself that the law ought to be repealed, does he not think that the Federal Trade Commission, under the Sherman antitrust law and other provisions of law, has ample power to prevent combinations in restraint of trade? Even though we strike out the appropriation of $410,000 to build up a great bureau down here to be filled with deserving Republicans, has not the Federal Trade Commission, with its attorneys and auditors and bookkeepers and experts to the number of more than 400, under the law already on the statute books in regard to combinations in restraint of trade, ample power and sufficient office force to enforce the antitrust laws? What does the Senator from Wisconsin think about the Federal Trade Commission in that respect?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from North Carolina will give me an opportunity to answer the question, I shall be most delighted to answer it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should first like to answer the question of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I answer the question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me answer, as the question was asked of me.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has lost the floor. The Chair does not think that the Senator may farm out the time of the Senate after he has taken his seat.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think that is technically true, but we have not observed that rule all the time; and I am sorry that my courtesy to my colleagues has deprived me of the floor. I did not understand, however, that any Senator had made the point of order that I had lost the floor, and I trust that the Chair himself will not insist upon making it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the interest of orderly procedure, the Chair made the suggestion. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was occupying the floor, the Senator from North Carolina having taken his seat. The Chair will ask the Senator from North Carolina now whether or not he desires to retain the floor?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do desire to retain the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Should there not be an exception as to farming out the time when the Agricultural bill is under consideration?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not complaining of the Chair, although it is usual for the objection to come from the floor instead of from the Chair. However, I now have the floor, and if the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, I should like first to yield for a moment to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who said he was influenced by the speech made by the Senator from Wisconsin, has left the Chamber, because the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin was made in support of the Norris motion to substitute the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate for the House bill, and the Senator from Wisconsin had called attention to the fact that the House bill had been written by the attorney for the packers. I should like to show how the Senator from Indiana was influenced by that speech. On page 2712 of the RECORD of June 17, 1921, the vote on that motion appears. The Senator from Wisconsin had been urging that the Norris substitute be adopted for the House bill, which he said had been written by the attorney for the packers, and it appears that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted "nay." He says that he was convinced that the House bill was written by the packers' attorney. Therefore he voted for it.

I should like also to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Maine, who insisted on reading into the RECORD the very statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin, also voted "nay." So both Senators voted for the very legislation which they said they condemned, and their votes appear on page 2712 of the RECORD of June 17, 1921. Both Senators voted on two separate roll calls exactly contrary to the vote of the Senator from Wisconsin, and yet both of them say the Senator from Wisconsin controlled their vote in that particular matter.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. Here [exhibiting] is the RECORD.

Mr. FERNALD. I have the RECORD, too, right here, and will read from it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. The Presiding Officer said:

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Of course we both voted "nay" on that amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon; the Norris amendment was rejected as shown on page 2712. That was the substitute amendment for which the Senator from Wisconsin had been speaking and the Senator from Maine voted for the House bill which the Senator from Wisconsin had opposed.

Mr. FERNALD. I voted against all amendments and all propositions in relation to the subject matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SIMMONS. Just for a word I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I want to put in the RECORD in the interest of accuracy the statement that the Norris bill was defeated, and the House bill, the one which the Senator from Wisconsin denounced, was considered by the Senate, and the Senate by votes of the Republican majority, only three Democrats voting for the House measure and only two Republicans voting against it.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, now——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin to whom I promised I would yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I can not take the time now to make answer to the Senator from Maine. I am obliged to continue work before the Committee on Manufactures which the Senate has directed me to perform, and at exactly half past 1, which is the time at which the committee will meet again, I must resume my work there. I shall have occasion, if I can obtain the floor later in the day, to make some answer to the queries propounded to me by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. FERNALD. I am sorry to ask the Senator to yield, but if he will yield for just a moment, I desire to say in answer to my friend from Arkansas that I voted against the Norris bill, against every amendment, and against the bill as finally passed. I had no confidence in it then and I have none now. I voted against all the amendments; that is all I have to say about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this controversy has served a good purpose. A few moments ago the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Indiana both indicated that they had probably been misled by something the Senator from Wisconsin had said and had based their votes upon some declaration that he made with reference to this matter. The Senator from Wisconsin makes it clear that he was strongly in favor of the Norris bill; that he was advocating the Norris bill; and his remarks were based upon a comparison of the Norris bill with the House bill. Now it is disclosed by the record vote as read by the Senator from Arkansas that both the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Maine voted against the Norris bill.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was the very bill that the Senator from Wisconsin, who they say was their guide and beacon light, was advocating. So we have a very remarkable inconsistency here in the position of these two Senators with reference to this particular matter.

But, Mr. President, that is mere incidental matter. It is dealing in the details of this great question. I want to get to the fundamentals of it.

What was the Senate engaged in doing when we voted upon this measure? Were we engaged in trying to pass legislation here at the request and at the instance and in favor of the packers, or were we trying to pass legislation here in the interest of the people? I take it that the answer to that will be that we were trying to legislate in the interest of the people, and that the friends of this measure thought they were legislating in the interest of the people, and that the gentlemen of the Senate, on whichever side of the Chamber they may have been, who voted against this legislation voted against it either because they thought it was unwise legislation or because they thought it was too harsh in its terms as against the packers. I take it that no Senator will stand up here and say that he voted against this measure because he thought it was in the interest of the people or that he voted for it because he thought it was in the interests of the packers and against the interest of the people. Every Senator who spoke against it at the time spoke against it upon the theory that it was unwise legislation, that it was a character of legislation that was unsound, or that it was too harsh in its terms upon the packers.

A Republican Senate and House passed this legislation and a Republican President approved it, and that party is responsible for its provisions and administration, and when that party, through its spokesmen in this body, denounce the legislation as being in the interest of the packers and against the interest of the people, they indict the Republican Party for legislating not in the interest of the people but of these combinations of monster trusts.

As to the criticisms which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has made here to-day, he seems to have voted for the bill. This very Senator that they say was their guide, and whose advice they followed in casting their votes, it turns out, voted for this legislation. Of all Senators in this Chamber, he probably was most persistent and vehement in denunciation of legislation in favor of the special interests.

Surely, no one will say that when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who made an elaborate and exhaustive speech, who is assumed to have thoroughly considered the question—for he generally analyzes pretty closely any matter of legislation in which he is sufficiently interested to address the Senate—voted for this measure he thought he was voting for a bill in the interest of the trusts or against that of the people.

I am not at all prepared to say that the bill as administered has or has not been so administered—operated in the interests of the trusts and against the people; but if because of nonadministration or maladministration the Republican Party is responsible for that result, because its administration has been in the hands and under the control not of a nonpartisan board such as the Federal Trade Commission, with representatives upon it of both parties, but in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, who has been ever since the day of the passage of this act a member of President Harding's Cabinet.

It may be, Mr. President, that it would have been better if we had left the administration of this law in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. That was thrashed out at the time the bill was passed. That was then argued pro and con. We finally decided by a majority vote in both Houses that it was better to place the administration of the measure in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and if you will read the act you will see that probably the controlling reason for taking it out of the hands of the trade commission and putting it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture was because the bill proposed to invest him with certain summary powers that enabled him almost immediately to investigate and expose and put an end to any illegal practices against the people on the part of the packers. It was, I am sure, because of the expeditious methods that were to be employed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and which could not well be employed by the Federal Trade Commission, that the Senate was induced to substitute that method of dealing with the evil practices sought to be remedied. If the act has not been effective to this end, then it is because the law has not been for some reason duly enforced.

That is all I have to say about that, Mr. President.

Mr. President, in the speech first made by the Senator from Maine he made another rather startling statement to which I wish to call attention. He not only indicted the Republican Congress with passing legislation ostensibly and pretendedly in the interest of the people but really in the interest of the trusts and monopolies, but the Senator from Maine stated that, notwithstanding this restraining legislation and notwithstanding our drastic antitrust laws, one of the most gigantic trust combinations that has ever taken place in the history of the world is now in process of consummation by certain of the packers. He tells us that they have issued or are about to issue $60,000,000 worth of bonds in order to complete this merger of these great packing trusts at which this legislation is aimed.

Upon whom is the responsibility of enforcing these laws, the open flaunting of which is now, we are told, about to be consummated? The duty of enforcing these laws rests upon the Attorney General of the United States. Who is the Attorney General of the United States? He, like the Secretary of Agriculture, is a member of President Harding's Cabinet. Does the Senator mean to tell the Senate that this great merger of the trusts to which he has referred, this biggest trust and monopoly combination that the world has ever seen, with the exception of one, I think he said—I presume he referred to the Steel Trust—is now in process of organization, that it is about to be consummated, and that the Attorney General of the United States has not moved a hand or even so much as made a gesture to prevent that outrage and rape upon the laws of the United States? And yet he contends the packers' legislation has not been effectively enforced and that the fact that a great, gigantic, Brobdingnagian trust is now in process of consummation is a reason why we should refuse further appropriations to enforce packers' legislation. It would seem that not only is the Attorney General absolutely quiescent and acquiescent while this outrage and rape upon the law is being perpetrated, but that it is desired that we withhold funds to enforce the legislation we have enacted to curb the exploitation of the packers' trusts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	McCumber	Simmons
Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Smith
Bayard	George	McKinley	Smoot
Borah	Hale	McLean	Sterling
Brandegee	Harreld	McNary	Townsend

Ernst	McCormick	Shields

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as I had no information that this question was to come up for discussion to-day, I am more or less unprepared to deal with it in a satisfactory way. However, in view of the unusual crisis through which every phase of this industry is passing at the present time, I feel constrained to offer a word of explanation to the Senate in reference to the original plan and purpose of the law, as well as an opinion as to the way it has functioned during the brief period of its administration. And more particularly do I want to make the most earnest protest I can to the Senate against precipitant or ill-considered action in connection with either what is known as the packer control act or the packing-house industry in itself.

I am in hopes the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] will not be adopted. I am sure that the principal part of the discussion to which we have listened, and even the attitude of mind on the part of the Senator from Maine, are the result of a confusion on his part as to the relation which the consent decree of the court, entered under the administration of Attorney General Palmer, has to the so-called packer control act, passed months afterwards.

The Senator from Maine complains that that piece of legislation has interfered with the distribution of the farmers' products and has worked a great hardship on them. As a matter of fact, it is true that the packer control act deals not at all with the question raised by the Senator from Maine. Whatever the wisdom and judgment and necessity which prompted and compelled the consent decree, I want to say that I, as one Member of the Senate, always doubted the economic need or the wisdom of restraining the packing houses from distributing any kind of food products which through their method could be distributed in a more economical way. But, however that may be, I am certain that the complaints alleged by the Senator from Maine are the direct result of that decree rather than of the packer control act.

One of the great difficulties about the packer control act, which no doubt is true of many other laws, is the misconception of what the whole thing was about. That has been more in evidence here to-day as I have listened to this discussion than I ever had occasion to note before.

Another question that has been raised is whether it was written in the interest of the packers or the public, and in order to have something like a clear understanding of the whole situation I would ask the Senate to listen to me just a few minutes in regard to the history of this legislation.

Many Senators have expressed doubt about and even strong opposition to any legislation interfering with business, as they stated it. Even to-day they have indicated an attitude of skepticism as to the wisdom of Congress in enacting such legislation. On this point I hope, before concluding my remarks, to convince those who voted for the legislation that their judgment has been justified not only by the results so far obtained but by the attitude of the general public toward the legislation. Let me say here that in this country of ours, in all of its economic and industrial life, there is no parallel to the method and manner of the sale and distribution of meat products. As can be shown in exhaustive records, the concentration of the packing industry in a few great market centers was brought about originally by the employment of artificial methods. But the concentration became a fact, and it was necessary to deal with it without regard to how it had been accomplished.

It may well be borne in mind that this law dealt not with an ordinary necessity but the food products of the Nation. As I listened to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] I was frequently impelled to ask him the question if he could, as a result of the most charitable view, have been satisfied with the conditions that existed in our central markets at any time prior to the enactment of this law?

The discussion of these markets first began on the floor of the Senate more than 35 years ago, and it has continued periodically from that time until this. The clamor against the conduct of the markets had risen and subsided time after time in the meantime, involving always a charge of unfair play and unfair practice in the yards. Without regard to the merits of the controversy such unfavorable publicity could not be beneficial to the industry in any of its phases, not even to the producers of live stock.

Those of us who came to the point of asking for legislation here did not have any idea of imposing a plan of retaliation on the industry. Our primary purpose was a reform of present and a prevention of future abuses. Those of us who attempted to interpret the spirit of the thousands of live-stock producers and farmers of the country, those most vitally interested, were willing to let bygones be bygones, but we did insist upon bringing such light of publicity to the methods employed in these yards as would insure more satisfactory procedure in the future.

Let me say here that I agree with the statement that has been made time after time that these packing houses are among the most efficient organizations in the country. I am not concerned so much as to whether or not their profits have been large or small. This is more or less of an incident, because nearly all of our industries in the country have either good or bad times, and under good or bad management they succeed or fail. It is not an indictment against them to succeed and accumulate property, or at least should not be. In this case they have benefited, and they have become absolutely necessary to the country under present conditions, and that is why I am talking to the Senate to-day.

As I have already stated, the industry has continued for a period of 40 or 50 years, and periodically there had been a clamor that upset conditions in the yards, disturbed the markets, forced the prices of our products down and brought general derangement to the whole industry. So when we approached the question of asking Congress to pass upon the matter and give us legislation, it was not to punish the packing houses, but it was to bring orderly procedure there, and to prevent unfair practice in the yards, not only on the part of the packers but of every other agency. I may say right here that more than once in our live-stock conventions in the West, and on the floor of the Senate, I have made the statement, which has already proved to be true, that when the law became effective the packing houses would be found the least vulnerable of all the market agencies, and up to this time that prophecy has been amply justified.

Coming back to the question of the legislation, it was my intention and my purpose as one Senator to promote legislation, not to increase trouble in the yards but to bring about good understanding on the part of every agency in the yards.

In answer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] as to whether or not there had been benefits, let me say unequivocally that there has already been ample evidence of progress as a result of this legislation. There is no doubt in the world about it. If I may be indulged the statement, it is my privilege to claim a personal acquaintance with as many stockmen and farmers as any one man in the Nation, and on a basis of personal contact with them I can state positively that they are for the law as it stands and they ask that it be retained and enforced. Concrete evidence counts for more than any statement as proof that the law has had a salutary effect. I do not think it has been 12 months since the law went into effect. Shortly after it was enacted its constitutionality was called into question, and not until a few months ago was the Secretary of Agriculture authorized to proceed under the law. I think it may safely be said that it is but very recently that he has succeeded in perfecting his organization for supervision of the markets. So the intervening time is too short for anyone to determine definitely as to the merits of the legislation. But as one of the unmistakable benefits already shown, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that for the first time in the history of the yards representatives of the live-stock organizations of the West and the great packing houses and the small packing houses are sitting down together for the purpose of cooperating in an effort not only to increase the consumption of meat food products but to eliminate in so far as possible unnecessary cost in the distribution of the product to the consumer, the idea being that there is, first, too much advertising against the merits of meat as a food and there is also, as we believe, speaking for both producers and packers, too much unnecessary cost between the wholesalers who prepare and distribute the product and the ultimate consumers.

So it is for that purpose and with that end in mind that these two great forces, so necessary and vital in the delivery of the products to the people of the country, are cooperating, with a view of eliminating unnecessary waste and loss, and thus delivering the products that much more cheaply to the consumer. Any number of instances could be shown in which this spirit is manifested. It is coming to be more and more understood and more and more accepted as a fact that all of the agencies are related, from the producer to the consumer, and there should not be unnecessary warfare between any of them in order to bring about the best results to everyone concerned.

It is easy to those of us who have had to do with it to understand why the law is to be wholesome in its effect. One who is familiar with the laws of trade readily understands that when a question of unfair practice involves an investigation it is necessary to have some agency of unquestioned authority to proclaim the facts, whatever they may be. In other words, it is just as necessary for such an agency to proclaim the absence of unfair practices as it is to establish the fact as to such abuse. That is exactly what is proposed here. One of the primary purposes of the law was to assist in the elimination, in so far as possible, of every semblance of unfair practice that might prevail in the yards. This is being done in a very satisfactory way. There is no doubt in the world but what the process has been slower than we could wish, but it has required time for the Secretary to perfect his organization, and he has since proceeded in a careful and constructive way, one that would be helpful rather than harmful to the public. We can not disturb and upset business by meddling and interfering unnecessarily and reasonably expect to bring any benefit to the people whom we are trying to assist.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENDRICK. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator is making a very interesting speech. Coming from one who has personal knowledge and a large experience, his observations are very interesting and illuminating. What I wanted to ask the Senator is as much a matter of information as anything else, and I assure the Senator it is not in any controversial spirit. Did the law now in question, for which an additional appropriation is sought, confer any power upon the investigating body that was not lodged with the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. KENDRICK. The Secretary of Agriculture, I may say, answering the Senator's question directly, has no authority that was not originally lodged with the Federal Trade Commission, so far as the authority goes, but the packer control act gives the Secretary of Agriculture administrative authority as well as investigating authority.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator a question? If the proposed amendment of the Senator from Maine, which I understand is an amendment to strike out the appropriation for the enforcement of the law, were agreed to, then the Secretary of Agriculture could do nothing because the funds would be taken away from him, and the Federal Trade Commission could do nothing because the law divested them of their authority over the subject. Would not the result be a nullification temporarily of the law?

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator allow me to answer the question?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. In answer to the question, I want to say that I agree with the Senator precisely that unless some further action were taken it would leave the disposition high and dry, but I propose, if my amendment shall be agreed to striking from the bill the appropriation of $410,000, to offer a bill to be voted on to-morrow, which under the rules of the Senate is obligatory, proposing to repeal the law creating the packer control. That would place it precisely where it was in the first instance, with the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why not make the first proposition first?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know that it would make any particular difference; but the Senate has the pending bill under consideration, and I am rather inclined always to talk to the bill which is pending.

Mr. SIMMONS. If we repeal the present law, then the appropriation would be unnecessary.

Mr. FERNALD. But we should have to strike it from the bill just the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. The appropriation might be stricken from the bill, and still the proposition to repeal the law might not be adopted.

Mr. FERNALD. But we could vote on the amendment to the pending bill to-day and we could not vote on the other proposal until to-morrow; and I want to hasten the passage of this bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, answering the question propounded by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I think no one can have any doubt that favorable action on the amendment to strike out the appropriation would have the effect, at least temporarily, of repealing the law in so far as making it operative is concerned.

Mr. WATSON. What I was trying to get at, if the Senator will permit me a question, was to find out whether or not anything has been accomplished by the bureau which has been established that could not have been accomplished by the Federal Trade Commission; that was all.

Mr. KENDRICK. I think I may again call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Federal Trade Commission is of an investigating character. For that purpose they are equipped probably as no other Government agency ever was equipped, and I believe they are getting results; but they are not an administrative body. It seems to me that it would appeal to the Senate without argument that the Secretary of Agriculture, by reason of his official responsibilities, is admirably qualified to supervise these great central markets, the operation of which is not only necessary but is vital to every consumer of food products in the Nation. I may add that he was named as the administrative officer in the first bill which I introduced in the Senate, providing for supervision of our markets.

The Senator from Maine is correct in his statement that to repeal the law would mean a return to the original order. It would also involve a return to the old condition, with all of its confusion, all of its criticism, all of the suspicion and distrust, all of the charges true or false against this industry.

Speaking for the live-stock producers, both ranchmen and farmers, I once again insist that they do not want this law repealed, and I ask the Senators who are present to listen to this further statement, that should this law remain in force under sane and rational administration for a period of three to five years there will not be a single market agency in the stockyards that will want to go back to the old condition, for the reason that the administration of the law is destined to substitute order for confusion, confidence for distrust and suspicion.

In reference to the transfer from the Federal Trade Commission to the Secretary of Agriculture of the authority to investigate, I believe it would not prove harmful if that power were restored to the Federal Trade Commission, and I am not certain it would prove in any way helpful under present conditions, for the reason that it would seem entirely unnecessary to grant to two agencies the power to investigate any one industry.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator does not mean that he would be in favor of divesting the Secretary of Agriculture of the powers he now has under the act, but he means that he would be in favor of allowing the Federal Trade Commission to make investigation in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KENDRICK. If I am not mistaken, that authority is now reposed in the Federal Trade Commission on request of either branch of Congress. As I recall, we included such a provision in the law; but, in any event, I am unable to believe—and I make this statement after considering the question and after close contact with these great markets—that it is going to be necessary for the Federal Trade Commission to make any such investigation. I do not believe they would make it, for the reason that I do not think they would ever find it necessary to make it. The only contingency involving that necessity that could arise would be in case the Secretary of Agriculture were derelict in his duty.

Coming again to the question raised by the Senator from North Carolina as to whom this legislation was intended to benefit, whether the packers or the people of the country, I wish to say positively this law is to prove beneficial to both the packers and the general public. The law should have been passed in that spirit, because, even though there have been abuses in the stockyards—and no one denies that there have been abuses, because the record can not be questioned—the law was framed to deal with the future and not with the past, and as it proves corrective in this way it can not fail to have a salutary effect upon the industry, which, as I have stated, is one of the most vital in all the Nation. We might very well decline to allow this contention and strife to continue longer in these markets, for such a condition is entirely unnecessary and even un-American.

I do not believe that we could have done very much better than to enact the law which is now on the statute books. I do not believe it is going to prove harmful; but I think it is going to correct abuses and eventually to bring this industry to the same orderly processes that prevail in every other industry in the country. In spite of the fact that there has not been time to fully determine the merits of the law, as a result of its enactment we have already taken a number of really progressive steps.

It is also true that the Secretary of Agriculture has hardly completed his organization; in so far as he has advanced he has proceeded with constructive vision. His every act has been sanctioned by good judgment and common sense, suggesting that he is fully conscious of the great responsibility resting upon him of initiating this administrative law without any unnecessary friction or disturbance to a very complicated business. I wish to protest against any thought or any idea that the law was intended to be a pestering, nagging enactment.

Any legislation to be effective in this country or anywhere else must take into account in its operation and administration the business integrity of the country.

I again ask especial attention of Senators to the statement I am about to make. At the present time, every phase of the live-stock industry is passing through the most severe crisis in all its history. At the close of the World War the decline in live stock on the hoof was equal to, and in some cases exceeded, 50 and 60 per cent, while it has been found impossible to reduce fixed charges involved in the cost of production in anything like such proportion. The result has been almost universally disastrous to the vast army of men engaged in the production of the meat-food products of the Nation. During the intervening time the packing houses, instead of making enormous profits, have undoubtedly sustained ruinous losses.

Under such circumstances the outlook for the industry to-day is anything else but encouraging, and to understand this precarious condition is, in my judgment, to deplore any precipitate action or any unwarranted criticism of this industry on the part of Congress.

The discussion here is perhaps traceable in part to the reports of the proposed merger between two of the five great packing houses. I have been hopeful these companies would not attempt the merger, because I believe, without passing upon the legal phases of the question, that the effect of the merger will be to limit competition, and whether or not it were intended for that purpose, to that extent be harmful to the producers of the country. It seems most unfortunate at this time that the question of a merger should have been raised, because both the producers of the country and the packers themselves are staggering under adverse conditions. They are trying to work out a plan of procedure under this new law, and since we are informed by the Secretary of Agriculture that the packers are cooperating whole-heartedly in the administration of the law, I ask that they be accorded the same spirit of fair play, of cooperation and of helpfulness, that should be accorded every other industry in a crisis.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to know if there is an amendment pending to strike out the sum of money necessary to administer the law that has been under discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I just want to clear the situation and the decks here. Almost every speaker on both sides of this Chamber has referred to my "amendment." I have no amendment pending. I have offered no amendment. I have just had my say about matters that transpired, and which I prophesied two years ago would transpire. I am not going to offer any amendment. I want to see this bill passed; but I wanted to place before the Senate the facts exactly as they have happened since the bill was passed, and which I predicted would happen. I have no amendment pending.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I am constrained to say that the facts stated by the Senator from Maine as happening have happened not on account of this act but in spite of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming, whose knowledge upon this subject is very great—indeed, profound—what advantages he claims for the legislation. I should like to know what necessity there is for the enlarged appropriation.

An examination, very briefly made, of the testimony of Mr. Morrill, Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture and in charge of the packers and stockyards administration, seems to indicate that the organization has been perfected to such a degree that there is no necessity for further increasing it. If the organization ab initio could be effectuated and put into successful operation under the appropriation heretofore made, I should like to inquire of the Senator what is the necessity for increasing the appropriation? I am very much interested to know what benefits have been derived. I ask for information, because persons in my State have charged that no benefits have been derived. Others insist that there have been benefits growing from this legislation. For myself, I profess to have no knowledge.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, answering that question, I want to say in advance that there are adverse currents in business, cross currents, as everyone who has had to do with it knows, that could be charged to this or any other law affecting the general situation. It is an easy thing for a man whose individual interests have failed to return him satisfactory profits to charge his failure to this law, without even a remote connection between the two. Such a charge, I am sure, would not be taken seriously by the Senator from Utah. In connection with the increased appropriation I have first this in mind, that it was impossible for the organization of the machinery necessary to supervise these markets to have been perfected with last year's appropriation. I have no detailed information on the question of the way in which the money has been expended, but I should like to give the Senate of the United States a glimpse of the magnitude of this industry by stating that the daily transfers of live stock in the yards of Chicago amount to $4,000,000. That yard alone covers a section of land. There are, as I understand, about 65 of these great markets, and very recently the receipts in one day in 3 of those markets out of 65 great markets involved 90,000 cattle.

The Senator asks how this provision of $410,000 could be beneficial. I say that if you could remove the spirit of distrust and contention and strife from even one of these great yards and substitute therefor such publicity as would bring good understanding throughout the year, you would easily bring to the consumers of food products of this country benefits, in the form of lower costs, that would amount, in the aggregate, to many times the amount involved in this appropriation; and when you think of the great national movement of this product it is a bagatelle, it is infinitesimal, compared to the benefit that would come with better understanding of the movement of the product.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether anything else is done by the Agricultural Department than to place men in the stockyards to exercise the supervisory care which, as I understand the Senator, the law implies shall be exercised? Do they attempt to fix prices? Do they attempt to ascertain the profits made?

I find here some testimony which seems to indicate that auditors were required, and, because of the great demand for competent auditors, that they had not been able to make the investigations which they contemplated. I did not understand that the act required that they should go into the books of all the packers of the United States and determine their receipts and their expenditures, their losses and their profits, and make a complete audit of all of the activities of the corporations. Does the Senator understand that that is one of the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture under the legislation which we have heretofore passed?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I have already stated that my impression of the law is not that of constant meddling and interfering with the business of the packers, or even any other market agency. I have no thought that there would be a plan to insist upon knowledge of every detailed act on the part of these people; and, as stated awhile ago, I can not conceive of any administration that would not credit at least a certain amount to the business integrity of the men engaged in the industry. I can not, on the other hand, believe it possible for the law to be administered without knowing something at certain times, at least, of the accounting of all of the different agencies, and the way they transacted their business.

In regard to whether or not there are any other activities, we have in connection with the act, I believe, the Bureau of Markets, which furnishes an invaluable service in sending out facts and figures and market quotations to the live-stock growers of the country all over. I undertake to say here that if there were no other agency in connection with the yards but that information it would still be worth the cost involved in this appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, simply in order to provide for the proper center head: On page 80, between lines 8 and 9, insert as a center head the following words:

International Farm Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. What page is that?

Mr. McNARY. Page 80.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 80, between lines 8 and 9, insert as a subhead, in small capitals, "International Farm Congress."

HERMAN DAVIS.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to interrupt the proceedings of the Senate for a few minutes to call attention to a fact, and I trust it will be helpful.

When the war came and the young men of this country were going into the Army, there lived in my State a young man by the name of Herman Davis. He had not reached the fourth grade in the public schools when the needs of his family compelled him to leave school and become the supporter of a dependent mother. Later he married. The call to arms came, and he went, leaving his dependent family. He was a man without means. He went to France.

After the war a patriotic society of this country asked the Secretary of War to ascertain, through General Pershing, the names of the hundred men whom he should select as those who most distinguished themselves during the war. In response to the request, General Pershing convoked the board of officers which had been created for the purpose of determining who were entitled to be decorated with the distinguished service cross. The result of their investigation was that among the five named first was Herman Davis.

I knew him quite well. In fact, at the time the war came I think he was farming with me. The act for which General Pershing designated him as among the first who were entitled to be commended for their courage and single-handed deeds of heroism is as follows:

While acting as company runner in front of Meuville Farm, November 10, 1918, Private Davis single-handed attacked a German machine-gun nest which was harassing the left flank of his company and preventing its advance. By a skillful and fearless approach to the position he took the crew by surprise, killed four of them, and captured the gun. The notable act of courage and coolness enabled his company to continue their advance at a critical period of the fighting.

That is the record furnished by General Pershing as to this particular act of this private soldier, who was a member of the One hundred and thirteenth Infantry.

During the war Davis received 11 decorations, some from his own country, some from France, and others at the hands of the Italian Government. On the 5th day of this month Herman Davis died a patient in a hospital at Memphis, Tenn., where his friends had sent him for treatment. He died in destitute circumstances. The local chapter of the Red Cross had to furnish means to send his wife and children to the hospital, in order to be near him when he died.

Herman Davis was wounded during the war. He filed his claim for compensation, and the bureau shunted him back and forward from one division to another, until, finally, he died a patient in a hospital in a foreign State, the bill for his care being paid by his friends and associates. The Government for which he fought bore no part of the expense of his illness and no part of the expense of his burial, I am informed.

The case came to my office recently by request of some of his friends, and I had taken it up with the department. Before I shall relate further his brief story I wish to read what appeared in the Arkansas Gazette under a Memphis headline. It is as follows:

OFT-DECORATED VETERAN DIES FROM WAR WOUNDS—HERMAN DAVIS, OF MARKED TREE, WEARER OF 11 CROSSES, CITATIONS, AND MEDALS EXPRESSIVE OF MILITARY VALOR, EXPIRES AT A UNITED STATES HOSPITAL.

(Special to the Gazette.)

MEMPHIS, TENN., January 5.—After serving his country with such distinction as to win a citation for rare and conspicuous bravery at the hands of Gen. John J. Pershing, Herman Davis, of Marked Tree, Ark., World War veteran, died at United States Hospital No. 88 here at 4.15 this morning.

Wearer of 11 crosses, citations, and medals expressive of military valor, Davis was admitted to the veterans' hospital December 9. Regulations of the Veterans' Bureau service prohibit the statement of the cause of death, but relatives declared he was wounded in action, and it is believed death followed a long period of illness brought about by battle injuries.

Mrs. Ida Davis, his wife, survives, and is in Memphis to take charge of the body. Funeral arrangements have not been made.

The hero was a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Davis, of Marked Tree. His father is dead.

Davis served overseas as a private, first class, in Company I, One hundred and thirteenth Infantry, which was a part of the Twenty-ninth Division. His service early attracted the attention of officers. It is known that he was recommended for the distinguished service cross, America's highest honorary decoration for its fighting sons, but an incomplete inspection of his record to-day did not disclose whether he had received it. He wore medals of distinction from practically all the allied nations with which America fought in the World War, including the French citation medaille militaire, a much coveted and seldom bestowed honor. Davis was sent to the local veterans' hospital by the Red Cross unit at Marked Tree.

After his death the Veterans' Bureau seems to have found out that he had a claim pending, and last night I received this telegram:

Complete application for compensation of Herman Davis, deceased, going forward immediately to central office, Washington, where all death claims are handled.

The war ended in 1918, and according to General Pershing's designation of those who were most entitled to be regarded as heroes Herman Davis's name appears fifth on a list of a hundred. He got no recognition by reason of any outside influence. As I said, he was compelled to quit school when just a child and had scarcely enough education to enable him to read. He only knew that he owed his service to his country, and he offered his life freely, received 11 decorations, and died a pauper, and the bureau created by the Congress to look after the wants of wounded veterans now says it is forwarding his complete record here to Washington, since he is dead.

I had in mind merely to call attention to what seemed to be the policy of the administration, without criticism of the individual, by citing another act which took place on the very day this man died. I shall omit the name of the officer, because he is not responsible, but the day that Herman Davis died a pauper the War Department was busy here in Washington bestowing a distinguished service medal upon an officer who had commanded a rest area during the war, who had never heard a hostile shot fired, had never seen an enemy with a weapon in his hand. He was being decorated because he so "intelligently, patriotically, and courageously" commanded a post some 300 miles from the firing line. In fact, you can not take up a paper now without reading of some officer who served the country patriotically and courageously here in Washington in a swivel chair being decorated for his heroic devotion to duty.

Recently I noticed the War Department had decorated a member of a draft board because he put everybody into the Army but himself, and I call attention to this fact merely to contrast it with the treatment of the men who bore the brunt of battle at the front and who are permitted to die paupers, with their wrongs unredressed.

Even now a bill is pending to raise other officers to high rank who saw no actual field service, so much greater seems it to the department to decorate noncombatant officers than reward men who sacrificed their future, their health, and family life in a patriotic devotion to country.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in this morning's Washington Post, in an article referring to the work of the American Debt Commission, I read the following:

Great Britain's financial mission laid its cards on the table yesterday before the American Debt Commission at an executive session at the Treasury. Details were withheld.

Mr. President, I merely want to say at this time about this matter that I regret exceedingly that these meetings between the American debt commissioners and the British commissioners are being held behind closed doors and in secrecy. I regret very much that the two bodies are unwilling to take the American people into their confidence. There should be no such secrecy, and I want to protest vigorously against this secrecy. These negotiations should be open and above board. The people should know at least the substance of what is going on at all times during the negotiations.

It will be recalled that Great Britain borrowed this money under an act of the Congress which specifically stated the terms on which it was loaned to the British, and to the other governments of Europe to whom we loaned the money. This was openly done. There was no secrecy about the passage of that law. It was passed in the open day. In addition to that the American Congress has passed another law openly and above board, stating upon what terms the debt could now be settled, and those terms permit some departure from the original terms on which the debt was contracted.

I think it may be well said at this time that there will be nothing gained, either by our British friends or by our own Debt Commission through keeping anything secret about the negotiations or attempting to do so. It is said that the administration will ask that the law be amended so as to give wider powers to the commission. I doubt very much whether the Congress will amend that law so as to give wider powers to this commission until we know what proposition is made by the British in connection therewith. I think it can be safely said that no such amendment will be passed at this session. The American people are entitled to know all proposals made. They are entitled to have the proposition put before them.

I am not here to criticize our British friends. Indeed, I want to commend them for having already merited the honor of being the only ones of those who have borrowed from us who have actually paid us any interest. I commend them most highly for the payments of interest they have already made, though relatively they are small. They are to be commended in the highest terms, as I see it, for their action in that regard. But they may as well understand, and I believe we all may as well understand, that before any change in the debt commission law is made by the Congress the American people are going to know just how they propose to settle this indebtedness. I am quite confident that unless our commission and the British commission take the people into their confidence and publish their proposal so that we all may know it, there will be no change in the law at this session, and I doubt if there will be any change in the law at the next session in this regard.

If they have some proposition other than that which our commissioners have been given authority to settle upon, let them submit the proposition, and let the Congress pass on it. If it is a reasonable proposition, I have no doubt the Congress would pass on it, but I am sure that Congress will never change that law until it knows in words and figures the proposal of the British or other government making such proposition.

I remember, when the Versailles treaty was being considered, that our Republican friends thought it was awful that the negotiators of the treaty stayed behind closed doors from time to time and did not take the public into their confidence. I can hear Republican orators criticizing and abusing the American negotiators because they did not take the public into their confidence. Perhaps it would have been much better——

Mr. HEFLIN. And Republicans were on that commission, too.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course; and it would have been very much better, perhaps, if our negotiators had taken the public into their confidence all the way through. So it is now, in a much more marked degree, with our Debt Commission, because these debts concern every man, woman, and child in America. They concern everyone and, therefore, it is absolutely essential that all proposals of settlement be disclosed to the American public, and speedily.

While I would not for a moment think of advising our English friends, it does seem to me it would be the part of wisdom for them, if they have any proposal different from that which the American Congress has authorized, to get it before the American public as soon as possible and let the American public be considering such a proposal. I believe that the meetings of the two commissions, some of them at least, should be held in public. I do not mean to say that all the negotiations should be held in public, but the commission should daily give out any proposals that are made. They should take the American people into their confidence, and that is especially so because our commission, as is known, is a partisan commission entirely. I say that our Republican friends owe it to us and owe it to the country, inasmuch as they have complete control of the commission, with no Democrat on the commission, to give to the public full knowledge of what is being done from day to day and especially full knowledge as to any kind of proposal that is made for the settlement of the debts in whole or in part. I want to say in all frankness, speaking only as one Member of the Senate, that I do not believe this body will pass any law giving additional powers to the commission until we know just what is proposed by our friends on the other side.

I want to digress here long enough to say that I am not in favor of the proposition offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] and favored by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] providing for the appointment of Democrats on the commission, solely because the time is past for that. If Democrats were to be appointed on the commission, as of course they should have been, it should have been done in the first instance.

At this late stage in the proceedings Democrats would do no good and could do no good. All matters will have been determined before Democrats could possibly get on the commission, even if the bill should now pass. What we need now is publicity, and I call upon the members of the American commission to take the American public into its confidence and tell us what kind of proposals are being made as and when they are made. This debt is of vital importance to the American public. Some $12,000,000,000 are involved, affecting the welfare not only of the people of this country but of all peoples, perhaps, and no negotiation should be made of which the American public are not immediately and at once apprised. There should be no secrecy.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to suggest the thought that perhaps it is not entirely seasonable or practicable to make public as they proceed all negotiations with reference to the question. I quite agree with the Senator that before anything is done definitely it must be submitted to Congress and it must be finally passed upon by Congress.

I call the Senator's attention to a brief editorial in to-day's New York World, and ask whether he does not think the view there expressed covers the ground. It reads as follows:

TO AMEND THE FUNDING ACT.

It is clear that Congress will not and ought not to surrender its right to say the last word on the question of the interallied debts. Congress is responsible for the revenues of the Government, and the terms of the debt settlement will affect both revenue and taxation.

It is no less clear that Congress can not as a body negotiate with the debtor nations. Negotiations must be carried on through a commission. But the commission can not negotiate if its hands are tied in advance, as they are tied by the present funding act.

Congress should give the commission perfect freedom to negotiate. The commission should be allowed to work out the best agreement with each nation which the circumstances will justify. This agreement should then come back to Congress for ratification. By this method Congress can discuss terms which the commission has found are practicable, instead of laying down terms in advance which everyone admits are impossible.

The fact that Congress must finally pass upon these matters is fundamental and very important; but whether the Senator thinks the negotiations themselves should be conducted in public as they proceed is quite another question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had that editorial before me and intended to read it. I call attention to the meat of the editorial, which is:

Congress should give the commission perfect freedom to negotiate.

Now, Mr. President, I do not indorse this view. The commission has perfect freedom to negotiate now. If it finds that the debt can not be settled with Great Britain under the terms of the act passed by the Congress, it has a perfect right to submit a counterproposal from Great Britain. But my point is that until the American public are apprised of what that counterproposal is the commission's power ought not to be extended, and I am quite sure it will not be extended. I want to show why it should not be. Under the present law the commission will have a perfect right, if it is unable to settle the debt under the terms of the act creating the commission, to report to the Congress that it can not do so and to make a report of whatever other offer has been made as a counterproposal, and then the Congress can deal with it. But I protest that we ought not to undertake, and I think I can safely say that the Congress will not undertake—certainly not at this session—to grant additional powers to the commission until we know what counterproposal has been made.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I would like to say that when the matter first came before the Committee on Finance it was proposed to invest the Secretary of the Treasury with plenary power to settle the foreign obligations due to the United States. That was seriously objected to, and it was then proposed that he be required to submit all settlements to the Congress for its approval. That proposition was voted down both in the committee and afterwards in the Senate, I think, when it was proposed on the floor. The proposition was made in the committee that we would impose certain limitations upon the power of the Secretary of the Treasury. That was objected to upon the ground that it might make it impossible for this Government to come to terms with its foreign debtors. But it was suggested that the imposition of the limitation would not at all prevent our Government, through the Secretary of the Treasury and the commission, coming to a tentative or provisional agreement. If they acted within the limitations which we proposed, then, of course, they could make the agreement themselves, but if they could not make it within the limitations, then they could go on and make the agreement provisionally and the matter would come before the Congress for its approval.

It was thoroughly understood at the time that the limitations would not prevent them from making a provisional agreement. They did not prevent it, but they have the effect of requiring the commission in that case to come to Congress for its consent and concurrence. I think there is no reason for any amendment of the law so as to broaden the powers of the commission, because, as in the case of the British indebtedness or in the case of every other foreign indebtedness, they can go on and come to an agreement, but after they have come to an agreement, if it is not within the powers conferred upon them, then they must submit it to Congress, and I think they ought to be required to submit it to Congress.

I think those bars ought not to be removed which now make it necessary, unless they come within the limitations conferred by the act, that they shall come to Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. All that the Senator has said is correct. We all recall the history of the enactment of that law, and of course we all know that the commission have authority, if they can not settle the debts within the purview of the act, to report their failure to do so, and what is proposed in lieu thereof. They need no further authority.

The reason why I rose at this time was because of the publication in the morning paper, the official organ of the administration, and because I saw a day or two ago where the President was substantially quoted as saying that a recommendation would be sent to the Congress to give the commission plenary power in the matter. I wanted to say publicly here on the floor of the Senate that I am quite sure that the Senate will not agree to any act increasing the power of the commission in regard to the settlement of these debts until the Senate knows in black and white, not by word of mouth, but in black and white, just what is proposed.

Mr. President, I wish to say again, as I have previously said, that I do not think we ought to be hard creditors at all. If the length of time for which these debts are to run is not satisfactory to our British friends, I see no reason in the world why we can not make it satisfactory to them if they make a reasonable proposal about the time. If the rate of interest is not entirely satisfactory, I, for one, would even be willing to yield something in regard to that, though I think they ought to make no question about the interest rate, because our people lent the money at a certain rate of interest, and they were assured that the governments of Europe would pay us a like rate when they came to return the money, and because we have lent it to them on terms the reasonableness of which no nation could possibly in equity complain. However, we ought to know on what basis we are acting, and we must have that knowledge before we amend the debt commission law. So I submit now that every parliamentary tactic will be resorted to in order to prevent such an amendment of the law as has been suggested until our Debt Commission and the foreign commissions which may come together to negotiate take us into their confidence and tell us exactly what is proposed to be done. I again protest against the secrecy of these negotiations.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I very much regret that the President of the United States and the Republican Congress have not already seen the propriety and the wisdom of putting Democrats on the Debt Funding Commission. The Finance Committee, I believe, has agreed to report favorably the bill of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], who, in season and out of season, has been, as I have been, in favor of having Democrats upon the Debt Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator from Alabama think, at this late day, after practically the negotiations, to say the least, are well under way, that it would be a useless and a vain thing to put any additional members on the commission? Would it not have the effect merely of putting Democrats on the Commission in order to confirm what may have already been done by our Republican friends who now constitute the commission?

Mr. HEFLIN. My good friend from Tennessee and I are usually in hearty accord, but I can not agree with him upon that matter. I think he is right in suggesting that we ought to have had representation on the commission from the outset before any negotiations were undertaken; I made that plain several days ago, as did also the Senator from Georgia. There are several nations in Europe to which we loaned money, and they owe us altogether a debt of $12,000,000,000, principal and interest. The British Commission, which is here now negotiating with our members of the Debt Commission, represents but one of the countries indebted to the United States. There are seven or eight billion dollars—I believe around $8,000,000,000—which are owing us by other nations besides the one whose commission is now here. Certainly it would be well to have some Democrats on the commission while we are considering the collection of $8,000,000,000.

I am satisfied that very important negotiations have already occurred between the Debt Commission and the envoys of Great Britain. I have some very deep convictions upon the subject. I think the American commissioners have probably intimated to the representatives of the foreign nations just what the attitude of the Republican administration is toward the collection of the whole debt, and I wanted some Democrats on the commission in order that the American people may know what are the plans and policies of the party in power. This is an American question, I repeat.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us assume that the bill of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] should pass and that Democrats should be put on the commission; they would be bound by the same rules of secrecy by which the present commission is bound, and I do not see how, unless they violated their word—and, of course, they would not do that—they could accomplish the object which the Senator from Alabama has in mind.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not see why a Democrat should be bound by Republican secrecy, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. If a certain kind of Democrat were appointed on the commission, they would be so bound.

Mr. HEFLIN. There might be something in that, if the administration should appoint some weak-kneed, half-hammered Democrats on the commission; but such Democrats would not be appointed if I could prevent it here in the Senate, and I reserve the right to oppose the confirmation of any Democrat, whether a member of the Senate or not. If I did not believe he would handle this matter in the manner which the American people desired it handled, I should oppose his confirmation. There are one or two Democrats here whose confirmation I would oppose. I will state that very frankly.

Mr. President, as I have heretofore stated, this matter is one which vitally affects the whole American people. We are now considering appropriation bills, and we are urged by the Budget Bureau to cut down appropriations because it is necessary that we shall save money. We are saving $1,000 here and $2,000 in another place, while negotiations are secretly proceeding to cancel the indebtedness of $12,000,000,000 due us from foreign nations. The American people are entitled to know what is going on behind the closed doors of the commission, and I for one am not going to remain silent in this Chamber and permit this foreign indebtedness of $12,000,000,000 which is owed to one hundred and odd million people to be handled by a partisan commission.

Negotiations in reference to the matter are going on every day. The Finance Committee of the Senate has gone far enough to report favorably the bill of my friend from Georgia.

I do not acquiesce in the present situation. I stand on the speech I made here on day before yesterday, that action ought to be had upon the bill at once; but I can not hurry the machinery of the Republican Party any more than can the Senator from Georgia. Some action will be taken on the bill a little later, but it ought to be taken now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator whether he really believes that the bill of the Senator from Georgia is going to be passed and that Democrats are going to be appointed on the Debt Commission? The Senator has been in public life a long time here in Washington—he being a young man, I will not say how many years—and he has been here long enough to know that that bill is not going to be passed during this Congress.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not so certain of that, because the Republican Party received a considerable jolt last November, and a good jolt sometimes wakes things up. I hope and believe that the party has been aroused. I am receiving letters from all over the country indorsing my position in the demand for Democratic representation upon the debt commission. I received one from a citizen of Maine stating that it was right; that the Democrats ought to be represented upon that commission; and that letter was from a Republican. The people of the country are waking up on this question, and no doubt they are writing to some of the Republican Senators and are asking them, or at least they ought to ask them, "How can you excuse yourselves in the position that denies to the minority party in Congress representation upon a debt commission that is negotiating the settlement of a debt of $12,000,000,000 which is due the American people?" There is not any excuse for it that is worth snapping one's fingers at; it is inexcusable and indefensible.

Now, this is why I wish Democrats on the debt commission: I want Democrats on the commission because I believe that if we get the right sort of Democrats on it they will reflect the wishes of the American people, both Democrats and Republicans. I know how the rank and file of the Republicans and the rank and file of the Democrats feel about the matter. They do not want those debts canceled, but they want them collected; they want this home-debt burden rolled off their backs; they want their tax burdens removed, and the payment of the foreign debt, which is due us, would be one way to bring about that result. Of course, the politicians, the leaders of the Republican Party, and the international bankers in Wall Street may get together and fix up a very nice arrangement under which the international bankers may promise to help elect a Republican President of the United States and a Republican Congress in 1924, if the hope may be held out that the negotiations will be extended a little further with the idea that something may be done toward cancellation.

God Almighty only knows what is going on behind the closed doors of the debt commission. I look on the proceedings with suspicion, because when any party, even my own party—I do not care who is doing it—shuts the door in the face of the other party, which is supposed to represent in part the American people, and not let them in to participate in negotiations of this character, I would say there is something wrong about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand the argument of the Senator from Alabama, if the financial commissioners of Great Britain have laid their cards on the table before our commissioners and told them just what they propose to do, the Senator from Alabama thinks we ought to have that information, that it ought to be made public, does he not?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think we ought to have the information. I agree with my friend from Tennessee on that point. If the envoys of Great Britain have laid down a proposition and the Democrats are not going to be represented on the commission until after some sort of an agreement is reached between this one-sided commission on the part of the United States and the envoys of Great Britain, I think it ought to be laid before Congress, because Congress is supposed to represent the American people.

I wanted Democrats on the commission in order that the Democrats might be present in the negotiations from the very beginning; so that if anyone proposed a plan—whether it was the plan of the representatives of Great Britain or of the American commission, composed solely of Republicans—the Democrats would be there to oppose it and to antagonize the position that they may have taken unless it were in keeping with the highest and best interests of our own people. That is the position I took in reference to that.

It sets a bad precedent, Mr. President, for any party to name a commission of partisans to handle a matter of this importance. In 1925, when the Democrats come into power and we get a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress, suppose negotiations were still pending and we should turn out all of the Republican members of the debt commission and appoint a Democratic commission; there is not one Republican who could open his mouth in opposition, though he might try to do so, for we would say, "You laid down the pattern to us; you set the precedent; you named five partisan commissioners; now we are in power and the Democrats are going to take up this matter and handle it from a partisan standpoint. The Republicans handled it from a partisan standpoint; why can we not likewise handle it from a partisan standpoint?"

This great debt, which is due to the whole American people, has been kicked about like a football of partisan politics. If there were three Democrats on the commission and five Republicans—eight in all—that would be all right. Let them go in and sit down and negotiate honestly and intelligently, with the facts before them. Then if a majority of the commission should recommend a certain course and the Democrats did not agree to it, let the Democrats come out in the open and say, "This proposition was offered by the Republicans; we hold that another method is the best way to settle it," and then publish both views and go to the country and let the country determine whose recommendation the people would accept. That is my reason for wanting Democrats upon the debt commission. Is there anything wrong or unfair about that?

I know, Mr. President, and other Senators know that early last fall there was strong sentiment in certain Republican circles around this Capital in favor of canceling this debt outright. It is known to myself and others here that certain big editors in the United States journeyed to London and Paris in 1922—that is not any secret—and the rumor was that they were discussing and devising ways and means to bring about propaganda in the United States to educate the people up to the point of forgiving or excusing these debts.

Mr. President, we ought to talk plainly about these things. Everybody knows that that is not being carried on for nothing. Everybody knows that if instrumentalities in the United States can so prey upon the sympathy of the people over here as to cause these debts to be excused, those very instrumentalities are going to take down millions and hundreds of millions in commissions for putting the thing over. I believe it just as firmly as I believe I am standing on this floor. I have not the slightest doubt of that—not the slightest. I do not propose that they shall put over anything like that on the tax-burdened masses of my country if I can help it. I do not propose that they shall pull off such a stunt as that upon the debt-burdened people of the United States.

Why, Mr. Otto Kahn, one of these international bankers, is urging us to cancel the debt. He is an international banker, and some of these same foreign countries owe his banking concern money, so Mr. FREAR, I believe, a Republican Member of the House from Wisconsin, has pointed out. They owe his international banking concern money, and Mr. Kahn wants to collect it, and he wants the United States Government to rise up and excuse what those people owe to us, so that he can stand up and say, "Now that is out of the way, pay me."

I submit that Mr. Kahn and other international bankers could set the United States a good example if they would show their generosity by going to these stricken nations and saying, "Here is our debt; we excuse it; you owe us nothing," and then turn around and say to us, "Go thou and do likewise." But instead of that they are saying: "You ought to excuse it." And we say: "Well, what is your motive in this? What is that you have in your hand?" He puts it behind it. We say: "Let us see the written document you have. Oh, yes; that is evidence of indebtedness from those people over there to you. No wonder you are so generous and sympathetic. You want to get these debts excused so that you can get what they owe you."

Mr. President, I am representing as best I can in part the people of my State, and, I think, the whole United States. I am trying to do that. I am not representing the international bankers in this matter, and I do not propose for any propaganda by them or certain editors of newspapers to work upon the American people and carry on something through secrecy, behind closed doors, through a partisan Republican commission, without the American people knowing about it.

I do not care to take up any more of the time of the Senate. I will say this in conclusion:

It is right, it is fair, it is just, it is simply plain honesty that the Democratc Party should have representation upon this debt commission. Of course I am in the hands of the majority. We have to await your pleasure. These negotiations are going on, and, as the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out, are being carried on in executive session. What is it about the debt due us that has to be discussed behind closed doors? What proposition is it that somebody has to make that must be done in secrecy, in executive session? When this money was obtained from us there was nothing secret about it. The Congress authorized the loan. The money was obtained and used by those people. Here we are proposing that they pay us only 4½ per cent, and farmers in the United States who are producing that which feeds and clothes the world are paying 5½ and 6 per cent, and nearly all of them are heavily mortgaged at this very hour.

Mr. President, just another word.

This matter, I repeat, is probably the most vital material question that will come before the American people in a long time. The arrangement looking toward the collection of $12,000,000,000 is no small matter. Here is an effort to have representation from both parties. That is fair. There is a custom in the Congress, as old as the Government, that when a thing of this sort comes up both parties are to be represented. We recognize that principle in the appointment of standing committees in both Houses. Every standing committee has Democrats on it and Republicans on it. The majority of the committee comes from the party that is in the majority and the minority from the minority party. I want to ask, Why was it that an exception was made in this case, where $12,000,000,000 was involved? Why was it that the Democrats were ignored and mistreated in this matter? Why was it that not a single Democrat was put on that commission? What was back of it all that surrounded it with such strange and mysterious doings that no Democrat should be permitted to appear on it and participate in the negotiations?

When this bill of my friend from Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, was being considered yesterday, I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury was quick to write a letter to the Finance Committee opposing the putting of Democrats upon the debt commission. Think of that, if you please! What prompts him to take such a step as that? Why should he, a high officer in the President's Cabinet, a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, write a letter down here and protest against putting Democrats on a commission of which he, a Republican, is a member, and where negotiations are now going on? That is something for the American people to think about.

If we had a Democratic President, if we had a Democratic Congress, and a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury should write a letter protesting against putting Republicans on that commission, the howl that would go up from the other side would ring around the Nation; but I have not heard any of them chirp about this. Mr. Mellon can write a letter and urge that they do not put any Democrats on it, but my friends on the other side are as silent as the tomb. But, Mr. President, that bill is on the way to the calendar. It probably will get there some time after the negotiations with Great Britain have been finished.

I wanted representatives on it while they were discussing this thing. I think I have a right to demand that. I am part of the United States. I represent part of a State of the Union, and, as I said before, I am trying to do what I can for the good of all the people of the Union; and I think we ought to have representation on the commission while they are considering the means of settling this debt. I think it is just a matter of right that we have it.

I simply rose to say that I protest against the delay in reporting the bill, and I insist upon action. I do not agree that anything would be hurt by reporting it out, because there ought not to be any discussion had about that debt that the whole people can not know. Why should there be?

If they tell us that they are not ready to pay this money now, or that they would rather have a lower rate of interest, or that they must have it, let them submit it to the whole American people, and let us decide for ourselves whether we will agree to it or not. I do not want any party's commission—a one-sided commission—sitting in and whispering one way and saying: "That is our position, but we do not know whether the Congress will ratify this or not; but if we could elect another President and get another Congress, not this one that is coming in—that is too close to be comfortable—why, we do not know what might be done in 1925 or 1926."

Mr. President, $12,000,000,000 is a heap of money, and the Bible says that the love of money is the root of all evil. A big commission would be paid for debt cancellation.

Mr. President, I repeat, I do not care whose party it is; I would favor having representation from both parties. That is a matter of right. If the Democratic Party were in power and the President should consult me about appointing five commissioners and say that he had in mind appointing five Democrats, I would say, "Mr. President, I would not do that. I would name three Democrats and two Republicans. I think it is a matter of right. This is an American question, and both parties ought to be represented on it"; and I would favor that course.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8 and 9 to the said bill and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8 and 9 to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and concurring therein; and receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and concurring therein with an amendment as follows: In the last line of said amendment, after the name "Cuba" to insert: ": And provided further, That the aggregate of all pay from all sources from the Government of the United States to any person appointed to the foregoing office under the permissive authority contained in the first and second provisos of this paragraph shall not exceed the annual rate of $17,500."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the effect of the last amendment?

Mr. WARREN. Amendment numbered 7 was a proposition in the bill that provided, if an embassy should be ordered for Cuba, the inhibition in the law of some years ago—some time during the eighties—and one of very late years, should not prevent a retired Army officer from having the office, and that his pay should have an addition sufficient to make it the same as a private citizen would have if appointed to that position. If the Senator would like a little more explanation, I will state that this legislation would allow Major General Crowder, who may be appointed to a place there, to draw the difference between the retired pay of a major general, as he retires next month, and that of an ambassador.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, on page 80, after line 8, to insert a subhead, "International farm congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	McKinley	Shortridge
Bayard	Heflin	McNary	Simmons
Borah	Johnson	Moses	Smith
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	New	Townsend
Cameron	Kellogg	Norbeck	Underwood
Capper	Kendrick	Oddie	Wadsworth
Colt	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Ladd	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Watson
George	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Harris	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I desire to offer the following amendment: Under the head of "Prevention of spread of European corn borer," on page 52, line 8, I move to strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$250,000," and, in line 9, to strike out "$75,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$125,000," so as to read:

PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF EUROPEAN CORN BORER.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the spread of the European corn borer, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect throughout the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, including employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $250,000: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture $125,000 of this amount shall be available for expenditure only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations, for the accomplishment of such purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the amendments will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Oregon what investigation the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has made in regard to this matter?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had before it to-day the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the able junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. It also had the advice of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. Those three Senators urged upon the committee the necessity of increasing the appropriation in order to control, if not eradicate, the spread of the corn borer. In the opinion of the committee, that insect is making its way into territory not now infested. It is the object to keep it localized in one or two of the New England States and to prevent its spread far into the northeastern part of the country, into the central corn belt, and into the South.

The committee, after some discussion and after the statements made by those Senators, thought that an increase in the appropriation at this time would be of great advantage and would prevent the loss of a tremendous amount of property in future years. No other investigation was made and no other statements were brought to the attention of the committee save those I have mentioned. It is proposed to increase the appropriation by $50,000, but the increase is not to apply to money that can be expended generally, but, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is to be expended in cooperation with the States upon the basis of equality. The appropriation in the proviso was raised from $75,000 to $125,000, but if the money is to be expended, it can be expended only when the States wherein the infestation occurs shall put up an equal amount. The vote upon the increase in the committee was unanimous, the committee reported the amendment, and I am offering it now from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be not referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in accordance with the rule, but that it be considered without the reference provided by the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for immediate consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I certainly will not object, and I have no objection to having the amendment considered, but because it is being done by unanimous consent I do not wish to have it understood that it forecloses the parliamentary point which might be raised in reference to the matter, namely, that the Senate would have to send it to the Appropriations Committee. I have no objection to its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had already referred it to the Committee on Appropriations. There being no objection to its immediate consideration, the question is on the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that the amendment had been reported back from the committee. Was it not?

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it is a question as to whether it shall be considered in the Senate now?

Mr. McNARY. I am offering it at this time for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the Vice President to refer it to the committee. I think the Vice President misunderstood the request. The request is for immediate consideration, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the request, and the request has been granted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Are we to understand that when one of these amendments is suggested or moved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, it then will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations? I gathered from what the Chair said that he would rule that it would go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment, to strike out "$200,000" in line 8, page 52, and to insert in lieu thereof "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the second amendment, to strike out "$75,000" in line 9, page 52, and to insert in lieu thereof "$125,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I propose another amendment. On page 30, line 7, I move to strike out "$94,115" and to insert in lieu thereof "$104,115," so as to read:

For sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, $104,115.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, the Budget recommended $94,115 and the committee proposes to raise it $10,000 above the Budget figure. What reason is there for it?

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator had been in attendance yesterday he would have heard it very ably and fully discussed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was yesterday in attendance on the Appropriations Committee and could not be here.

Mr. McNARY. There is an insect called the mosaic parasite, which attacks the roots of the sugar cane, and this is to provide means to control and eradicate it and to experiment with some destructive force. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and it is an increase of $10,000 over the estimate of the Budget.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I move, on page 53, line 2, to strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000," so as to read:

CONTROL AND PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF THE MEXICAN BEAN BEETLE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the recent introduction and rapid multiplication of the Mexican bean beetle in the State of Alabama and other States, and to provide means for the study, experimentation in eradication, and for the control and prevention of the spread of this insect in that State and to other States, in cooperation with the State of Alabama and other States concerned and with individuals affected, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $30,000.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Oregon again as to what evidence the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had before it, and what investigation was made as to the necessity for these increases?

Mr. McNARY. In reply to the Senator, I will say that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] appeared before the committee this morning and stated that there is infestation by the bean beetle in New Mexico, and that the Department of Agriculture would like to have $10,000, but would absolutely need $5,000 in order to do any work in the way of its control.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the idea then that under the new practice any Senator who desires an increase in an appropriation need only go before the Committee on Agriculture to get it?

Mr. McNARY. I do not know what the future has in store. I am sure the Committee on Agriculture, after very thoughtful consideration of this and other subjects, decided to report the increase.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the Senator, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he is a member and in charge of the bill now before the Senate, be willing to grant increases without calling representatives of the Department of Agriculture and ascertaining their views as to the necessity for the increases?

Mr. McNARY. In reply I will say that the Senator in charge of the bill has some knowledge of the particular subject through the hearings had last year and from discussion with two members of the Department of Agriculture this year. I am not always influenced by statements made by Senators or by the department; but as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and of the Committee on Appropriations, when I feel that an increase should be made, I am willing to vote for it.

Furthermore, at this time I may propose amendments which I voted against in the committee, and I shall propose one or two that I voted against, but I am acting now in the capacity of acting chairman of that committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator inform us what estimate the Department of Agriculture made in the matter and what estimate was given by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. McNARY. Two years ago $70,000 was allowed for the work. Last year this item in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill was cut to $25,000 at the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture. The same amount was carried by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget in his estimate and report to the President, reported by the House committee, and adopted by the House. This increase is in addition to the Budget, in addition to the department estimate, and in addition to the sum allowed by the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Five thousand dollars additional?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, I understand, the Secretary of Agriculture does not ask for more than $25,000?

Mr. McNARY. That is true, as stated in his estimates, but when his attention was called to the ravages of the beetle in New Mexico, he said he needs all that money in an effort to control the diseases caused by insects in the South, and that he needs $5,000 or $10,000 for this particular purpose. He said that he could use $10,000, but that he needs $5,000 to do any work in the intermountain States, namely, the State of New Mexico and others.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not object, because I do not want to delay the bill; but there seems to be some misunderstanding as to what the rule implies with respect to the reference of such amendments to the Committee on Appropriations, which may give rise to considerable debate and points of order. However, I do not desire to delay the bill, but I hope that the conferees will see the light of economy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I propose the following amendment: On page 71, line 19, I move to strike out "$450,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000." That is for the purpose of acquiring additional land on the headwaters of navigable streams. Anticipating the question, certain Senators appeared before the committee and urged it. Personally I opposed it, but I was outvoted, and I am presenting it now in my capacity as acting chairman of the committee. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Before the request is put, may I ask the Senator what increase is involved?

Mr. McNARY. From $450,000 to $1,000,000, which would be an increase of $550,000, making a total of $1,000,000 to be used in the purchase of land.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I did not hear the discussions before the committee——

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I am asking for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not willing to give that consent until I hear some reasons advanced for increasing the appropriation $550,000. Can the Senator state what data was given to the committee for this increase?

Mr. McNARY. Very little data was given to the committee. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] spoke upon the subject, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] spoke upon the subject before the Joint Committee on Agriculture and Appropriations. Last year $400,000 was allowed for the purpose, and the year before $1,000,000, and that sum was carried for three years.

A considerable part of the land was acquired during preceding years in the Allegheny Mountains in the region of the city of Pittsburgh at an average cost of $3.31 an acre. At this time it is deemed desirable to acquire additional land to preserve the watersheds and navigable streams in certain New England States and in North Carolina. The commission reported to the Budget an estimate for $2,000,000 for the purpose. The Budget recommended $450,000. That was the sum contained in the bill as it passed the House. The committee, after briefly considering it this morning, now offers an amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] to increase the amount from $450,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator state that the Committee on Appropriations did consider the matter very fully and refused the increase?

Mr. McNARY. That is true. I thank the Senator. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] appeared before the committee. It was thought that $450,000 would be sufficient. I am proposing the amendment in my capacity as acting chairman of the committee. I voted against it in the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would hesitate very seriously to oppose any item which might have to do with the eradication of pests that seem to menace the agricultural regions or interests of the country, but this money is proposed to be used in the nature of a capital investment. There is no great necessity for it being done immediately. I object to the consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask if that will throw the whole bill back to the Committee on Appropriations?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. It simply refers the amendment to that committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I inquire for my own information if the amendment was reported from the Committee on Agriculture or from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McNARY. It was reported from the Committee on Agriculture to-day.

From the Committee on Agriculture I propose another amendment. On page 50, line 12, I move to strike out the figures "$123,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$173,000," being an increase of $50,000. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before we grant that consent, will the Senator state why this increase is asked? As I understand it, this is the Budget figure and has been recommended by the Committee on Agriculture or by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. As I have tried to make clear, these amendments are all from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The suggestion was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not know the reasons for the increase.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offered the amendment in the Committee on Agriculture this morning to increase the figure because of the inadequate amount carried in the bill to fight what is known as the sweet-potato weevil. The value of the sweet-potato crop in five States along the Gulf coast this year is over $135,000,000. This pest has come into that section. We have eradicated it in two of the States, but not in the others. We did get it out of Mississippi, but it is coming back because of the insufficient amount of money appropriated to adequately eradicate it. The increased sum is most necessary. I had a talk to-day with a representative of the Department of Agriculture, and he said that the amount can be expended well and would help to render a great service, and that they need the money.

This item is like many other items in the bill. The Department of Agriculture did not estimate for the larger amount for the reason that they were trying to keep appropriations confined within a certain scope, realizing that the Budget would cut down and decrease the amounts in certain instances anyway. I might call the attention of the Senate to the fact that when the Bureau of the Budget asked the departments originally to prepare preliminary estimates the Agricultural Department prepared the estimate, and after it had gone to the Bureau of the Budget and been there two or three days it was sent back to the Department of Agriculture, and they were told to cut it down $2,000,000 in the general items. Then they prepared another estimate and submitted it to the Bureau of the Budget, and some one there, who perhaps knew nothing about agriculture, cut it a further $2,000,000, and so the amount carried in the bill is some $4,000,000 less than the department desired and estimated for. All of the estimates upon the part of the Department of Agriculture are less, in most cases, than were really desired.

This is a very necessary appropriation, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the Committee on Agriculture secured any information from the Department of Agriculture as to the necessity of this increase?

Mr. McNARY. None whatsoever.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall have to object to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON. Did I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to object to the item?

Mr. LENROOT. I did, on the statement of the Senator from Oregon—the Senator in charge of the bill—that the Committee on Agriculture made no attempt to secure any information from the Department of Agriculture as to the necessity for the increase.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, whether he will not insist that the Committee on Appropriations shall have some representative of the Department of Agriculture come before them in the morning, or to-morrow before consideration of the bill shall have been concluded, so we can get an expression from them on the item and on any other items that may be sent back to that committee because of objection made on the floor?

Mr. LENROOT. I shall not insist upon it, because this is the amount requested by the Secretary of Agriculture and recommended by the Budget, and is the amount for which the Budget estimated. I make no objection whatever to a hearing by the committee, but I do insist that these increases ought not to be made over and above the Budget estimate and the department estimate without getting some information from the department itself as to the necessity for the increase.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the position in which the Senate finds itself is that the all-powerful Budget is usurping all the powers of the Congress to deal with these questions that arise.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HARRISON. In just a moment. In other words, a Senator is forestalled and estopped from presenting an amendment here, no matter how just it may be, how necessary to the welfare of his constituents, if some party up in the Budget Bureau, who perhaps knows nothing about agriculture, may not have allowed the estimate or may have cut the estimate as recommended by the Department of Agriculture.

I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Budget Bureau has nothing to do with this particular matter. I asked particularly whether the department had made the request for a greater sum and found it had not. That being so, if the Budget Bureau had never been created we should have had exactly the same situation, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi would not have been in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to say that under the law creating the Budget Bureau the Agricultural Department is denied the right to make any statement about the matter unless it is called upon to do so by the committee; and I have doubt whether they have a right to ask for a larger appropriation than that which the Budget Bureau has allowed even if they are invited to appear; but they are certainly prohibited from themselves coming before the committee and making a statement in reference to an increased appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; but I was referring to the recommendation of the department to the Budget Bureau; and the Budget Bureau did not cut down this item at all. So under the old law, when the department's estimate would have come directly to Congress, the amendment would have been subject to the same point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. No. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, who is on the Appropriations Committee which framed this bill, did the committee inquire of the representative of the Agricultural Department with respect to the preliminary or original estimate that was made by the Agricultural Department to the Budget Bureau?

Mr. LENROOT. We had it before us.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee had before it the original preliminary estimate which was made?

Mr. LENROOT. I think in all cases we had such estimate before us; it was either directly before the committee or in the House hearings. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] will correct me if I am mistaken as to that.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that in the other House the Committee on Appropriations conducted hearings on the Agricultural appropriation bill before the bill was even framed or introduced or the Budget Bureau had submitted its estimate?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know that they did before the Budget submitted its estimate; but, of course, they did before the bill was introduced.

Mr. HARRISON. But is it not a fact that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, of which the Senator from Wisconsin is a very influential member, conducted hearings on the bill before the bill had ever reached the Senate and while it was still pending in the other House?

Mr. LENROOT. I think we commenced our hearings on the same day that the bill passed the other House—that is my recollection—and we called upon officers of the Department of Agriculture for information.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we are in the attitude here that unless the Budget Bureau puts its approval upon an estimate we can not increase it in the slightest, no matter how great may be the reason for doing so. Glancing through the pending bill, I find that for the very important work of cooperative agricultural extension, home demonstration work, and so on, the Bureau of the Budget, notwithstanding Congress in the last few years has appropriated as much in some instances as four and a half million dollars in a year, has cut the estimate from $1,300,000 to $1,250,000. I further find that for the eradication of the cattle tick the estimate of the Department of Agriculture to this powerful Budget Bureau was $660,000. The Department of Agriculture was in a position to know, or it had reason to believe that it knew, that they needed $660,000 for that purpose, but the Budget Bureau reduced the amount to $500,000. On page 21 of the bill it will be found that for experiments in the dairy industry—a most essential and valuable work—the Agricultural Department estimated for $375,000; but the Budget Bureau, through some person who knows nothing of agriculture, reduced it to $284,320.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield at that point?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The copy of the bill before me shows that the appropriation is $375,000, as found on page 21 of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Budget Bureau only desired an appropriation of $284,000 to be made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator from Mississippi said a moment ago that it would be impossible to increase an appropriation over the Budget figures; and yet it seems to have been done in this instance.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the rules of the Senate, if the committee reports an amendment for that purpose, an increase may be made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the same in the other House.

Mr. HARRISON. But an amendment proposing such an increase may not be offered from the floor of the Senate, as I have tried to do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nor may that be done in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRISON. The $50,000 appropriation for the eradication of sweet-potato weevil was vouched for by the Committee on Agriculture, which considered the proposition this morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The same situation arises in the other House; there is nothing new about it. It was exactly the same before the Budget Bureau was ever created. If the department had declined to make an estimate at a certain figure, and a standing committee of the Senate had not reported in favor of an increase, an amendment to increase that amount if offered from the floor was out of order.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New York evidently was not present when I began my remarks by stating that the Budget Bureau compelled the Agricultural Department to reduce its preliminary estimate by $2,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I heard that statement.

Mr. HARRISON. And then, on the second proposition, they reduced it an additional $2,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I also heard that.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not think that the Senator from New York had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I see no difference in the situation to-day from that which existed three years ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the point is that a standing committee of the Senate has reported in favor of an increase.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but the Senator from Mississippi has contended that it is impossible for the Senate to increase an appropriation over the estimate of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. I have shown that——

Mr. WADSWORTH. And I say it is just as easy to do it to-day as it was to do it three years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not as easy to do it to-day as it was three years ago, or even six months ago, because three years ago if the Committee on Agriculture had recommended an increase in the appropriation for the extermination of the sweet potato weevil, as they have in this instance, and the amendment had been offered, it could not have been objected to as it was objected to in this case and then have to go to the Appropriations Committtee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To-day if the Appropriations Committee should recommend the amendment it would be in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The new rule involves merely a change of committees, that is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The part of the rule under which an amendment moved by direction of a standing committee has to go to the Committee on Appropriations at least one day before it may be considered was not changed by the new rule at all.

Mr. HARRISON. That is an old rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; so that if the amendment had come in the manner I have indicated it would have had to go to the Appropriations Committee upon objection, under the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. Not until the new rule was adopted would the amendment have to go through two committees and be vouched for or indorsed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; under the old rule the requirement was just the same; the language is just the same; it has not been changed in any particular.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the old rule the proposed amendment would have gone to the Committee on Agriculture, which reported the Agricultural appropriation bills, while under the new rule the Appropriations Committee reports all appropriation bills. Of course, under the old practice, if an objection had been made the amendment would have gone over for a day and it would have gone to the Agricultural Committee. Now, after the Agricultural Committee has reported it, it must go to the Appropriations Committee. Consequently two commitees must consider the proposition, when heretofore it would have been necessary for one committee only to consider it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not necessary for the Appropriations Committee to act upon the amendment. When the amendment has been before them for a day, whether the committee acts on it or not, it is in order on the bill. That is the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question as to the appropriation for hog cholera. What was the Budget estimate for the hog-cholera appropriation and what was the estimate of the Department of Agriculture? The amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill for hog cholera is $406,020, while the amount carried last year was $510,000. I am wondering why the reduction has been made.

Mr. McNARY. The law for the current year, I may say to the Senator, carried a total of $510,000. That amount has been decreased in the pending bill by $104,000, leaving the sum of $406,020.

Mr. HARRISON. What did the Department of Agriculture estimate as the amount necessary for hog cholera in its preliminary report affecting this bill?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, I think there is a little confusion in regard to the data which the committee may use. The committee is not in possession of the estimate made by the Department of Agriculture to the Director of the Budget; that is a confidential estimate or report.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Appropriations did not pry into the matter to ascertain what the estimate of the Department of Agriculture was to the Budget Bureau?

Mr. McNARY. The committee had before it the House bill, the report of the Director of the Budget, and also the Secretary of Agriculture and his assistants; and the committee inquired particularly of them if they had any suggestion to make in regard to the bill. So it was not necessary to go back to their preliminary estimates; it would have been no use. Furthermore, those estimates are more or less of a confidential nature as between the Secretary of Agriculture and the Director of the Budget. I can not give the Senator that estimate. I can give what the Director of the Budget estimated, what the House allowed, and what the Senate committee did to modify the provision.

Mr. HARRISON. But if the Department of Agriculture knows the conditions, and had made a certain estimate to the Budget Bureau, it seems to me that that would be the best evidence that could come before the committee considering the appropriation bill, because the committee may increase the amount and report such increase in the bill; and if they believe that the Agricultural Department knew more about it than does the Budget Bureau, that is one piece of evidence that the committee should have.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. The officials representing the Department of Agriculture stated that the amount appropriated by the bill was all that was necessary for the work next year. Larger appropriations have been made heretofore, but the department has met such success in its effort to exterminate hog cholera that so large an amount is not needed for the next fiscal year. We gave them what they wanted.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that what the department testified officially?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; that is what the department testified.

Mr. HARRISON. The great trouble about it is that we have not the preliminary report or estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Budget Bureau. We lose sight of the main proposition. I recall that when the Budget system was inaugurated the President of the United States called the heads of the departments together and addressed them. I heard his speech, and it was a very splendid speech; and, while I do not know whether he used as strong language as this, he gave them to understand that after the Bureau of the Budget had determined an estimate, if any of the heads of the departments sought to increase it, their political heads would be cut off. That may be the reason why the Department of Agriculture when the Bureau of the Budget makes its estimate are too timid to present facts to the committee having the matter in charge.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In this connection, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi and of the Senate to section 206 of the Budget act to indicate how it is being disregarded. I quote:

> SEC. 206. No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment unless at the request of either House of Congress.

I wish to call attention to the fact that that plain, unequivocal provision of the law is being violated every day during the present Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he thinks the section of the law which he has just read forecloses a Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate from going to a department and making inquiry in his own way and eliciting information upon which he may base an amendment which he proposes in either House or Senate? That is what has taken place here. There has not been anyone from the Department of Agriculture, so far as I know, who has come here and has solicited an increase. As to the particular amendment in which I have been interested, designed to increase the appropriation to exterminate the corn borer, I will say that no official member of the Agricultural Department said anything to me about it; but, in my own way, I sought to get information to answer inquiries which were propounded to me by my constituents. I obtained that information and upon it based the amendment which the Senate has adopted. Does the Senator think that is an evasion of the law?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is at all on the part of a Senator; but I want to say that in the same way they have always appeared, representatives of the departments are constantly appearing before the committee in violation of the Budget law.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield further on that point, I am very anxious that the officers and officials of the Department of Agriculture may not be misunderstood. So far as I know, they have not appeared before the committee; they certainly have made no request of any Senator, so far as I know; but when Senators have gone to the department and have sought information wanted by their constituents, certainly the officials of that department are authorized to give that information, if it is public information of interest to the public. That is all that has been done; there has been no evasion of the law by anybody.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Ohio was more fortunate than I was. He and the Senator from Massachusetts were interested in the corn borer, and, although the Department of Agriculture had not estimated for the amount that was given to them, that amount was provided. No objection was made to carrying it over to the Appropriations Committee. When, however, an appropriation was needed for the sweet-potato weevil, although the Agricultural Committee reports it and recommends it, it must go to the Appropriations Committee, and so far no one on the Appropriations Committee has said that before this bill passes the department officials will be asked to come before it and state what the facts are with reference to the sweet-potato weevil. It looks to me as though some discrimination is being shown here. They ought to look into these preliminary reports that are made, and the estimates of the Department of Agriculture to the Bureau of the Budget, and the needs of the country ought to be taken care of without respect to sections and without respect to the constituency of any particular Senator, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. I think this discussion as to the procedure by which we have to look out for the interests of the country has emphasized beyond a doubt in the minds of a great many Senators the fact that some modification of the operation of this rule must be brought about.

Every one of us knows, as the Senator from Mississippi has complained, that the Agricultural Committee of the Senate is practically a nominal thing now. The Naval Committee is nominal. There is but one committee when it comes to the appropriation of money to look after the different departments of the Government, namely, the Appropriations Committee. The others are nominal.

At the proper time I am going to propose a modification of this rule, by which, when the Budget has met, and, through whatever advice and sources of information it has, has decided how much in the aggregate can be used for the expenditures of the Government in the several departments, and has stated how much is available for agriculture, the Agricultural Committee and the Department of Agriculture shall get together and frame a bill to meet the conditions that exist, and the same in the case of all the other departments. After the apportionment has been made to each department of its share of the total amount available from the Treasury for the running of the Government, then let the several committees representing the departments, in conjunction with the departments, work out the bills in accordance therewith. Then we will have need for our committees and we will have need for our departments; but as the matter now stands we only have need for the Budget Bureau and the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think that statement ought to go unchallenged. As I understand, when the preliminary or original estimate was submitted to the Budget Bureau and it was ascertained that it called for many million dollars more than could be appropriated the items were sent back to the heads of the department with a request that they so reduce their estimates on the items where they thought reductions could be properly made as to bring them within the amount allotted to the department. I understand that those estimates then went back to the budget officers of the departments—not of the Budget Bureau, but of the departments; each department, as I understand, has a budget officer—and they went over these various items and cut them where they thought they could to bring them within the Budget.

It seems to me there has been a great deal of unjust criticism of the Budget Bureau in this matter. The whole matter has been handled as fairly as it could be.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I can not let that statement go unchallenged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to both Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can only yield to one at a time.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, I was not criticizing the Budget Bureau; I was criticizing the bungling rule that we have made, and to which they are trying to work today. We have the Budget Bureau charged with the responsibility of naming the sum total that can be expended for governmental purposes. We have certain committees in Congress who heretofore were charged with the responsibility of looking after those departments. Now, when the Budget Bureau has decided the total amount that, according to taxes and the resources of the Government, is available, and in its best judgment, with the heads of the departments, has worked out how much money is available for the following year for agriculture, for example, then let the Agricultural Committee and the department frame a bill in accordance with that amount. Then you will have use for the Agricultural Committee, and each man will know something about his committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I did not intend to charge that the Senator alone had made unjust criticisms. I said that statements had been made on the floor criticizing the Budget Bureau that I thought were unjust. If the Senator wants to criticize the Senate for adopting this rule, that is another matter. I think the rule is one of the best that ever has been adopted, and I think if it is properly carried out it will give satisfaction all around.

Mr. SMITH. It does not seem to be giving it now.

Mr. CURTIS. I know that some of the subcommittees have sent for officers and secured full information in regard to what they originally asked and what they wanted and what was the least they could possibly get along with.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I criticize the Senate for passing the rule and I criticize the Budget Bureau now for the manner in which they are operating the Budget. I am very glad to criticize them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that a majority of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations are members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. HARRISON. I know that there are three, I think, members of the Agricultural Committee who are ex officio members of the Appropriations Committee in considering this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I am mistaken, then; there is not a majority.

Mr. HARRISON. That was a very good part of the rule. We had to fight very hard to get that much representation upon the powerful Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, that is the very point I am making, namely, that only a certain number of the members of the Agricultural Committee have any knowledge whatever of the Agricultural bill. The rest of them get their knowledge as best they can get it. They are not officially connected with it in any way whatever. It is only the members of the subcommittee that sit with certain members of the Appropriations Committee to pass upon the measure of which it is supposed that the entire Agricultural Committee should be cognizant.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I desire to say that there is nothing to prohibit the Agricultural Committee from considering every single item in this bill and sending a recommendation to the Appropriations Committee through its three members.

Mr. SMITH. They could do the same thing with the naval bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. The estimate is sent down here before Congress meets. It is in a great book—I have it—showing how much is estimated for each item. The Agricultural Committee can meet at any time, and, if dissatisfied with any appropriation suggested by the Budget Bureau, can bring forward its amendment to that bill and let it be referred to the Appropriations Committee, where it will be considered by part of the Agricultural Committee and by the Appropriations Committee together. So really no advantage is taken of the Agricultural Committee, because if they are diligent and look at these estimates that are sent here, they can go over every one of them and bring in a report as an amendment, if they desire to do it, and it will be referred to and properly considered by the Appropriations Committee, through a strong minority of the Agricultural Committee on the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when this rule was first invoked, I think last year, in making up the appropriation bills, the Agricultural Committee, I think, at least, did take up the bill, and its representatives on the Appropriations Committee undertook to have the bill finally conform to the wishes of the Agricultural Committee; but this year it was quite different. Hearings were conducted by the Appropriations Committee while the bill was in the House. The Agricultural Committee could do nothing. It never has had an opportunity to do anything until this morning; and when we offered amendment after amendment seeking to take care of the needs of the farmers of the country against pests and insects we were told, "Oh, do not put in too many amendments; we will kill the whole thing." That is what we were confronted with, and that is what we are confronted with now. We see the corn borer taken care of without objection; but the sweet-potato weevil, that infests the sweet potatoes of my State, can continue its ravages, and we must go and bow down before an Appropriations Committee whose members can not tell us now whether or not they will bring a representative of the Agricultural Department there to state whether or not this appropriation is necessary.

Talk about the Budget! I have cited already half a dozen instances where this Budget Bureau, which knows nothing about farming, perhaps, the head of which is a splendid general and a good man, General Lord, but he has been studying military tactics through his life, I presume——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. HARRISON. And knows no more about agriculture than my friend from New York, although he says he is a farmer—yes; I yield now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The ignorance of the Senator from New York on farming is of equal depth with that of the Senator from Mississippi about General Lord.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. General Lord, it so happens, was clerk of the Committee on Appropriations for years, and probably knows more about the framing of appropriation bills than any other man.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the Senator's idea of a farmer. If some man in New York City has read an agricultural yearbook, he thinks he is fit and trained enough to meet the needs of agriculture; and because General Lord at one time advised a committee of which the Senator was a member, I believe, touching agriculture——

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this was long ago.

Mr. HARRISON. He is qualified to teach agriculture, and to take care of all these appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is confused.

Mr. HARRISON. I apologize for saying that the Senator was on that committee. I do not believe at that time he was; but General Lord was the clerk of some committee here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was before the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from New York knew where Washington was.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have cited these several instances. Here is an item for investigation of plant diseases. The department estimated for $182,000, and yet the Bureau of the Budget tried to cut it to $77,000.

Take the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits. The Department of Agriculture estimated for $113,935, but the Bureau of the Budget said they should have only $111,000.

Let us take diseases of cotton. The Agricultural Department estimated for $127,000. The Bureau of the Budget said: "No; you can just cut out $10,000 of that," and reduced it to $117,000.

In the case of diseases of crop plants the Department of Agriculture said they needed $66,860, and they were cut to the bone, all of these were. These were on the second recommendation, which was $2,000,000 less than the preliminary estimate of the Department of Agriculture; and although for years there have been these dreaded diseases of crops the department recommended $66,860, and General Lord and his bureau said they should have but $55,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Did the item for diseases of cotton include the boll weevil?

Mr. HARRISON. No. That is an appropriate suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is included in that item. The boll weevil is there.

Mr. HARRISON. There is another provision here that appropriates money for the boll weevil, too.

Mr. SMITH. No; the other is $165,000 under southern field crops, but that includes all the southern field crops.

Mr. HARRISON. For acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions the Department of Agriculture said they needed $132,500, but General Lord and his Bureau of the Budget said: "Let us cut this to $112,500."

Take crop technological investigations. The department said they needed $42,440. General Lord and the Bureau of the Budget said, "Let us cut it to $32,000."

Take the improvement of cereals, that we might reduce the cost of living to the people and yet produce more cereals. The Department of Agriculture said they needed $622,505, but General Lord and the Bureau of the Budget said it should be reduced to $472,505.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in order to save more time than the amount that would be saved if this were not put in the bill, I am going to withdraw my objection to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I will stop speaking, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 50, line 12, strike out "$123,000," and in lieu insert "$173,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the amendment? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McKellar	Shortridge
Ball	Harreld	McKinley	Simmons
Bayard	Harris	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Broussard	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Bursum	Johnson	New	Townsend
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Underwood
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Poindexter	Warren
Ernst	Ladd	Ransdell	Watson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Willis
George	Lodge	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division on the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I propose an amendment. On page 41, line 8, I move to strike out "$110,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$135,000," so as to read:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forest and forest lands, $135,000.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to have some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have given some attention to this subject. It is desired to have an additional experiment station in the Great Lakes States and another in New England. There is no station in either one of those regions at the present time. In view of the debate, I have been looking up the facts, and I find that Assistant Forester E. A. Sherman appeared before the Senate committee and stated that the department submitted to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of $60,000 to establish two additional forest experiment stations, one in New England and one in the Lake States, at $25,000 each, and asked for $10,000 to increase the work of existing stations. The Budget Bureau rejected the entire recommendation and cut down the total appropriation to $84,000.

The House added $25,000. Mr. Sherman, who, as I have said, is the assistant forester, stated that there are now six experiment stations in the United States. They are very important in the work of forestation. There is no station in the region of the Lakes and none in New England, and Mr. Sherman said in his testimony that both are very, very urgent. That is the statement of the Department of Agriculture.

Of course, the $10,000 to increase the work of existing stations is cut off. It is intended to establish one station in each region, but only $25,000 is appropriated for the two stations, giving $12,500 for each region, which is totally inadequate, and it is a wasteful way of providing for them. There ought to be at least $25,000 for each station. That is the reason why I have advocated the addition of $25,000. Under the action of the House the appropriation is only $25,000 to take care of both stations, and as it stands that is not sufficient.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator from Massachusetts sure that under the language of this paragraph construction work can be carried on? Can permanent buildings be erected under the terms of the item, reading from line 4 to line 8, inclusive?

Mr. LODGE. That appears to be the view of the department. The custom is to send a forester into one of these regions. They give him a certain number of assistants, usually four, and if they have not Government land to experiment on, they have to buy land. The only State in New England which has Government land which they can use, and which they would use, is New Hampshire. They would have to buy tracts in the other States, probably. This appropriation, as worded, is considered sufficient to enable them to carry on the necessary work. I think the buildings are very slight.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I heard the Senator a moment ago when he referred to the testimony of the assistant forester, I gathered the impression that the original request of the department was framed in different language, that it would actually authorize the establishment of a station.

Mr. LODGE. No; it is taken from this general fund.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may be wrong.

Mr. LODGE. It is carried this way in the bill:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations—

And so forth. The House increased the appropriation $25,000. I read from the testimony:

Senator MCNARY. Please state the reasons for the increase. This is on page 4, line 23.

Mr. SHERMAN. The estimates submitted to the Bureau of the Budget provided for an increase of $60,000, which was to establish two additional forest experiment stations, one in New England and one in the Lake States, at $25,000 each, and $10,000 to increase the work at the existing stations.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the language evidently contemplates possible cooperation with other departments of the Government, or States or individuals.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; which they get in many cases. The law, as it stands and as it has stood for some years, covers it all.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator stated that there were some six or seven other stations. If the Senator has a list of the stations and their location, I would like to know what they are.

Mr. LODGE. There are six in the United States now—one at Asheville, one in Louisiana, one in northern Idaho, one in Colorado, one in Arizona in the Coconino Plateau, and the Wind River Station in the State of Washington. I read further:

Senator MCNARY. In that great territory around the Great Lakes you have no station?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Senator MCNARY. Or in the New England States?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Then he said that both are very, very urgent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I propose an amendment on page 82, after line 14, to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Purchase of seeds for drought-stricken areas: That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1923, to make advances or loans to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the State of Washington and of the State of New Mexico, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists for the purchase of wheat for seed purposes in the State of Washington and the purchase of pinto beans for seed purposes in the State of New Mexico, and, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of crops. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $300. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this paragraph, to be immediately available (not more than $50,000 of which shall be available to procure pinto-bean seeds), $550,000.

That any persons who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under the preceding paragraph shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Mr. MCNARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move to increase the appropriation for the purchase of pinto beans for seed purposes as provided in the amendment. The amount was put into the amendment through a misapprehension regarding the price. I move to change the figures "$50,000" to "$100,000" for bean purposes and to increase the total appropriation to $600,000 from $550,000.

Mr. MCNARY. Due to confusion in the Chamber I did not distinctly understand the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New Mexico proposes an amendment to the committee amendment striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$100,000" and changing the total amount under the committee amendment from "$550,000" to "$600,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand this is entirely a new proposition not involved in any estimate of either the Budget or the department. It is entirely new.

Mr. MCNARY. It is entirely new, but recommended by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FLETCHER. To-day?

Mr. MCNARY. To-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is the first time we have had the matter before us, and I am not quite advised as to the various kinds of seeds proposed to be purchased. Is it the idea that the Government is to purchase seed and sell it to the farmers?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And then the farmers agree to pay back to the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire what kind of seed is contemplated?

Mr. MCNARY. The idea is for the Government to advance the money to the farmers of the drought-stricken region of Washington for the purchase of seed wheat, to be repaid by the farmers to the Government, and also to advance $50,000 of this sum for the purchase of pinto-bean seed in the State of New Mexico where there has been a failure of the crop. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] proposes to increase the appropriation of $50,000 now contained in the item to $100,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I understand that. I did not know to what extent the whole provision was to reach, whether it went to one particular State or one particular region, or what kind of seed was intended to be purchased.

Mr. MCNARY. It is for the State of Washington for wheat, and the State of New Mexico for bean seed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Washington tell us as to the need for the appropriation there? Have we not already done something in that direction?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. While Congress has appropriated heretofore one year, I think, $1,500,000 for this purpose, only about $1,700 of that amount went into the State of Washington. There are five or six counties in our State that have had very severe droughts each year during the last five or six years. But they have taken care of their own situation and the local banks have put up money and carried the farmers. However, they have simply reached the limit, according to the report of our State department of agriculture, and they can not do it any more. They have had the worst year last year that they ever had. They have summer-fallowed much of their land that they expected to put into winter wheat, but have been unable to get seed for that purpose.

This appropriation is to enable those who have already summer-fallowed their land and have it in shape to get the seed to put in spring wheat. It will only apply to the four or five counties in the State. The department of agriculture of the State estimates there are something over 300,000 acres that would be planted if they could get the seed, and which will not be planted if they can not get it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator tell us what has been our experience with regard to the other appropriation which we made of $1,700,000?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My understanding is we have some 60 or 70 per cent of it paid back and the indications are that it will practically all be repaid to the Government in the end.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no time limit on it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not. The regulations are prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have no objection to the item, but I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if, after this is voted on, it is not about time to quit? It is considerably after 5 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that I think I will offer my amendment for the distribution of vegetable seeds which has been stricken out by the Appropriations Committee. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has an amendment pending, but I think this is a very appropriate proposition to offer. It amounts to only $360,000 to distribute seeds among the whole American people, while here is an item under consideration now for $500,000 just for three or four States in one section. I shall not object to that amendment. I am heartily in favor of doing whatever is necessary to aid the unfortunate farmers who are in distress, as has been suggested here, but it is growing late and I suggest that my amendment be pending and we will take it up to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to say merely a word in regard to the matter. New Mexico has suffered the past year the greatest drought in her history. There is one county in that State which two years ago shipped out over a million dollars' worth of beans, but did not raise enough last year for seed, much less for home consumption in that one county. If there ever was a case which would call for the generosity of Congress in a matter of this sort, it is the situation in New Mexico at the present time regarding the pinto-bean industry. It is one of the most important industries in the State. The amount of money involved here which is sought to be made available for those people would not pay more than 10 per cent of the cost of seed beans for the industry in the State. I sincerely hope that the Senate will consent to the increase.

As I said in submitting the amendment, the original amount was put in through a misapprehension as to the price of the seed beans. The $100,000 would not go far enough to satisfy the real necessities of the case. I sincerely trust that Senators will permit the increase from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am constrained, under the situation now confronting us, which has become perfectly apparent, to make the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico on the ground that the amendment is not in order, it not having been estimated for or reported by a standing committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. The original amendment is in order and the amendment to the amendment is certainly in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the last part of Rule XVI, which prohibits the consideration of an amendment of this kind on an amendment reported from a standing committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is perfectly plain that the amount can not be increased.

Mr. CURTIS. The rule provides that—

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I notice there is a limitation in the amendment that no more than $300 may be loaned to any farmer. If it is not obnoxious to the rule, I think that limitation ought to be stricken out. Our wheat farms are rather large, and $300 would not furnish very much relief. I would like to see that limitation stricken out and the matter left to the Secretary of Agriculture to work out. I make that motion. I do not think the chairman of the committee would have any objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to it. I know the farms are rather extensive in eastern Washington. The language follows the practice and precedent established in this body, and therefore the limitation was placed at $300. That perhaps is proper and useful where the farm area is small, but in a State like Washington perhaps the individual should have more than $300. So far as the acting chairman of the committee is concerned, he has no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington and to the amendment which he has offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to strike out the limitation of $300.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I believe the Senators from the State of Washington to be liberal enough to permit $50,000 more of the amount to be used for the purchase of seed beans. I think it would not be objectionable under the rule to propose an amendment changing the $50,000 to $100,000, but not changing the total amount of the appropriation. Therefore, I move that the $50,000 mentioned in the amendment, which shall be available for the purpose of purchasing pinto beans, shall be increased to $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have one other proposal which I desire to submit in reference to the bill. On page 28, line 5, after the word "properties," I move to strike out the comma. That is proposed for the purpose of clarifying the meaning of the provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the decision of the Chair that amendments which are objected to should go to the Appropriations Committee for action, and as an objection has been made to one amendment, I do not feel that I can ask the Senate to proceed further with the bill this evening. I can assure the Members of the Senate that it will take but a few moments to-morrow to complete the bill, as I know of only one amendment yet to be offered to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Alabama has offered an amendment to the bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have the amendment pending, Mr. President. My understanding was that we were going to adjourn until to-morrow. I think we have been here long enough to-day. We can not finish the bill to-night, and I have some remarks to make upon the amendments. I suggest that the Senate had better adjourn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will state the inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has just stated that, in view of the decision of the Chair with respect to the reference to the Committee on Appropriations of one amendment to which I objected, he was going to ask that the consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow, apparently upon the theory that it was incumbent upon the Committee on Appropriations to act upon the amendment within 24 hours or by the end of 24 hours, and that then the Senate might take it up.

Mr. LODGE. It will be in order to-morrow.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I was going to ask; that was the purpose of my rising. I desire to put this parliamentary inquiry: The amendment having been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, can the Senate act upon it until the committee reports or is discharged from its consideration?

Mr. OVERMAN. They do not have to act upon it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my contention. Several Senators think it is merely an automatic proposal.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Chair has already ruled on the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment can not be acted on by the Senate unless the committee makes a report upon it or the Senate discharges the committee from its consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my own impression as to the correct construction of the rule.

The chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill has made the earnest request that he be given an opportunity to have the consideration of the bill completed to-night, if it be humanly possible to do so. In view of that request, if I may be permitted to do so, I now withdraw my objection interposed some time ago, the result of which at that time was to compel the reference of the amendment appropriating $550,000 additional for the purchase of forest lands to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from New York to withdraw his objection to the amendment on condition that we were going to finish the pending bill to-night?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I did not.

Mr. HARRISON. Then that is all right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said I had been urged to withdraw it by the chairman of the committee, who hopes to finish the bill to-night. The amendment, I understand, is pending.

Mr. McNARY. On page 71, line 19, I move to strike out "$450,000" and to insert "$1,000,000," and I ask for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has sent to the desk an amendment proposing to restore the old appropriation for the general distribution of seed. I make the point of order that that amendment has not been estimated for by the department; in fact, the department is opposed to it; and it is out of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before the point of order is ruled on by the Chair, I desire to make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Alabama withdraw the point of order for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, the amendment has not as yet been offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to ascertain whether or not the amendment had been offered. The Chair asked the Senator from Alabama whether the amendment had been offered, and the Senator replied that the amendment was pending. The Chair did not quite understand what the Senator from Alabama meant by that statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. What I meant by the statement was that I was going to ask that the amendment be considered in the morning.

The amendment intended to be offered by Mr. HEFLIN is as follows:

On page 82, after the committee amendment, to insert the following: "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packing, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants."

Mr. HEFLIN. I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. We will secure a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons
Ball	George	McKinley	Smith
Bayard	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Broussard	Harrison	New	Townsend
Bursum	Heflin	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Colt	Kellogg	Phipps	Warren
Couzens	Keyes	Poindexter	Watson
Curtis	Lenroot	Ransdell	Willis
Ernst	Lodge	Sheppard
Fernald	McCormick	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HEFLIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A unanimous-consent agreement has heretofore been entered into that the Senate shall take a recess when it shall have concluded its business to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, I move that the Senate take a recess, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama about how much time he thinks he will occupy to-morrow?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not over 25 or 30 minutes. I think we can get through in a very little while in the morning. I have been here all day, as has the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think, probably, better time would be made if the bill were not proceeded further with to-night, but I think there is a desire to have an executive session.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have three or four amendments to offer to the bill, which I want to discuss briefly. They are amendments which have merit, but we ought not to stay here all night considering this measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also have an amendment which I desire to propose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator from Mississippi expect to occupy much time?

Mr. HARRISON. I will not occupy much time, but I want the amendments to be considered, and, if possible, adopted.

Mr. HEFLIN. As I understand, Mr. President, my motion is pending, unless it is desired to have an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 12, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 11, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

As we take up the duties of the day, our Father, may our industry meet Thy approval and contribute to the happiness and the material welfare of our fellow men. As the tides break upon the shore lines of our lives, give strength to withstand the evil and the spirit of willingness to accept the good. O Master of men, be Thou the inspiration and the standard of our practice. Brighten the skies of the future for all peoples. May every nation remember the rock from which it was hewn. Thus lead them to determine their service by the common fatherhood of men. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM DALL.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7658) to amend the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio calls up the bill H. R. 7658 from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what the purpose is of converting a general bill into a special bill?

Mr. NORTON. This was a case in which William Dall at the time he should have filed a claim was in an asylum. He is now out, and this gives him 60 days within which to file his claim. In other words, it makes a general bill a special one.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill was general in its character when it passed the House?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And this limits it to one individual claim.

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was intended originally to apply to this person, but in general terms?

Mr. NORTON. It would have applied generally, but now it applies specially to one. It was intended to relieve one person and enable him to present a claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was general, for the purpose of getting consideration upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Now it is special, and I compliment the gentleman upon his astuteness in having this changed in this way in the Senate.

Mr. SPROUL. Is this for the extras on the Central High School?

Mr. NORTON. It is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal to-morrow and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table he be granted 30 minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that I shall have to object. We have established a rule; it is fairly well established that we shall not make special arrangements of this sort. I hope we may be able to make some other arrangement under which we shall have the opportunity of listening to the gentleman from New York. I shall have to object to his request at this time

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 10, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years"; and on page 16 of the bill, in lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "including the payment of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 7, 8, and 9.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
PATRICK H. KELLEY,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4: Appropriates for the items under the Senate in the amounts and in the manner proposed in the Senate amendments.

On No. 5: Provides for a "motor boat" for the Forest Service for use in Alaskan waters, as proposed by the Senate, instead of a "gasoline motor boat" as proposed by the House.

On No. 6: Appropriates $7,750, as proposed by the House, instead of $17,500, as proposed by the Senate, for payment of rewards in the Postal Service for the fiscal year 1921.

On No. 10: Strikes out the appropriation of $3,985 inserted by the Senate for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, for the fiscal year 1923.

On No. 11, relating to the appropriation for refunding taxes under the Bureau of Internal Revenue: Inserts a substitute for the language of the House and amendment of the Senate, confining the appropriation to the payment of claims for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years.

On No. 12: Strikes out the appropriation of $85,692.17 inserted by the Senate for the payment of damage claims under the War Department.

On No. 13: Appropriates $20,000 for the payment of a judgment of a United States district court certified to Congress after the bill had been presented to the House.

On Nos. 14, 15, 16, and 17: Appropriates $83,260.47 for the payment of additional judgments of the Court of Claims certified to Congress after the bill had been presented to the House.

On No. 18: Appropriates $110,339.61 for the payment of claims allowed by the General Accounting Office certified to Congress after the bill had been presented to the House.

On No. 19: Changes a section number of the bill.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 7: Providing an ambassador for Cuba instead of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

On No. 8: Appropriating one year's salary to the widow of Albert W. Swalm, late United States consul to Hamilton, Bermuda.

On No. 9: Crediting the accounts of Boaz W. Long, American minister to Salvador.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
PATRICK H. KELLEY,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the amount carried in the bill as it passed the Senate was $76,025,201.31. The amount carried in the bill as it passed the House was $75,690,174.06. There was added by the Senate the sum of $335,027.25. The House receded from $225,600.08. The House managers will recommend recession from $10,000. The total House recession will amount to $235,600.08. The Senate has receded from $99,427.17, and the bill as agreed upon will total $74,925,774.14. The House agreed to the following amendments: Senate items, $12,000; United States court judgment, $20,000; Court of Claims judgments, $83,260.47; audited claims, $110,339.61; making a total of $225,600.08.

The Senate receded from the following items: Postal rewards, $9,750; Mexican Boundary Commission, $3,985; War Department claims, $85,692.17; making a total of $99,427.17.

The items brought back for consideration in the House are ambassador to Cuba, $5,500; widow of Albert W. Swalm, $4,500; and crediting accounts of Boaz W. Long, carrying no appropriation. The three latter items will be submitted to the House after the conference reports have been adopted.

Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire any time on the conference report?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: Page 15, after line 13, insert:
"The compensation of an ambassador to Cuba when hereafter appointed shall be the sum of $17,500 per annum, and the salary appropriated for the fiscal year 1923 and 1924 for an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Cuba is hereby made available for the salary of an ambassador, and there is hereby appropriated for that purpose for the fiscal year 1924 the additional sum of $5,500: Provided, That the restrictions contained in section 1223, Revised Statutes, shall not apply in filling the existing vacancy at Habana, Cuba: And provided further, That the restrictions contained in the annual appropriation acts for the State and Justice Departments, fiscal years 1923 and 1924, pertaining to salaries of ambassadors and ministers, shall not apply in filling the vacancy at Habana, Cuba."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Cuba" in the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "And provided further, That the aggregate of all pay from all sources from the Government of the United States to any person appointed to the foregoing office under the permissive authority contained in the first and second provisos of this paragraph shall not exceed the annual rate of $17,500."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the provision which has been suggested as inserted by the Senate amendment provides for the appointment of an ambassador to Cuba. The intention of the President of the United States is to appoint General Crowder to this place. General Crowder has been acting as the President's representative in Cuba for a long time. The responsibility of the Government on account of its suzerainty obligations has been such that the former President, Mr. Wilson, as well as President Harding, felt that we should have somebody there to look after the interests of the United States. General Crowder has been an unofficial representative. He is soon to retire from the Army, and the President feels that the case is of such importance in Cuba that he should be retained there. In order to retain him, he believes that he ought to be able to sit at the head of the table in an official capacity. This amendment simply provides that an Army officer may be appointed, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1223 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

Any officer of the Army who accepts or holds any appointment in the Diplomatic and Consular Service of the Government shall be considered as having resigned his service in the Army, and it shall be filled as a vacancy.

Then there is another restriction in the State and Justice acts of 1923 and 1924 which provides that no salary therein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

The House conferees had some doubt whether there would be more than one salary paid if the provision as submitted by the Senate was agreed to, and they accepted the Senate proposal with an amendment which I proposed for submission to the House, and our proposal makes it definite and conclusive that under no circumstances can General Crowder, if appointed ambassador, receive any compensation other than that of the ambassadorial salary. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Does this create the office of ambassador, raising it from that of minister?

Mr. MADDEN. Permit me to say—or if he gets the retired pay to which he would be entitled if this bill passed that would be applied toward the payment of the $17,500.

Mr. GARNER. Is this a permanent ambassadorial appointment; is it permanent law increasing the position from that of a minister to ambassador?

Mr. MADDEN. It is.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement for about one minute?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am very fond personally of General Crowder, and a great admirer of him and what he has done for the Army. I have no objection to the personnel of this appointment, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois and the attention of the House once more to the fact that they are destroying, or fixing to destroy, laying the foundation to destroy the Committee on Appropriations which I helped create by voting for the rule brought in by the Rules Committee. This kind of legislation means the reverting back of appropriations to the original nine committees. There is a movement in this House which is supported by as patriotic men as can be found, men of far sight, to amend the rule and carry the appropriations back to their original nine committees. Now, what happens in this instance? An invasion of the Foreign Affairs Committee's function, as it is their business to create ambassadorial posts. It is their business to have hearings and know something about it. Instead of that we have three conferees on the part of the House coming back here and submitting a Senate amendment raising the post in Cuba from that of a minister to an ambassador.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. Now, that is the business of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. We are called upon as Members of the House to vote it up or down. You say the House has an opportunity to consider it. Certainly. But do not you think it would be better in line with the due process of the functions in the House for this matter to go to the Foreign Affairs Committee and let them have hearings, and then come into the House and tell all about the necessities for it? Would not that be the better thing to do without bringing in this Senate amendment? I do not know anything about the advisability of this.

The gentleman from Illinois has stated who is going to be appointed and the reasons why. It may be necessary, it may be desirable, but I want to call attention to the fact that you are preparing to lay the foundation to cut your own heads off. That is what this kind of procedure is going to result in. It is going to bring the Appropriations Committee back to 21 Members, and it ought to do it. As I said in the beginning, and I repeat, if the Committee on Appropriations continues to usurp the powers of the other committees of the House it ought to be disintegrated and the power of appropriation put back in the original nine committees.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, we are not usurping anything.

Mr. GARNER. You are. You are coming in here with an amendment from the Senate, and sometimes it is connived at. I am told by certain Members that if they will go over to the Senate and put on this we will agree to it, and the gentleman now confirms the fact when he comes in and asks the House of Representatives to agree to it. He ought to go back to the Senate and say, "No; I will ask the House of Representatives to disagree to it. I will not do it because it is legislation." That is what the gentleman from Illinois ought to do.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman quite correct?

Mr. GARNER. I have not the floor. The gentleman from Illinois has it.

Mr. MADDEN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I simply desire to ask a question.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I want two minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman quite correct in saying this committee is usurping the functions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs? As I understand, it is not in the province of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to raise a minister to the rank of ambassador. That is something for the State Department to do. This provision does not take anything away from the functions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GARNER. The communication in reference to this matter goes from the State Department to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as the gentleman knows, because he has served on that committee. Now, if this——

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is not a matter of legislation, the raising of the rank of minister to ambassador.

Mr. GARNER. What committee should consider it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The President has the right to raise our representatives to a foreign country from the rank of minister to ambassador, and it used to be the function of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to provide the appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GARNER. If we will appropriate the money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If we appropriate the money, that is it. It is not a question of legislation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, my colleague is entirely wrong. We have had hearings on the same proposition at various times.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Nevertheless it is in the power of the Executive through the State Department to do that.

Mr. BEGG. He can appoint ambassadors to every country in the world if he wants to, but the committee does not have to agree to it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I simply wish to inform the gentleman that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is this morning holding a hearing on this very question, on reorganizing the State Department and the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and particularly along the lines of this very measure. I think all the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will be in accord with the gentleman when he has brought the matter up.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I did not expect this matter to come up this morning, and I have not had time to look into the language of this proposed amendment to satisfy myself as to just what it means. I have heard the statement of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and I want to know whether or not this provision will enable the appointment of an Army officer to this position who is still on the active list, and whether or not it repeals the provision that we put into the law some time ago?

Mr. MADDEN. This would simply compel him when he retires from the ambassadorship to resume his duties in the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. When he retires?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. In regard to legislation with respect to a change of title, it rests originally with the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They have formerly brought in legislation that authorizes the President to make those promotions. Of course, in the end the matter reverts to them. The gentleman said that if he is in receipt of this salary he will go to the head of the table. I ask, what does it cost a year?

Mr. MADDEN. Five thousand five hundred dollars more than it costs now.

Mr. LITTLE. If we vote to give him $5,000 a year more, we may be sure that he will go in to dinner first. [Laughter.] That is all it amounts to. There is nothing in it but that. [Laughter.] I think it is a little extravagant for that.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I trust the House will not do this thing. It is clearly a matter of personal favoritism. I think it is one-man legislation. General Crowder's friends got this thing put in, and we are to give him a personal raise of $5,500, and he gets $10,000.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not personal with him. It is the President of the United States that is asking for this.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Oh, it is also easy to persuade the President of the United States to make a recommendation of this kind. I have had some experience with General Crowder, if I may make a personal reference. I had occasion to go to General Crowder several times a few years ago. I was never more humiliated in my life as a Member of Congress. I was as the dust to his feet, and there was nothing to it but arrogance and arbitrary conduct. Then I chanced, when higher officials took an interest in a certain matter, to find that General Crowder was one of the slickest of politicians.

I am not going into that, but I desire to repeat that the impression I got was that he was one of the slickest politicians in the Government service. Now, he is trying to get a great big raise here, up to $17,500, to be ambassador to Cuba. Why? What is the necessity for this thing? There is none. He has gotten in touch with Members; he is using influence to be paid two and a half times the salary of a Member of Congress. We are not told why. I protest against it as rank personal politics. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present. No; I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois withhold the previous question for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withholds the motion for the previous question.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois yields two minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I regret very much that I have not given this subject any consideration before this. I simply rise here as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to protest the procedure. There is no question or doubt but that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is entitled to consider this very subject. If they are not entitled to the consideration of a question of raising ministers to the position of ambassadors, you might as well discharge the committee.

Now, what is the use in fooling ourselves about it? Nobody dares to say that this is not the main province of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We have been considering these subjects for the last month, having hearings almost every day as to the question of rank and grade of ministers and ambassadors. I protest against the procedure, against running this in from the Senate through a conference committee and usurping the rights given by the House to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I regret very much that the chairman of that committee is sick at home and can not be here to protest for the whole committee. It is not my function; I am simply speaking as an individual member.

I also believe that we have already got too many ambassadors. I believe we made a mistake when we appointed an ambassador to Peru. It lowers the ambassadorial dignity when we appoint an ambassador to a country of less than 5,000,000 people.

You are supposed to legislate in this way because the conference committee tells you to. I hope you independent Members will use your own judgment, and if you agree that this legislation should not pass without going before the Foreign Affairs Committee that you will vote this legislation down. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In regard to the gentleman's suggestion touching the ambassadorship to Peru, it is my recollection that we did not initiate that. That was initiated by the Peruvian Government itself, and it came to us in such a way that there did not seem to be anything else for this country to do. Peru took the initiative in making that suggestion as to an ambassador. We had ourselves invited Argentina, Brazil, and Chile. They had raised their diplomatic positions to ambassador when Peru saw fit to do that. It does not seem to me that we could, without affront to Peru, refuse to do it.

Mr. FISH. There was a reason for that. There were some difficulties among the A. B. C. Governments. There is no reason for this.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this provision does not create the place of ambassador. We are not attempting to create an ambassadorship. We are making an appropriation. That is all we are doing. The President has the power to create an ambassadorship, and we are only appropriating the money, making it available in the event that the ambassadorship is created.

Mr. HUSTED. Under law.

Mr. MADDEN. Under law. We are not making any law. We are not usurping any powers of anybody. We are not undertaking to take away the functions of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We are carrying out the functions of the Committee on Appropriations, namely, making appropriations to be available for a place that may be created by law.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will be obliged to gentlemen if they will let me complete my statement. I have given time to everybody who desired it. It seems to me there can be no one so familiar with the importance of the situation as the President and the Secretary of State, and they both urge that this is vital. If the question of the jurisdiction of committees is to determine what the heads of the national administration think to be a vital issue, I am sorry, because I do not think it ought to be settled upon that basis.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. This is not a difficult proposition to understand, but perhaps it had better be stated so that it will be understood. The creation of an ambassador comes about in this way: The President sends the name of A B to the Senate for confirmation as envoy extraordinary or as ambassador. If it is approved by the Senate, the position or place is created. It requires, of course, an appropriation to equalize the position of an ambassador thus created with other ambassadorships that are created, and is usually followed by the payment of an ambassadorial salary, which is $17,500. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to make a further statement?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. TOWNER. I desire further to state this: This ought not to degenerate into the question of whether or not General Crowder wants a job or a larger salary. I have some knowledge of the circumstances, because some of the affairs at least of Cuba are committed to the jurisdiction of the committee of which I am chairman. General Crowder has performed a very difficult, delicate, and important mission to Cuba. He has, at personal sacrifice to himself, and with his desire very many times to be relieved from the position, performed a real service to this country. All of the Members know that our relations to Cuba are very important and at the present time are very delicate. The time has come when there should be an ambassador to Cuba appointed. It is practically impossible, Mr. Chairman—and that ought to be understood—to have what might be considered as an ambassadorial representative without an ambassador's privilege, and either a minister or an ambassador appointed. There is no ambassador there, and for that reason this position should be created.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to call his attention to a statute?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I call the attention of the gentleman to a statute enacted in 1909 which provides that hereafter no new ambassadorships shall be created unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, we are only doing to-day in a deficiency bill what we have done over and over again in the general appropriation bills for the Department of State—what we did this year, for example. This year the President nominated three new ministers, and we made the appropriation for them, as we always do. Under the Constitution the President has the right to name ambassadors and ministers. It is purely an Executive function. It simply remains for us to provide the usual compensation according to the diplomatic grade. Now, this question came up under a point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in the Sixty-sixth Congress, third session. He made the point of order that certain diplomatic positions were unauthorized by law; that they had not been created by legislative authority. Mr. JOHN JACOB ROGERS, of Massachusetts, discussed the point of order, and it was held that the point of order of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was not well taken, on the ground that the creation of ambassadorships and ministerships was a purely Executive function, over which the legislative branch had no control, except to provide in its appropriation bills for the proper compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as Members generally know, I have scanned the various appropriation bills for years back upon their return to this body, with amendments for approval or for sending to conference. Since the adoption of the new order vesting the jurisdiction of all appropriation bills in the Committee on Appropriations, I venture the statement, without fear of contradiction, that there have been fewer legislative riders on these appropriation bills when returned from the Senate than at any time before in the history of the Government. Certainly there have been many less than under the old order, because the conferees representing the Committee on Appropriations fight to the limit of their powers against accepting legislative provisions.

What is the situation here? This is not the Department of State appropriation bill. When that bill came back to this Chamber there was not one item of legislation in amendments to that measure, which confirms the position I have taken that the conferees on that bill were jealous of the legislative rights of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Now we have an exigent condition confronting the country. General Crowder has been acting for a year or more as the special ambassador of the President to settle a very peculiar financial situation in Cuba. It is the opinion of the administration that he is the one person to continue that work and that he should continue in that position. The date of his retirement is approaching. If he is going to continue to function for the benefit of the administration of the country it is necessary that he be appointed ambassador. Is it ever claimed that an Army officer during his career, from the time he graduates from West Point and enters the service, is able to accumulate any great amount of this world's goods? I think no one will claim that. It is generally the rule that the administration is of necessity driven to appoint men of wealth to these ambassadorial positions, so that they may meet the expenses of the post out of their own possessions, which condition I deplore. We have here the case of a man who I assume is without any great amount of this world's goods, and it is proposed to raise the rank of diplomatic representative to Cuba to the same grade as that of Brazil, Chile, and the Argentine.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And Peru.

Mr. STAFFORD. And Peru. Is there anyone here who denies that the post of diplomatic representative to Cuba is as important as to those countries I have named? Now, it is proposed on a deficiency bill to provide this salary. I do not know why the administration has been unable to get any action from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. Legislation is not necessary; it is a matter of administration for the President to determine, save the coming to the House for the minor matter of providing the additional salary to this Army officer, who has given all the years of his life to the Government, to permit him to accept not a $12,000 position, but a position at $17,500—to permit him after his service as ambassador to receive the retired pay at three-quarters of his rank. That will be held in abeyance while he fills the post provided for in this amendment. It is and should be carried in the deficiency appropriation bill whether the Committee on Foreign Affairs had appropriating powers or not.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, one of the great customs of this House is that if there is any man who has had experience personally in matters that come up before the House he must not be allowed to discuss the subject. I have had a good deal of difficulty in getting any time, because I am laboring under the handicap of being, I guess, the only man in the House who has ever had any diplomatic service for his country. Naturally I feel a little interest in this matter. But, aside from the personalities of the matter, I want to suggest to you what value it is to General Crowder to be an ambassador instead of a minister. Not a bit on earth. It does not mean anything except that he goes in first to dinner. That is all there is to it. If he is an ambassador he will sit at the head of the table. Yes; but what difference does that make? If he goes to the foreign office he gets the same consideration whether you call him a minister plenipotentiary or an ambassador. There is not a particle of difference, and it does not help him either, except in social prestige. Now, social prestige does not mean a row of pins diplomatically. It is brains that count in any foreign capital. Social prestige does not really accomplish anything.

Now, you want to vote $5,000 and another title to this gentleman so that he can sit at the head of the table, but what does that amount to?

It has been suggested—the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] challenged anybody to dispute the necessity of this proposition. I do. There is not the slightest reason we should have an ambassador in Cuba. It is the custom for great Empires like Great Britain, great Republics like France, to be visited by an ambassador. Smaller countries by ministers plenipotentiary and envoys extraordinary, smaller countries by ministers resident, by diplomatic agents like we had in Cuba a little while ago, and all we need now. In these small countries, comparatively insignificant, there are certain things to be done.

Gentlemen, let us talk a little sense. I am quite sick and tired of this continual approaching Congress by little social intrigues that are disgusting to any man. Why should we spend $5,000 a year to help a man to social advantages? Nonsense!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is just a little unfortunate that the personal aspect of this matter has been emphasized. It is true that General Crowder has performed a very great service for his country in a number of very important capacities. He has performed a service of importance and value in Cuba. He is a man very highly esteemed there and probably capable of doing better service in Cuba than any other man under the flag. That is all true. But the purpose of raising our representation to Cuba to the ambassadorial rank does not grow out of our consideration for General Crowder. It grows out of the requirements of the situation. We certainly do not have more important relations with Peru, and yet we have considered it proper to have an ambassador to Peru. Belgium is one of the heroic nations of the world, and yet our relations with Belgium are neither as intimate or in some respects as important as those with Cuba. Cuba sustains a relation to us different from that of any other people. It is highly important that we shall maintain a dignified establishment there and that we shall be represented there by a man who stands in the first rank of representatives to that nation. Our representative there should have the rank, dignity, and authority of an ambassador. The President and officers of his administration have considered this matter carefully, not from the standpoint of the interest of General Crowder but from the standpoint of the interests of the country.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In other words, our representative in Cuba must in every sense sit at the head of the table.

Mr. MONDELL. By all means, that is important. Under the Constitution the power of appointment of an ambassador rests with the President. We are simply making an appropriation to enable the President to appoint an ambassador, if he sees fit to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois says that all we are doing is appropriating the money, that we are not creating the position. The position has not been created yet; the President has not sent in any name. We are, therefore, putting the cart before the horse, but the gentleman knows that those responsible for appropriating this money know that just as soon as the money is appropriated the name will be sent to the Senate and the $17,500 per year position will be created.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the Senate amendment.

There was no objection and the Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Cuba," in the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "And provided further, That the aggregate of all pay from all sources from the Government of the United States to any person appointed to the foregoing office under the permissive authority contained in the first and second provisos of this paragraph shall not exceed the annual rate of $17,500."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas) there were—ayes 59, noes 38.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. Upon suggestion of Members, I withdraw that on this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. That vote was on the Madden amendment. The motion to recede as amended should now be put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. MADDEN. We have already had a division.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I insist on the point of order of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is altogether too late.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONDELL. The House has proceeded with business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had ordered the Clerk to report the next amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. The House had proceeded with business.

Mr. BLANTON. I was trying to get a record vote on this proposition, and it was suggested to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was an amendment to an amendment and that we would later get a vote on the main question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, the Chair was not advised of that. The gentleman from Texas withdrew his point of order that no quorum was present and the Chair directed the Clerk to report the next amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I did it under a misapprehension, Mr. Speaker; but I ask for the yeas and nays on the main question. There has been no business transacted. I ask for the yeas and nays on the main question. It is always in order after I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had directed the Clerk to report the next amendment and the Clerk was proceeding to report it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Speaker hold that the yeas and nays are not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this motion, the Chair having declared that the motion was carried and other business having been proceeded with.

Mr. BLANTON I am sure the Chair wants to be fair and give the House a chance to pass on the question with a record vote.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair knows that I was trying to get a record vote upon the question.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas has no right to lecture the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not lecturing the Chair. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing to appeal from.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On what question?

Mr. BLANTON. On the question of whether we have a right to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a matter before the House from which an appeal can be taken. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 8: Page 16, after line 2, insert: "For Pauline G. Swaim, widow of Albert W. Swaim, late consul to Hamilton, Bermuda, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,500."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighteen Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 277 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to have the attention of the House for a moment. With respect to the question that arose prior to the point of no quorum being made, upon which we have just had a call of the House, the Chair asked the Reporter to read the record made upon the proceedings immediately preceding the vote upon the question then before the House. After hearing the record of what actually occurred, the Chair is convinced that as the record was made Members of the House might easily be misled or might misapprehend the exact nature of the question that was then being voted upon. According to the record, the Chair stated that the question was upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the Senate amendment. That being true, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or any other gentleman might easily misapprehend the nature of the question being voted on. While the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment was in the mind of the Chair, and evidently in the minds of some Members of the House, yet other Members might have misapprehended the question, and the Chair is inclined at this time to take the responsibility of stating that because of that possible misapprehension on the part of some Members of the House, the question should again be taken. The Chair assumes that responsibility and will again put the question. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again reported the motion of Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, and upon that question the gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. On this question 41 Members have arisen demanding the yeas and nays, 186 Members are present, and the yeas and nays are therefore ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 163, nays 105, answered "present" 2, not voting 159, as follows:

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman from Texas in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am not sure. I thought it was a three-ring call, and I believe my name was called before I got in, but I am not sure about that. I will not say I was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may be recorded as present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if it is entirely proper, I would like to ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings which antedated this vote in connection with this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the proceedings immediately preceding the taking of this vote be vacated.

Mr. MADDEN. The vote on this amendment previously taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after line 2, insert:
"For Pauline G. Swalm, widow of Albert W. Swalm, late consul to Hamilton, Bermuda, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,500."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House when Mr. Swalm died in the performance of duty as consul at Hamilton, Bermuda?

Mr. MADDEN. I have the record here—August 24, 1922.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was desirous of knowing whether it was recent and not some old account back years and years. The gentleman from Iowa, I believe, is interested in the matter, and it is also very meritorious.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after line 6, insert:

"CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

"The general accounting officers are authorized to credit Boaz W. Long in the settlement of his accounts as American minister to Salvador with the sum of $2,819.50, or such amount as they may find due on account of furniture and equipment purchased from him in Salvador for the legation building erected by the United States Government at San Salvador, for which an account in the above-mentioned sum has been approved by the Department of State under 'Contingent expenses, foreign missions, 1920.'"

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 9.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13696.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13696, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13696, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

For five commissioners, at $10,000 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $55,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I have looked over the hearings on the request of the Federal Trade Commission for a continuing appropriation, and have also examined the report of the commission. We are living in a time when economy ought to be practiced, I think, and I look to the members of this committee to give me some good reason for the continuation in office of the Federal Trade Commission. Certainly the report they make and the hearings before the committee, to my mind, do not justify the appropriation of $55,000 for their salaries or the further item of $850,000 for the support of the commission. I can not find that they have done a blessed thing of any use to this country. This is another example of once creating an office, always continuing it, and now is a good time, it seems to me, to know a little more about this commission and its activities or cease its appropriations and giving it a continual function. If between now and the 1st of July this board should go out of existence, I do not think it would mean a hardship to anybody nor any drawback to the welfare of the country, except that we will be deprived of the valiant service of 318 people now employed in the Federal Trade Commission drawing salaries, it is true, anywhere from $10,000 down, and that is about all I can see they do. There does not seem to be any complete account of any work they have accomplished. There is a very long report, and I do not blame the members of the commission for wanting to hold down easy positions and make as interesting report as they can. It does not amount to anything; they do not say anything, notwithstanding it does fill up a good many pages. I picked up yesterday's paper, for instance, and I notice that in what they claim to have been very important cases their findings were absolutely reversed by the decision of the Supreme Court. One was known as the Curtis Publishing Co. case in Philadelphia.

Their attitude and their efforts to prevent some work being done by that firm were absolutely nullified by the decision of the Supreme Court. All that they seem to do is to answer inquiries made of Congress and hamper opportunity of business in every way they can. Just what good any statistics that they offer in this report may be is a matter on which I would like to be enlightened. If I am wholly in error, of course, I would be very glad to vote for this appropriation; but, as I see it, I think it is a very useless burden upon the taxpayers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to read to the gentleman, if he will permit, a statement made by Mr. Murdock, the chairman of the commission, as to some things that they have accomplished within the last year.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only five minutes. Would the gentleman mind deferring that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman asked a question. I would be glad to answer him.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would be very glad to know. What page is the gentleman going to read from?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On page 76 of the hearings. I will ask for more time for the gentleman if the gentleman will permit me to read this.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In response to an inquiry he says:

Now, we have won in the last fiscal year some important cases in the superior courts. We won the Royal Baking Powder case, which was a case of flagrant misbranding, and so denominated by the courts. We won the Aluminum Co. of America case. The Aluminum Co. of America is practically dominant in its field. It absorbed a company at Cleveland. We ordered it to divorce this acquisition. The circuit court of appeals affirmed the order—the first decision, by the way, that has come down under section 7 of the Clayton Act. These companies are now in the process of dissevering. Other appeals of equal moment have been won.

Now, I submit to the gentleman that if the Federal Trade Commission had accomplished nothing more than that in the past fiscal year, it would justify the appropriation made for it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I differ with the opinion of the gentleman in this particular: I do not think there would be any reason for the promotion or the continuance of breaking the law by such companies as the Royal Baking Powder Co., even if the functions of this commission were in other hands. Mr. Murdock, in the same testimony, refers to the very important case of the Curtis Publishing Co., of which I have already spoken. He thought that he had a just case against the Curtis Publishing Co. I know nothing about the internal workings of that company. But nevertheless his opinion was absolutely turned down, as I said, and the judgment of the commission was reversed by the Supreme Court.

Of course, as I have already stated, a board like this, composed of five gentlemen, including Mr. Murdock, whom we used to know here as a prominent Member of the House, and who has been chairman of this board off and on since he left Congress, will naturally make out as good a case as they possibly can in their report. That is part of their business. That is what they are there for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I have one minute more, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the Members of the House will take pains to study the report that the board makes, I think I will be supported in my opinion that they aggrandize their position very largely and show very little object or reason for their existence. There is a list in the latter part of the report of complaints heard by them or existing before them. They are practically all on file. They do not get anywhere. They do not get any decisions. They do not stop anything being done, except that they disturb business arrangements of firms and corporations.

Now, it is a very simple thing for a person to write in to a bureau here in Washington and say that John Jones or Sam Smith is not doing his business in the manner in which he should. That is about all you have got to do to get your case before the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman has not received any complaint from his constituents to the effect that the Federal Trade Commission has been doing these things?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; some years ago I did. My attention was first called to it by a very prominent constituent of my district, to whom they tried to do that very thing. And that is one reason why I am disposed to watch just where this Federal Trade Commission functions. To my mind, it is a waste of expenditure and an increase of the number of employees to the extent of 318 beyond what there is any occasion for, so far as the welfare of the Government is concerned. Personally I would like to see the commission abandoned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any legitimate business that is objecting to the Federal Trade Commission and the work it is performing. It is one of the commissions which was organized for the purpose of serving the people and aiding legitimate business as against illegitimate business, or those concerns which would set at naught our anti-trust laws, if permitted to do so, and act in restraint of trade and destroy honest competition.

I do not know how I could better set forth what this commission has been doing than to read from the hearings as to some things it has accomplished in the last fiscal year in addition to what I had the opportunity of reading in the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. Mr. Murdock, who speaks for the commission as its chairman, says on page 76:

We have now pending in the commission seven great key cases. The first one on the list is Pittsburgh case. That is a practice in the steel trade which bases the price of rolled steel products on the Pittsburgh price plus the freight from Pittsburgh to the man who buys, no matter where the steel is made. It is an intricate, complex thing. Men are divided about it. The commission was divided on it, but a complaint was issued and that matter is now in process of trial. It is against the United States Steel Corporation and the United States Steel Corporation has Mr. Severance, who is the head of the bar association of the United States, and a battery of attorneys who are among the very best in the land. That issue is being fought out. That is one case. Another case in that list is the Bethlehem-Lackawanna merger. A majority of the commission challenged that merger as a restraint of trade under the law. The Bethlehem-Lackawanna people naturally have several learned attorneys in that case, and we are contesting it along short handed. Another case is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation case. The Famous Players-Lasky company, as you know, is a big corporation which produces and distributes movie films. It is a big concern. It covers the Nation.

The commission had reason to believe that it was violating the law and challenged it. Paul Cravath, with other attorneys, is representing the Famous Players-Lasky people, and such of our attorneys as we can spare for the work are handling it for us. We have in addition to that the National Biscuit Co. case. Its trial covered the Nation. It takes a lot of travel, because it seems that the conditions involved in the issue vary in the United States. The commission tried to avoid a nation-wide trial of that issue because we know how insidious this travel item of expenditure is in a Government bureau; but the other side insisted on taking the case across the Nation and trying the issue out by sections, and it is being tried out. The next is the Douglas Fir Exploitation and Export Co. case. Let me tell you about that issue. The Douglas Fir Co. is an association gotten together under the Webb-Pomerene Act. It is composed of many concerns that deal in lumber in the Northwest. Under the Webb-Pomerene Act they have a perfect right to get together for the purpose of export sale.

They are granted immunity in respect of export sale from the Sherman Antitrust Act, but after they got together the commission had reason to believe, and has issued a complaint to the effect, that they began to squeeze domestic competitors, using that power of lawful association for export to do it with. We challenged them. It is a big case and they are fighting it strenuously. We have attorneys tied up on that proposition. The Tobacco cases are equally important. You remember that the Tobacco Trust was dissolved by the Supreme Court, and the trust divided up into several parts. Among them you will remember was the American Tobacco Co. and the Lorillard Co. A Senate resolution directed the commission to make inquiry whether there was a combination on between the manufacturers of tobacco and the jobbers in the United States for the maintenance of the resale price, holding up the price of cigarettes, and so on. When our attention was called to that and we investigated it for the Senate, there appeared reason to believe that they were violating the law and we issued complaints against these various associations which appeared to be in conspiracy with this company or that company over the United States. Those cases are all going forward and as they go forward they call upon our small staff of lawyers.

Now, I sumbit, gentlemen of the committee, that there is no organization under this Government that has proven more diligent in the performance of its duties than the Federal Trade Commission, and, I repeat, I know of no business concerns in this country seeking to comply with the law who are objecting to the action of this Federal Trade Commission in the performance of its duty. And certainly in view of its work, a part of which is set forth in the statement of Mr. Murdock, the chairman, this appropriation is abundantly justified. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. TREADWAY. It was not a pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman. I moved to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including personal and other services, supplies and equipment, law books, books of reference, periodicals, garage rental, traveling expenses, including actual expenses at not to exceed $5 per day or per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4, newspapers, foreign postage, and witness fees and mileage in accordance with section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission act, $880,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$880,000" and substitute "$780,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 11, line 24, strike out "$880,000" and insert "$780,000."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 12 of the annual report of the Federal Trade Commission we find their summary of expenditures. For the fiscal year 1922 there was appropriated for them $955,000. They expended $858,000. Then there is a continuing item, unexpended balances of the Federal Trade Commission for the year 1921, $104,592, and for 1920, $158,472. At the top of this bracket is the phrase "amount available." I am inclined to think that is an error, on account of the manner in which this report is made. My understanding of the law is that these unexpended balances go back into the Treasury. If I am correct about that, this is an erroneous statement. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the two items for 1921 and 1920 are still available and in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission for the purposes of the commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are, for obligations that occurred during the fiscal year. I suppose that the amount is still available for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, the commission having on hand $275,000, I can not see why we need to appropriate so much.

If we can not do away with this useless board, can we not at least save some of their expenditures? They are to have here $955,000. I am asking that that be reduced $100,000 in view of the fact that there is available over $275,000 for the use of the board. Let us show some disposition toward curtailing the expenditures of this commission. Unless improvement is shown before another year I am confident there will be further efforts to do away with it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We listened very patiently to the presentation made by those representing this activity, and they made out a pretty good case for an increase. They asked for an increase from $880,000 to $1,000,000. We concluded to limit our recommendation to the amount recommended by the Budget.

Personally speaking, I have not had very much faith in the operations of this board. The trouble is that the thing started wrong. I came here when the whole administration was under Democratic control and when the head of this institution was a Democrat. He told me that much to his surprise when he came and took his position he found that instead of this being an activity for the purpose of encouraging legitimate trade it was by reason of its operations really an activity to retard legitimate business, and that unless its methods could be changed he proposed to get out of it, and he did get out of it pretty soon. I believe since that time they have changed the tactics of the commission, and that now they are doing that which is best for the good conduct of business.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the statement of the chairman, may I ask whether there was any direct change made in the organic law under which they could operate differently than they did at the time they began to function?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there is no change in the organic law. The trouble was that those who put the thing in motion started on the wrong foot.

Mr. TREADWAY. And that machinery is still the law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There was no fault about the law. The fault was in the administration of the law. This board is doing some very good things. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will find some concrete examples of some of the good things that they are doing. I have in mind one particular instance where a foreign concern was manufacturing out of long-staple cotton something that looked like silk, and they made contracts in this country, involving the expenditure of a lot of money, when it was discovered that the manufacture was a fraud. It was brought before the Federal Trade Commission and the whole business abrogated and the money refunded to the people in this country who had been fooled. I am of the opinion that these people are spending too much time on small matters, spending too much money on the number of men they allocate to prosecute cases and determine them in the courts, and I think we made some very valuable suggestions as to how they might curtail their expenditures, which the gentleman can see if he will read the hearings; but unless there is a direct attempt to repeal this law I do not think we should cripple them. They are doing much good, and it is possible for them to do great good if they will simply conform their activities to the intent of the law with reference to helping legitimate business and protecting legitimate business against those who are preying upon it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. What would be the gentleman's plan for transferring the activities of this board from that of meddling with and destroying business and turning it into a helpful activity to encourage legitimate business?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. By getting some great big business men at the head of the thing. [Applause.] I am not in sympathy with some of the gentlemen who are now in that institution. But it is wholly a matter of administration. There is nothing wrong with the organic law. Its intentions are good. Its purposes are good; and if we fail in those purposes it is because of the administration of them, and it is because of the men who are at the head of it. If we had great big business men at the head of this thing, whose purpose was to conserve the best interests of the business of this country, there would be no complaint about the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding, $20,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been impressed with what I have heard said in regard to the Federal Trade Commission. I was here when the law was passed creating the commission. It has been recommended by President Taft, and recommended upon the basis that owing to legislation like the Sherman antitrust law business was not free to operate and that it needed a governmental agency to advise it whether it was violating the law. All of us recall that the early prosecutions of the Sherman law very much disturbed existing business. This was put upon the basis that a group of men who know business and its needs would sit about a table where anyone who wanted to launch out into some new business, not knowing whether it would violate the law or not, might come to Washington and find out whether the proposal was in consonance with law; and the proposition for the Federal Trade Commission as originally presented on the floor of the House was that it was to be a helpful agency to the business of the country; and, so far as I know, no one ever thought that it would become a smelling commission looking into what it could find in the way of an excuse for persecution just because somebody had succeeded in business. It is not the law, it is not in violation of the purpose of the law, that are objectionable, but it is really expressed by the personnel—that if a business is prosperous, they want to find out why it is prosperous, and we have had a campaign where the activity was in line of prosecution rather than in the line of help. The question now is in the method of procedure—socialistic tendencies which wholly dominated the commission in its early days. Can tendencies to pester legitimate business be eliminated in the personnel? Otherwise it seems to me that the wisest thing to do is to entirely annihilate it. I have about come to the conclusion that that is the proper thing to do in connection with this particular agency. I have an impression that if every Member of Congress, knowing the purpose and creation of the law, sees how wide of the mark that purpose is being carried out, he would be inclined to discontinue it entirely. I wanted to say that much because I supported the measure originally with great enthusiasm, but I have been greatly disappointed at its outcome.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for the Federal Trade Commission, but I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio in referring to it as a "smelling" commission. I think it is doing a very great and essential service. I do not understand that the commission has adopted the practice of making, on its motion, these inquiries to which the gentleman from Ohio refers. It acts upon complaints submitted to it by business concerns and others interested in seeing that our trade laws are observed. It is only when these complaints are filed or information is brought to it that it makes the inquiries and starts the proceedings to which the gentleman refers.

This commission was authorized, and Congress passed the act, with the idea that it was to prevent restraints of trade on the part of big business. I wish to repeat that I do not know of any business in this country that is legitimate that has made any complaint against the Federal Trade Commission. It is only those business concerns which desire to violate the law and act in restraint of trade but who are prevented by this commission from carrying out their wishes that have made complaint against the Federal Trade Commission. It does make inquiries, some of which possibly were not contemplated under the law, but that is the fault of Congress. The Senate has adopted several resolutions and the House, if I mistake not, has adopted a number of resolutions calling upon the commission to make inquiries with respect to the action of certain big interests in this country, and it has complied and submitted its reports to Congress. One I read a while ago was in connection with the American Tobacco Co., and if the gentleman from Ohio had had the opportunity of seeing the voluminous report upon that matter I am sure he would not have made the criticism of the commission that he has just made, because it is not only a very interesting report but shows that the commission has gone to the bottom of the matter and made suggestions and recommendations of a kind to be helpful not only to the tobacco growers and tobacco interests but to the country. I understand it has been called upon to make an inquiry in relation to the Oil Trust.

If it be true—and I doubt it—that the commission is going out of its way to make inquiries, I think the House and the Senate ought to quit adopting resolutions calling upon it to do so. Certainly the Members of the Senate and the House who passed the resolutions felt that they were necessary and that the information called for would be helpful not only to Congress but to the country.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I think this matter is largely a matter of administration. The purpose of the law is a good one. The fault has been in the administration. Unfortunately, when it was first inaugurated those who were in charge of the administration took the wrong view of the purpose of the legislation. But there has been a great many good things come from the activities of this board. We are trying now to extend our foreign trade relations, and one of the best ways in the world to do that is through the honesty and integrity of the manufacturers. We have some gentlemen in this country who are imposing upon the Government. I understand we had a concern manufacturing a certain article to be sent to India, representing that it was of a certain character of manufacture when it was an entire fraud. And by reason of the intervention of this board that thing was stopped and the purchaser was refunded his money. We had another case where some manufacturing concern was putting out ladies' hose and putting a brand on them that they were wool, when, as a matter of fact, they were two-thirds cotton. Through the operation of the Federal Trade Commission that thing was stopped. It was done by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and it never would have been carried there had it not been for the Federal Trade Commission. It might have been said that it was one of those advertisements that was legitimate in trade as between the wholesaler and the retailer, and that might have been true. But the ultimate consumer—the public—was involved. The purchaser had a right to rely on the advertisement that appeared on the hose that they were wool hose, and the Supreme Court held that by reason of the fact of the public interest this was a fraud and ordered the injunction sought for by the Federal Trade Commission. They are doing many good things. If they would confine themselves to the things contemplated by the organic act, it would be a valuable agency to the country, and especially now when we are trying to establish the good name and good will of the United States in foreign countries.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana indicate the difficulty under which the Federal Trade Commission is working. There seems to be an impression, shared evidently by the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, that the activities of the Federal Trade Commission should be confined to the prevention of dishonest methods in business. In other words, he would have a Federal Trade Commission functioning as a sort of national police corps to punish violations of the Penal Code and the use of false weights and false measures; but that was not the intention of those who established the Federal Trade Commission. When it was created it was with the hope, in my opinion a false hope, that some agency of Government would be able to control the trusts and prevent the elimination of competition by organized capital. Whenever the Federal Trade Commission has made an effort in that direction its efforts have been thwarted and proper appropriations denied to it so as to make it powerless.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I think that the Federal Trade Commission did a very valuable work in its investigaton of the so-called Packers' Trust, and as a result of that work a consent decree was entered by which the packers divorced themselves from certain industries that the commission had indicated they were endeavoring to secure a monopoly upon, and work of that kind, I think, would undoubtedly justify the commission.

Mr. LONDON. It is extremely interesting that after every divorcement, after every severance, after every decree of dissolution, whether by the Federal Trade Commission or the Supreme Court, the stock of the companies affected always rises and the price of the marketed article goes up. We all know that to be the fact. You can not prevent large capital from crushing small capital, and you can not prevent the elimination of competition.

The principal object of competition is to drive out the competitor. In the race between one industrial group and another industrial group, the effort is for the strong to prevent the small group from existing. That is a legitimate and proper object. First you say go ahead, compete, let your competition be as intense as possible, as cruel as possible, provided you do not use dishonest means in the sense of false weights and false measures; and then when you succeed we will declare you illegal and put you in jail. Is not that an absurdity?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Would the gentleman destroy competition in trade?

Mr. LONDON. Competition is destroying itself with the certainty of the operation of a mathematical law. When you have a corporation of $20,000,000 capital in an industry and you have 10 or 15 or 20 men of a small capital of $5,000, these 20 men can not exist in the industry. They may operate on the outskirts but they will not affect the industry.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Whenever you destroy honest competition in trade, you destroy all initiative, you destroy all ambition, and bring about stagnation.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I have heard that before, but the truth is that in our basic industries there is no competition in fact. The truth is that our basic industries are managed and conducted by gigantic operations. That is the inescapable law of industry to-day, and you are flying in the face of an economic fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. How will the gentleman remedy the situation?

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman agree with me in respect to my analysis of the situation?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not agreeing with the gentleman in anything.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, the gentleman dodges my question as if he were a presidential candidate. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the gentleman know that he is not?

Mr. LONDON. I think the gentleman should be frank enough to say that he agrees with my statement of the situation, with my statement of the facts. The remedy will ultimately be the democratic control of those industries. Modern capital has performed a very important, historical mission for humanity. It has taught the world the wisdom and value of concentration, of coordination, of elimination of waste, of elimination of useless competition, and after it has taught mankind that lesson, then the next step is to be taken. The next step is the democratization of industry. Just as in the world of politics, we had hundreds of little municipalities and sovereignties and in the course of time the civilized world learned to consolidate these principalities and sovereignties into sovereignties governing large territories.

Mr. DICKINSON. What does the gentleman mean by democratic control of industry?

Mr. LONDON. I know that the word "democracy" is a word which is not understood on the Republican side, and just as little on the Democratic side, and I am not surprised at the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Have they not tried democratic control of industry in Russia?

Mr. LONDON. No; but they are striving toward democracy.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then, they have not the scheme perfected over there yet?

Mr. LONDON. No; I do not believe they have. If it took the 3,000,000 American rebels 12 or 15 years to establish a stable form of government it is a most natural thing that 180,000,000 people, occupying a territory covering one-sixth of the habitable globe, should take more than a generation in working out stable political and economic institutions, and they will be fortunate if they accomplish it within that time.

Let us get back to the subject of democratic control of industry. As I say, capital has performed an important function. Ultimately you will come to the question of whether the Nation's industries are to be controlled by aggregations of capital or whether the Nation is itself to control industry. Are we to have industrial feudalism, an industrial oligarchy, or industrial democracy? The method and manner of solving that problem is the task of statesmanship, and it must be measured by considerations and limitations of time and space. The suggestion should not be repudiated as an impossible thing, because it is the inevitable law of industry, it is the inevitable law of evolution from the simple to the complex, from the small to the large, from the sectional to the national, and ultimately, with the growth of civilization, to the international.

My quarrel with the conservative gentleman is that he is not conservative. I believe in conserving everything that is valuable in a civilization, but there are conservatives who are not content with that. They are the reactionaries, who want to restore the irretrievable past, who want to push us back instead of helping us to adapt ourselves to the requirements of modern industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., Government hotel for Government workers; for maintenance, operation, and management of the hotel and restaurants therein, including replacement of equipment, and personal services, $800,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate: Provided further, That within 30 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to deliver to the Housing Corporation without payment therefor, one 1-ton motor truck and one 2-ton motor truck.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of inquiring as to the expenditure for the maintenance, operation, and management of the hotels and restaurants under Government control. I notice there is an item of appropriation for this purpose, including replacement of equipment and personal services, $800,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the chairman whether or not there is any direct payment by those occupying these houses going into the receipts of the houses themselves, or whether the receipts are all credited to the general account? In other words, is this a debt or is it another method of bookkeeping only.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I stated yesterday of course there is nothing taken into consideration of the original cost of these buildings, but as compared with the appropriations made a year ago for the purpose of maintaining these Government hotels there was paid into the Treasury over and above the amount received for the purpose of their conduct, $86,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. So as an offset of the $800,000, on the basis of last year's receipts, this year you would be receiving some $886,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. Who receives the salary of $5,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The manager.

Mr. WATSON. The Government supplies an automobile, I presume?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there is no automobile.

Mr. WATSON. Last year the Government provided an automobile.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it was a truck.

Mr. WATSON. She does not ride in the truck?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, she may or may not; that is up to her.

Mr. WATSON. The Government provides apartments and maintenance for the manager?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and so far as the operation of that truck is concerned, I would like to get these trucks out of the War Department and get them to doing something. They are rotting away. We made an investment by reason of this provision concerning trucks whereby we will save the Government a whole lot of money. We are now paying $2 a dozen for laundering towels, and these people down there launder them for 50 cents a dozen.

Mr. WATSON. Who makes the rules and regulations governing the hotels, the manager or the Housing Corporation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is under the Housing Corporation. Of course, the Government hotel is only an incident to the Housing Corporation.

Mr. WATSON. I mean, does the manager prescribe the rules and regulations governing the hotels in regard to those who are the guests?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman who is in charge of the Housing Corporation, in cooperation with the manager of the Government hotel, does that thing.

Mr. WATSON. Does the gentleman consider the hotels have been successfully operated?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I think it has been a very great success.

Mr. WATSON. The committee should seriously consider that the Government is housing 1,800 women in hotel buildings made of wood and paper, combustible materials, with only one fire escape attached to each building.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. These buildings are segregated in a way, and they are two-story buildings.

Mr. WATSON. Many of them are three.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there are not any of them three stories.

Mr. WATSON. Three rows of windows indicate three stories.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may some time or another discover them underground——

Mr. WATSON. No; above ground.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are only two-story buildings.

Mr. WATSON. I am in favor of Government hotels for the women Government employees, but I am opposed to housing them in buildings that are not fireproof.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee how much property this Housing Corporation has on hand, the statement being made it is only $1,289,000? It seems to me we had much more than that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; we have got about that much; that is, if we take into consideration the equities they have in the contracts, it amounts to more than that; but they disposed of about $000,000 last year in property. Of course, some contracts were canceled.

Mr. MacGRECOR. You are going to get rid of this Housing Corporation next year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I hope to. We were unfortunate last year, because of the fact that most of this property—that is, the residential portion of it—was located in places where we either had a coal strike or railroad strike, and about 40 per cent of the contracts were forfeited. It is a pretty difficult matter, but I think they are getting along very well.

Mr. MacGREGOR. There is no statement, I notice, as to how much they turned into the Treasury out of sales?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, yes; there is a statement. They filed their statement; it is in the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations heretofore made and available for expenditure by the United States Housing Corporation shall be expended for the purposes for which appropriations are made herein.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss for a few moments some aspects of the exportation of coal from the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, some weeks ago I introduced in the House a bill, H. R. 12827, declaring an embargo on the exportation of anthracite coal for the period of the present national emergency. The United States is admittedly suffering from an extreme shortage of anthracite, the result of the shutdown for many months of the anthracite mines. Mr. C. E. Spens, who until January 1 was Federal fuel distributor, stated just before Christmas that "there are sections in this country that are suffering grievously." This is a matter of common knowledge. Every section of the United States which burns anthracite coal is now, in the midst of winter, struggling to overcome the hardships incident to a reduction of nearly one-half of the normal available supply. Not only is anthracite difficult for the householders to secure even in small quantities, but the shortage has had the usual effect of making the price almost prohibitive even when the coal is obtainable. Anthracite coal generally is selling to-day in the United States for $20 a ton or even more.

Why, under these circumstances, is it provident or even nationally permissible for the United States to send to Canada a very large part of this anthracite coal? We are told we can burn substitutes for anthracite. If we can, why can not Canada? Why should not the inconvenience of the coal strike and its consequences be transferred to some degree at least from the householders of America to those in foreign countries who seek the privilege of buying fuel from us?

I here present as a part of my remarks a table giving Department of Commerce figures of exports of anthracite and bituminous coal from the United States for October and November, 1921, and October and November, 1922.

Exports (long tons).	October, 1921.	October, 1922.	November, 1921.	November, 1922.
Total exports of anthracite	308,082	404,999	329,380	440,208
Exports of anthracite to Canada	302,609	399,763	320,247	433,721
Total exports of bituminous	1,330,304	1,729,425	1,078,806	1,618,037
Exports of bituminous to Canada	1,124,718	1,647,323	890,691	1,563,033

Our exports of bituminous coal to Canada for last October and November are thus rather more than 50 per cent larger than for the corresponding months a year ago, when there was no shortage. It will be noted that I do not propose to restrict the exportation of bituminous coal.

It will be further noted that the exports of anthracite coal for October and November last are about 33 per cent larger than for the corresponding months a year ago, when there was no shortage. It is with this phase of the situation that I feel deeply concerned and for which I see no adequate justification.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. According to the gentleman's figures they not only took care of their Canada customers, but let them have a very much larger amount?

Mr. ROGERS. That is what those figures indicate.

Mr. YOUNG. I presume these dealers would claim that they were under some obligation to take care of their regular customers; but it would seem that they had gone above that something like 50 per cent.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Covering the period of the decade from 1913 our average exports of anthracite coal have been about 4,400,000 tons per annum, or at the rate of 365,000 tons a month. Our exports per annum at the rate which prevailed last October and November would be over 5,000,000 tons a year, and for the two months in question they averaged 422,000 tons. These figures show that in these days of stringency and stress we are exporting more than in normal times, much more even than a year ago, which was the largest coal-export year in our history.

Furthermore, we are told that the present difficulty is largely one of freight-car congestion. The haul to Canada is a long haul. The tie-up of freight cars which results is one of the causes of the present shortage of deliveries. If the cars now being diverted to Canada were utilized in domestic deliveries there can be no doubt that at least a portion of our problem would be eliminated.

What about the prices in Canada? A dispatch in the Montreal newspapers of November 11 stated that the control price for anthracite in Ontario had been fixed at $15.50 per ton. It is a matter of common knowledge, based upon a scrutiny of Canadian newspapers and upon the testimony of vsitors to Canada, that about $15 per ton is the usual charge for American anthracite in the Dominion.

There may be places in the United States where anthracite, when purchasable at all, can be purchased for about this price. If there are such places, I do not know them. So far as my inquiry has gone, the usual United States price for anthracite is from $2 to $7 a ton more than that charged in Canada. Grant, if you like, that Canada, which pays the same in the United States for coal that we pay, is getting the benefit in its lower rates to consumers of an efficient control and distribution. This does not help the United States consumer, who must pay what he is charged and feels fortunate when he can purchase coal at any price. Such an explanation simply adds another count to the indictment against the manner in which the Federal Government or its subdivisions are handling the coal problem this winter.

What about the supply of American coal actually available in Canada? If a tradesman finds it desirable to advertise his wares, it is apt to mean that he has an abundance to supply all requirements and that he is fearful that without advertising he might not be able to dispose of his stock. A recent advertisement in Canada papers reads as follows:

Now landing American anthracite—egg, stove, chestnut, and pea.
R. P. & W. F. STARR (LTD.),
49 Smythe Street, 159 Union Street.

Another is even more specific:

HARD—COAL—SOFT.

Arriving immediately, all sizes American anthracite coal. We are now booking orders until shipment sold. Also American Hiawatha screened soft coal. Phone Main 3233. Coal department.
MARITIME NAIL CO. (LTD.).

These instances could be multiplied if a thorough search of the Canadian press were made. A dispatch in the Toronto Press last month states:

CANADA GETS COAL AHEAD OF MICHIGAN—PLAINT IS MADE BY FUEL ADMINISTRATOR, WHO BLAMES RAILWAYS.

(Special dispatch to the Globe.)

DETROIT, December 11.—While Detroit's receipts of anthracite thus far this winter have averaged daily less than one-third of the amount usually required for domestic consumption, a higher freight rate has given Canada considerably more than twice as much anthracite as has been shipped to Michigan.

This statement was made to-day by Charles F. Dunn, fuel controller for Wayne County.

From September 10 to November 21, he says, Michigan received only 3,947 cars, or 157,871 gross tons, of anthracite, while in the same period 10,100 cars, carrying 404,077 gross tons of anthracite, went into Canada via Buffalo and the Suspension Bridge.

The reason for the discrepancy, Dunn believes, is the anthracite tariff promulgated by the great anthracite-carrying roads, which gives them 32 cents a gross ton more on Canadian-bound anthracite than on Michigan shipments.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I understood the gentleman to state that the reason why the transportation companies desired to carry the coal to Canada was that they got more freight out of it. If the transportation company owned the coal mine, I do not think that would be an influential factor in it.

Mr. ROGERS. This is what Charles F. Dunn, fuel director for Wayne County, Mich., said on that point, and I will again read a portion of the dispatch that was printed in the Toronto press. He refers to the situation as to the quantity of deliveries going to Canada as compared with that going to Michigan. He says:

The reason for the discrepancy is the anthracite tariff promulgated by the great anthracite-carrying roads, which gives them 32 cents a gross ton more on Canadian-bound anthracite than on Michigan shipments.

I do not know whether or not that statement is true, and frankly I do not particularly care. The fact is that a very large proportion of the available anthracite supply of the United States has been going to Canada.

It is small wonder that American citizens along the border, who know the facts, because they see coal trains streaming across the border to Canada, are up in arms and bitterly resent the policy, or lack of policy, of the United States. The statement has been authoritatively made by one of the local fuel controllers of the United States that—

Canada is getting a great deal larger proportion of anthracite coal than any district in the United States.

The reason which he gives is that the railroads secure a higher freight rate when coal is shipped to Canada than when delivered in this country. I have also been officially informed that Canada is getting an extremely large proportion of the so-called household sizes of anthracite. Of course, United States consumers get correspondingly less of these sizes, which are the ones which they are accustomed to use in their house furnaces. In a household which has a base-burner stove the difficulty of substitution is extreme.

We want to be neighborly, we are told. Of course we do. But it is a nice thing to have neighborliness reciprocal.

Canada is a splendid neighbor of the United States. No one can indorse and approve more highly than I do the friendliness of the relations between the United States and Canada. I hope those friendly relations will never be interrupted, as they have not been interrupted in a history of over a hundred years.

But remember that Canada has not in the past hesitated to declare embargoes on the exportation to the United States of the pulp wood which we need as the ingredient in our news print paper. She has even declined to discuss this through the medium of the commission which Congress has proposed. We have no thought of retaliation in now suggesting an embargo on the exportation of anthracite. But we can reasonably suggest to Canada that just as for her domestic well-being she thought it expedient to forbid the exportation of pulp wood so we, for our domestic well-being, find it expedient to take a leaf out of her book and to forbid the sending out of the anthracite which we so sorely need at this time.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has not this Congress recently passed legislation which would empower the administration to deal with this very situation where it was found that the exportations out of this country handled by the railroads were far in excess of what ought to be allowed before domestic needs were satisfied?

Mr. ROGERS. I think there is power in the Executive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I should like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the Executive has power to deal with this matter. My notion of what the policy of this Congress ought to be is this, and that is the primary purpose for my rising this afternoon: I think we ought to do two things. I think we ought to declare an embargo on the exportation of anthracite coal for the period of the present emergency; and in order that there may be no doubt about the power of the Executive in future emergencies I think we ought to give the Executive the power to declare embargoes as crises arise in the future, in the case of both anthracite and bituminous coal. I think the authorization, in the latter instance, should not continue for more than a period of six months unless an extension is recommended by Congress.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. I am curious to know and I should like to ask the gentleman to express an opinion as to why shipments are made extensively into Canadian territory when the price received there is less than in the United States?

Mr. ROGERS. I think the reason why the price paid by consumers in Canada is less than in the United States is in most cases to be found in the fact that Canada has a more efficient fuel distribution system and so keeps down its prices to the consumers there. My understanding is that both Canada and the United States pay the same price at the coal mine whether the coal is destined to Canada or to the United States, and that the saving represented is because Canada has grasped the nettle of distribution firmly and sees to it that not more than a fair profit intervenes between the coal mine and the Canadian consumer.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there any benefit to be derived to the dealer here in shipping to Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. I know of no such benefit to the coal operator unless, by some such arrangement as is suggested by the Michigan fuel official, the railroads get a somewhat larger charge for hauling it to Canada and therefore find it to their interest to arrange for shipments to Canada rather than to the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, there is no question but what the demand on the part of the consumers of the United States would be sufficient to take all that Canada receives and more too.

Mr. ROGERS. There is no doubt of that. I do not think that will be questioned anywhere.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have been interested in this proposition, as the gentleman knows, and I want to know who is getting the truth. Of course, it is the hardest thing in the world to get any truth about the coal situation.

Mr. ROGERS. I am trying to give the House some truth. I do not profess to be able to give the House the whole truth on this very important question.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I was informed by the Fuel Administration that Canada ordinarily receives a million and a half tons of anthracite coal from the United States and that it would receive this winter only 700,000 tons.

Mr. ROGERS. Whatever the fact may be as to the yearly exportation of anthracite, the fact remains that for the two months of last October and November alone we exported over 825,000 tons of anthracite to Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Five minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman tell the committee why the Fuel Administration has not taken up this question and regulated it, as it certainly has the power, given it by Congress a few months ago?

Mr. ROGERS. I have read in the papers within a week or two that there had been some curtailment in recent shipments to Canada. As to the extent of that and as to the truth of it I am not informed. I have confined myself in my remarks to the latest two months for which we have official information in the statistical bureau of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. DOWELL. One other question. Has not the Fuel Administration full power now to stop all shipments out of the United States if it desires to do so?

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding is that it has that power.

Mr. DOWELL. Then why should Congress take any further action, so far as granting authority is concerned, because the authority has already been granted by the legislation already had?

Mr. ROGERS. My proposal is that we should declare an embargo now upon exportations of anthracite during the present crisis, and that we should give general authority to the Executive to deal with future crises. It may be that there is some such authority vested in the Executive now, but I want to be sure that he has explicit authority to deal with future crises. I want Congress to deal now with the present crisis.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words the situation is such that the gentleman believes that immediate action should be taken.

Mr. ROGERS. Immediate action taken now and not when hot weather comes. I have seen no evidence that any drastic action has been taken along the line I suggest to curtail the emergency.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the matter been taken up with the Executive?

Mr. ROGERS. I took it up with Mr. Spens, who has just left the Government. He has both written and said to me in substance that he thought we ought to be neighborly. I want to be neighborly, but I think there is some obligation due to the people who reside in the United States as well as in Canada.

Mr. DOWELL. Perhaps if you can get the neighborly spirit out of the question you can get action.

Mr. ROGERS. I have not heard of the case having been presented in just this way, and I thought it might be for the interest of Congress to know what the facts were as they actually exist.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the inquiries made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] he refers to the commission. May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are two bodies dealing with coal. There is the Fuel Commission and the Fact Finding Commission. There are two distinct bodies.

Mr. ROGERS. The Fact Finding Commission has no jurisdiction in a matter of this kind.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask one more question in view of my colleague's intimate knowledge of the affairs through the Foreign Affairs Committee? Does he see that any diplomatic difficulty can arise in the establishment of an embargo?

Mr. ROGERS. No. It is purely a domestic question, just as Canada has proven it to be when she declared an embargo against exporting pulp wood to the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has not some question been raised by the distributors upon the ground that there might be some diplomatic trouble?

Mr. ROGERS. Not that I have heard. It has always been put upon the "neighborly" basis.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman will recollect that the commission referred to to investigate and report is to make its initial report to Congress on the 15th day of January. I respectfully suggest that he ask the commission to report on the phase of the matter that he has been referring to this morning.

Mr. ROGERS. I think that is an admirable suggestion.

It has been suggested that it would be unwise in the long run for us to withdraw from Canadian markets American anthracite, on the theory that when normal production was resumed we might find that the Canadian markets had necessarily looked elsewhere for their supply and were no longer open to the American commodity. There are two answers to this argument. The first is that Canada, as a loyal portion of the British Empire, has of late been turning more and more to Wales for its supply of coal, and that this tendency is likely to increase rather than to decrease. Thus the Canadian market for anthracite is not a thing upon which we can safely depend, whatever we do now.

The second answer has been furnished me by a member of the Federal Fact Finding Commission, which was created under authority of Congress within a few months. This gentleman has called my attention to the fact that anthracite is a disappearing commodity; that no one knows how long the present veins can be worked or whether new veins are likely to be discovered; and that year by year as we go deeper and deeper into the ground, mining of anthracite becomes more costly and difficult. He suggests that for the national welfare our coal, like our forests, should be conserved in every possible way. He argues that a sound conservation policy for the Nation requires not merely a temporary and emergency embargo on anthracite but a permanent barrier against its going forth to other countries.

To my mind it is almost too clear for argument that every consideration of national well-being requires, first, the declaration of an immediate embargo upon the exportation of all anthracite for the period of the present emergency at least, and, second, that we should put into the hands of the President the power to declare an embargo at any time of stress which may develop hereafter upon the exportation either of anthracite or bituminous coal. Every nation is bound to husband its necessaries of life. The people of America will not be indefinitely patient as they see themselves denuded of the coal, which is essential to their comfort and prosperity—even to their very lives. We are fond of our Canadian neighbors. We prize their friendship. Only in the last resort would we cause them inconvenience. But, as I have shown, Canada will not suffer, for she can continue to acquire freely the bituminous coal of the United States as well as Welsh coal. I urge upon the Congress the consequence of taking early and vigorous action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

[Mr. ROGERS had leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 1, 1914, $1,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee how much more will it cost to complete the valuation of the railroad properties. We have expended nearly $24,000,000, and the railroads $60,000,000. How long will it take to complete the valuation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let me say to the gentleman that, as I stated the other day in general debate, those in charge of the valuation business contend that if they could have $280,000 more they would complete it by the 1st of July, 1924; in so far as the valuation is concerned this work will never be ended. It will require a constant and continuous valuation to keep it up to date.

Mr. WATSON. That is the question I intended to ask. If the Government fails to continue the valuation year by year, then very shortly the valuations now acquired will be worthless.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; under the plan they have they propose to keep on with the valuation by keeping track of the deterioration and all the waste. They claim that they have a scheme whereby from year to year they can keep track of the ever-present valuation as to the rolling stock, the roadbed, and the real estate holdings, and so forth.

Mr. WATSON. I notice in the hearings that papers concerning the valuations are now placed in jeopardy by reason of being filed in buildings not fireproof.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is true, and that has reference not only to the papers relating to this valuation but to other papers containing the most valuable records in this country.

Mr. WATSON. Why is it that the Government fails to make appropriation to provide fireproof buildings so as to preserve information that has cost millions and millions of dollars to acquire?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have been advocating some sort of a building, an archives building, or a documents building, whereby we might preserve these valuable papers, but it is not the province of this committee to do that.

Mr. WATSON. It will not be done this year, perhaps not next, or the next.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There will be some of these days. We have the most valuable records that the Government possesses, to which reference has to be made from day to day, in the Treasury Department, and they are scattered through 27 places, some in cellars, some in garrets, and all without any fire protection at all.

Mr. WATSON. It seems that some one should be making an effort.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, there has been effort made.

Mr. WATSON. Then why has it not been successful?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because of the slow progress we have in doing those things. We ought to have an archives building. We have a general accounting office, which is the direct agency of Congress, with 1,500 employees now scattered around in more than 30 different offices in the city of Washington. They ought all to be gathered together somewhere in a building adjacent to Congress, but it has not been done.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the subject just brought to the attention of the committee by the chairman of the subcommittee is one that I think should engage not only the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds but the attention of the entire Congress. This policy of parsimony which the Congress has been indulging in since the armistice is, I believe, a false policy of economy. Sooner or later these wooden-shack structures called office buildings, which were erected in the stress of the war, will become so worn out, so beyond any possibility of repair, that it will be economy to scrap them rather than to continue to make repairs upon them.

Before the war it was the policy of the Government to encourage private interests to erect private office buildings and to rent them. It was more economical then to pay to private capital the small rental which was asked for these private office buildings than to have the Government erect ornate office buildings. The annual return on the bonded investment would have been greater than the rental which the Government was required to pay in rental of private office buildings. That condition does not obtain to-day. The value of real estate has gone up so that the rentals exacted by the private interests are twice those asked before the war. Let me give an instance. The Department of Labor Building was erected about five years ago especially for the use of the Government, and was rented by the Government at a charge of 34.6 cents per square foot for all available space. The Department of Justice Building was rented at nearly the same figure. The latter rental has been renewed recently at a figure twice as much.

We have one or two very serviceable modern Government buildings in Washington, as, for instance, the building known as the Arlington Building, given over largely to the activities of the Veterans' Bureau, where the space is utilized economically, and then there is also the Department of the Interior Building, erected at a cost of $2,000,000, which to-day would cost double that amount to erect.

In these shacks in the Potomac Park very valuable records are stored. Take, for instance, the amortization section of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. There are statistics piled up there in those wooden shacks in quarters used by clerks which are unfit for human habitation during the very hot days of summer. Men and women can not be expected to work under those conditions in the sultry days of June, July, and August. We get no return comparable to the work done by our clerical force in the permanent buildings like the Department of the Interior and the Veterans' Bureau Buildings. The records in those temporary buildings can not be duplicated. Hundreds of millions of dollars for the Government are involved in the records there awaiting inspection to determine how much a large corporation should pay upon its return from the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, to date. This policy of not doing anything but just holding back and waiting for the day to come is false economy. We have seen that often manifested in the years gone by. We have held back and held back until the deluge came, and then the Congress would appropriate a large sum of money. The reasonable policy would be each year to erect some one Government building, set aside so much money for private office structures for the accommodation of our departmental work and our growing activities, so as to ultimately relieve the conditions existing in these temporary wooden structures, the life of which can not be more than 10 years, so that the various departments can move in and take possession of proper quarters as these temporary buildings become no longer serviceable to the Government.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I agree with what the gentleman says. What I am concerned about is why we do not start the archives building, which seems to be the immediate necessity, which was provided for before the war. We have just been drifting along and nothing definite has been done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, the square facing the White House Lot, which is owned by the Government. Nothing is being done. Drawings were prepared years ago for the erection of buildings. They were sent to the proper committee of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. And instead of the committee going ahead with some reasonable, economic plan, they bring in some stupendous proposition involving such a huge amount that it is not within reason to adopt it, whereas if they would bring in something reasonable it would be much better. This Government can afford to spend $5,000,000 a year for these buildings in the District, which are now much needed and will be more needed presently in a few short years to come, when these temporary structures become no longer serviceable.

Mr. FESS. Some time ago I made inquiry of the fire department in the District as to the number of fires here in which Government property had suffered. There were over 200 since 1850, three of which involved almost total loss of records.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recalls the fire in the Census Building with damage which cost us thousands of dollars to restore. The records in the amortization section are worth millions of dollars. A person may throw a lighted match or a cigarette among those papers, and they would be gone in a few minutes.

Mr. WATSON. Does not the gentleman recall the fires in the Patent Office, where valuable records were destroyed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are a number of instances.

Mr. WATSON. And if the gentleman is in favor of fireproof structure for records, is the gentleman not in favor of having fireproof houses where the women workers live, as in these Government hotels?

Mr. STAFFORD. The other day I took the floor in advocacy of Government dormitories for those domiciled down here on the Plaza. If the gentleman will read the RECORD, he will find my view on that subject. Usually the gentleman is present to hear everything that is going on on the floor.

Mr. WATSON. I am sure it will be worth reading if the gentleman said it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 1, after the figures "1914," strike out the figures "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,280,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the current appropriation for the valuation work of the Interstate Commerce Commission is $1,300,000, and the Bureau of the Budget estimated $1,000,000 for the ensuing fiscal year. The Committee on Appropriations has followed that recommendation and has carried $1,000,000 in the present bill. The representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as shown by the hearings, came before the committee and strongly insisted that $1,280,000 be granted.

I do not take the floor to criticize for a moment the Committee on Appropriations. I do not often find myself advocating a larger appropriation than that recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, nor do I find myself often voting for a larger amount than the amount carried in the bill. However, I have read these hearings very carefully, and it seems to me that it would be very doubtful economy, in fact no economy at all, to cut the valuation appropriation down to $1,000,000 for the coming fiscal year.

Now we have got $24,000,000 already invested in the work. I am not here to say that the work has been economically done; I am not here to argue upon that proposition at all, but we have gone too far with it to abandon the work, and certainly no man who is familiar with the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission—and that includes all the Members of the House—certainly no one will contend that their duties can be anywhere near properly discharged without the commission being in possession of information as to the valuation of the carriers. As stated by me yesterday, there are but three ways the commission can get the valuation of the 250,000 miles of railroad in the United States. One is to guess at it; just make a pure guess. Another is to take the statement of the carriers as to the value of their respective lines, and a third is for the commission itself to ascertain the valuation. Now, of course, Congress took the sensible view that the latter method was the only one to follow. That is why the act of 1913 was enacted. Commissioner Lewis on page 223 of the hearings makes this statement, and I hope the Members will give heed to this language:

We will suffer great disability in carrying on this work if our request for $1,280,000 is cut to $1,000,000. I think and honestly believe, as far as the completion of this work is concerned, it will make a difference of five years. But, more serious than that, is that we will inevitably lose some of the men who are vital in bringing this work to a conclusion.

Now again, Commissioner Lewis, after being interrogated by Mr. WOOD of Indiana, made this statement on page 226 of the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK (continuing reading)—

Mr. LEWIS. But on the 1st day of July, 1924, we will have issued all of the underlying engineering, accounting, and land reports; we will have issued practically all—probably all, but practically all—of the tentative valuation reports. There will be 1,130, all told, of which 306 are served to-day.

That is to say, 306 of these tentative valuations are now complete. There will be 1,130 in all.

That is a big job ahead of us; we will have to hold hearings on three or four hundred of those tentative valuation protest cases. We will have handed down as a commission the controlling valuation decisions. That is what we have mapped out up to July 1, 1924, and I am willing to be held for it, too, if given the $1,280,000.

Mr. WOOD. Suppose you only get $1,000,000. Then, what will happen?

Mr. LEWIS. We will probably be able to complete the underlying reports; that is, the engineering, land, and accounting reports. We will not be able to issue all of the tentative valuation reports; we will not be able to do the work of policing and checking and bringing up to date the reports of the carriers, so that we can have for a general rate investigation or, in the consolidation of railroads, the valuations as of date. We will not be able to do the work of surveying values for recapture purposes; we will not be able to value the intangible property.

Now, Members will understand by recapture purposes the commissioner refers to that part of the act of 1920 which provides that any carrier earning more than 6 per cent upon the valuation fixed by the commission shall owe one-half of the excess to the Government and pay it into a revolving fund. I have no doubt there will be litigation upon that proposition, because when it was before the Interstate Commerce Committee very able briefs were filed.

Some of the carriers contested the constitutionality of a provision of that kind. Also some able briefs were filed affirming the constitutionality of the provision. My own view is, if I be permitted to venture an opinion, the provision is constitutional. No doubt the question will be submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it will be necessary for the Interstate Commerce Commission to have accurate information as to the valuation to be used in any such suits.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I was about to suggest to the gentleman that litigation has already started.

Mr. BLACK. I presume so.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Suit has been filed in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas testing the constitutionality of the provision to which the gentleman has just referred, which is section 15-a of the transportation act.

Mr. BLACK. It is my understanding that the commission has ascertained that some 43 railroads in the United States will be called upon to make payment under section 15-a. I trust the commission will be successful in getting the money, and I want to back them up in their efforts to do so.

Mr. Lewis further said:

If we do those things, it will be at the sacrifice of getting out the underlying reports. I mean that if we go ahead and make the investigations for recapture, and the work in the matters of mergers and consolidations, it means we will not get out those underlying reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLACK. I hope that the additional appropriation will be granted. I am convinced it is badly needed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the information afforded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] in reference to this proposition. It is one of the items which has received very careful consideration by your subcommittee. I know that when we stop and consider the amount of money that has been expended in attempting to place the valuation upon the railroad property of the United States and the great amount of time that has been employed in doing what they have done we can not help but feel that there has been either a very great mistake in judgment or else there has been an imposition practiced on this Congress. This thing, as has been stated, commenced in 1913 with an original appropriation of $5,000,000 with the promise that it would be done in two years. It has worn its weary way along for very nearly 10 years. We have expended in round numbers, practically, out of the Government Treasury $24,000,000. The railroads contend that they have expended very nearly $70,000,000 in doing this work. The work is not now complete, and according to the testimony of Mr. Lewis—and I have the highest possible regard for him personally; he is from my own State, and I admire him, and I know that he would not misrepresent anything intentionally—but notwithstanding all this, in view of the testimony in this case that this work will never be completed, I think we are well justified in following the advice of the budgetry, which made the recommendation for a million dollars for this purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If from the investigation the gentleman has made he does not think since Mr. Lewis has been put in charge of this work that he has actually speeded up the work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that is true; I do not think there is any question about that thing, but I believe that we can help Mr. Lewis in the expedition of this work by restricting in a little measure the amount of this appropriation.

He is doing pretty good work, and we want to encourage him to do some better work.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What was the estimate for the work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The estimate made by the Budget was $1,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What was the original request that went to the Budget?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. One million two hundred and eighty thousand. They are asking for that, and the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is to increase the appropriation by $280,000.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Has the commission found it difficult to determine the physical basis of valuation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know how difficult it has been found to determine that.

Mr. LONDON. What elements enter into the determination of physical valuation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So many things enter into the determination of the physical valuation that it would take more time to describe them than it would take to consider this bill. There are differences in different localities, in different sections. There are different valuations of real estate, different activities of railroads, different carrying capacities, different earning capacities. All those things enter into this problem.

Mr. LONDON. Why should the railroads have expended $70,000,000 in acquiring this information? Have they not all this data already?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have spent this $70,000,000, I expect, as a matter of defense in protecting their interests, and partially in aid of the commission. The act authorizing the valuation of the railroads required them to cooperate in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, as I stated, this valuation business will never be completed. We were told last year that the field work was done. Now we understand that there are some isolated cases where there yet remains some of that field work to be done. I expect that is true, and it will occur and recur with the passing years. If this valuation is of any consequence at all it must be kept current. So that I say this work of valuation will never entirely cease, so that whether they complete this work entirely next year or do not, the matter is not of vital importance. They may or may not do it. I believe, and your committee believes, that they may do it, so far as it is possible to do it, and bring it up with what will then be current, with the appropriation of $1,000,000. Now, if that be true, why not save this extra $280,000? If it is not possible it will simply cause a delay for a little time, and we have had nine years of delay already in this work.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What does the gentleman say about the contention made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] that this will to some extent disrupt the organization?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will not disrupt the organization. I think the organization will be on hand. They have reduced their overhead, and I think we are to be congratulated that that is true. At one time they had 1,582 men and women employed in this valuation work. The number has been reduced to something over 500. That organization will not be disrupted to any considerable degree. The provision we have made will keep their organization intact. It is not a question as to whether or not the organization that they now have will be disrupted. Nothing in this bill will disrupt that organization. The question is whether the organization will do this work in that time. I think they can do it, and I want to give them a chance to do it. We shall not have lost anything if they fail.

Mr. Lewis, for whom I have the highest possible regard, was asked this question by me:

> Do you think if we give you $1,250,000 this work will be completed by the 1st of January, 1924?

Mr. Lewis answered that he wanted to go on record in reference to this appropriation. He said:

> I want to go on record on that, so that you can turn to it in a year from now. But this work will never be completed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Did he explain the thing that the gentleman has so well explained to us, that it is necessarily a continuing work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is true. I will tell you of another thing that will follow just as surely as day follows night: There is going to be a demand—and there is some reason for that demand—from every State in the Union that this activity with reference to the valuation shall be so conducted that there shall be a segregation of the valuation of railroad properties allocated to the different States. They are all jealous of their jurisdiction. They are all jealous of their taxing rights. They are all desirous of having this information, and the man who represents most of the railroad commissions of the States came before us and said that the most vital part of this valuation scheme would lie in the fact of its being kept current, and that it would be necessary to segregate this thing and allocate to the different States the respective values of railroad property within the borders of their own States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. How large an organization will be necessary, if they keep up this work, to keep it current?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a matter of opinion. I would not want to prophesy how large it will be. But I believe they can complete the general work with this $1,000,000. If they can not, why we have lost nothing in the attempt to try to keep them within that limitation.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. When the gentleman states that this work will never be completed he uses that language, as I understand, in the sense that the valuation will have to be kept up current? But he does not mean that the tentative valuation which the commission has fixed can not be completed in coming to a final determination of what the values are. Then as time goes on they will continue revising those figures to keep pace with the time, and there will be some fluctuations in those values? Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS.

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of a research laboratory, known as the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia; in all, $270,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed $42,000.

Mr. TILSON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention at this point to a statement of Doctor Walcott, the very able chairman of the national advisory committee for aeronautics. Doctor Walcott's statement is found on page 128 of the hearings. In the course of the statement he uses the following language:

> Most of the accidents that are occurring to-day, or a large proportion of them, arise from the fact that this—> is a free-for-all game. We have no law covering aeronautics. Any man can take any kind of airplane into the air and do whatever he pleases with it. You can not operate a tugboat or a motor boat unless you have a license, and you can not put it into the water unless you have had it inspected, but a man can take any sort of aircraft, which belongs to an almost undeveloped art, and do as he pleases with it over your property, over the city, or anywhere else. A bill upon that subject has passed the Senate and has been in the House for many months. I simply call attention to that, because it is a fundamental thing, and it does seem that there should be some regulation of this aircraft proposition.

He refers to flying—

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this testimony of Doctor Walcott in order to draw the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that there is legislation pending on this subject now, which I hope will be considered by the House before the end of the present session.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the number of accidents that have resulted by reason of the lack of regulatory measures designed to provide travel ways in the air?

Mr. TILSON. No; I can not give the statistics, but there are more accidents of this kind than there should be, and they are destined to become still more numerous as time goes on, unless something is done to provide some sort of inspection and rules of the road for the air.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to have regulations restraining the conduct of flyers in the air, and to determine whether they shall engage in these aerial devil flights which sometimes are perpetrated even by persons occupying high official position?

Mr. TILSON. No; that is not necessary. These persons "occupying high official positions," referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin, can probably take great liberties with their own lives without any serious danger to the remainder of the public. [Laughter.] The rights of the public are the matters with which we are most concerned. Even in the case of automobiles we have speedways and other places where automobile races may be conducted at a rate of speed that we should not permit on the public roads or in the streets of the city. It is for the regulation of ordinary flying and not dare-devil stunts or anything of that sort that I think we should legislate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not think the gentleman would believe in the paternalistic policy of regulating the conduct of men either on land or in the air. I did not think he believed in that sort of sumptuary inspection that has become so unpopular in connection with the enforcement of one certain branch of the Government service.

But I rose to state to the gentleman that the hearings of the officials of the Army Air Service disclose that accidents in flying do not come from the use of airships in the ordinary flights but result almost exclusively because of attempts to perform aerial stunts, such as hairbreadth escapes around the Dome of the Capitol and the Washington Monument, and the like.

Mr. TILSON. What the gentleman says may all be true and important, but it seems to me that the most important thing is to provide for the safety of the public generally rather than to take care of the dare-devils. There are not so many of those to deal with, and while all human life is precious, their lives are no more important than the lives of others.

Mr. STAFFORD. I fully agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman from Connecticut referring to one of our colleagues?

Mr. TILSON. Perhaps my allusion was somewhat too veiled for the gentleman to notice it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman spoke of dare-devils.

Mr. TILSON. As to those persons occupying high official position who take such unusual delight in being up in the air, I indicated in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the preservation of their lives was possibly not a matter of greater interest to the general public or of graver concern for the general welfare and perpetuity of the Republic than the proper protection of the lives of ordinary individuals. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WASON. I ask that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Connecticut be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, this matter was brought to my attention very forcibly a short time ago by an accident that occurred down in Florida, where a man was operating one of these machines for hire, taking up persons who were willing to pay the price, carrying them about in the air for a while and safely landing them again—if nothing happened. In this case something did happen.

As I now recall, this man was taking four gentlemen up to give them a ride; his machine fell and they were all killed. If his machine had been inspected, or if he had been required to have his machine in proper order before it rose, the lives of these persons would not have been taken. This is a single instance. It could be many times duplicated.

I think the time has come and that aeronautics has arrived at such a stage in its development that we ought to pass some legislation requiring some sort of an inspection, at least of those machines which take passengers up into the air with such great risk to their lives.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the gentleman believe that legislatures have done enough mischief on land and sea without extending their activities into the air?

Mr. TILSON. Legislatures, I suppose, are necessary——

Mr. LONDON. Evils.

Mr. TILSON. I shall leave the omission caused by the interruption for the gentleman from New York to fill. We must have legislatures under our form of government, and this is one of the fields which I think they may well enter upon, even to the elimination of some of the other fields that have been occupying more than their share of legislative attention.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee as to how this $270,000 carried in the paragraph is to be expended, particularly as to whether it is for supplies and for the purchase of materials or whether it is for overhead?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is all combined together. A very small proportion is expended for the purpose of increased personnel. Much of it is for the purpose of experimentation. Some of the experiments seem to be rather costly, and some are not. As I said yesterday, we are building now under the production of this United States Commission a lighter-than-air machine that is to cost more than $2,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the appropriation out of which that machine is being built?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is under the Navy or the War Department—either one or the other. I will call the gentleman's attention to some things they are doing. They are investigating to determine the pressure distribution over the envelope of a C class airship when the airship is being maneuvered at different air speeds and in different atmospheric conditions. That is one of the things they are doing. Whenever we discover the art of balancing a flying machine, then we will have perfected the machine that will have a minimum of accidents. Much is being done in that direction in the supervision of this commission. We sometimes think when we see a fellow making tail spins, head dives, and whirligigs that he is doing a foolish thing in taking chances. That, to a casual observer, is one of the ways that accidents are caused. But all these things have their scientific value, and it is these very things that this advisory board are determining in relation to the strength of the machine, its weakness, and any resistance to the carrying power, and they are trying to get at the unsolved problem of balance. You know the fellow who first got the idea of a flying machine got it from a buzzard in the air that did not seem to make any movement of his wings and yet maintained his balance. From that idea the flying machine was evolved. Now, whenever the human mind gets what the instinct of the buzzard now has with reference to balancing, then we will have a perfect machine.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Germans have discovered it in the form of a gliding airship.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, if the Germans have discovered it, we will get it pretty soon. I have faith that the human mind can beat the buzzard——

Mr. STAFFORD. It can in some things. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is an interesting subject. When this board was first established I was prejudiced against it, as I am against all new boards.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is this located?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In Langley Field. Now, here are some more things that they are doing. They are investigating the pressure distribution over the rudders and fins when these controlled surfaces are in their normal, intermediate, and extreme positions. They are investigating the effect of lateral controllability of a biplane of variation of the dihedral angle. That is an angle which the gentleman knows nothing about, nor do I either. They are investigating the comparative stability and controllability and maneuverability of the SE–5, the Fokker D–VII, the Spad VII, and the MB–3.

Mr. STAFFORD. The investigation work which the gentleman has just narrated is being done by the Army. The gentleman has proceeded far enough to convince me that there is duplication of activity. During the general debate I made some observations that if there was any one activity where the experimental work of the Army for which we appropriated for the fiscal year three-quarters of a million dollars, and next year it may be $3,000,000, and the Navy four or five million dollars, it is in this Air Service. In the Postal Service, in the Coast Guard, the Marine Corps, the Forestry Service, and in almost every activity they want to continue investigation work independent of restrictions from outside sources.

If there is any one activity where there would be the greatest resulting economy it would be by having all the work done under one head in the Air Service. Experimental work is being done for the Army at McCook Field in Ohio, which is being duplicated largely by the Navy at Philadelphia. They are investigating about the flight of airships, both heavier-than-air and lighter-than air, making investigations as to the qualities of hydrogen and of helium—largely matters of duplication. Much has been said about the consolidation of departmental activities. I think it is better to consolidate these agencies by piecemeal, where much can be done.

For instance, what is the need of two proving grounds? We have one at Aberdeen, built at a tremedous expense, capable of testing every kind of gun within a radius of 30 miles, and yet we are proposing to buy another new one for the Navy on the Potomac involving an expenditure of $10,000,000. There is where there can be real economy if they will give heed to and scrutinize the needs of these departments. However, it is an administrative postulate that the heads of departments never wish to surrender—never wish to yield functions which they once possess. Once when a department gets hold of a certain activity they never want to let go, but always want to amplify it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I regret that the gentleman from Wisconsin interrupted the gentleman from Indiana in reading that very interesting paper.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask for further time to have him continue the story.

Mr. LONGWORTH. While it might convince the gentleman from Wisconsin, it should not convince the gentleman from Ohio; but I think there might be some interesting details.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman to suppress anything——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not accuse the gentleman of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. The gentleman is too much of a gallant to do that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is too much duplication and too much overlapping in a great many activities of the Government.

The work that is being performed by this committee is research work of a character that has not been done by either the Army or the Navy. If I had my way about it, so far as research work by this committee is concerned, it would do all of the experimental work necessary for the Army and the Navy. I think they could be very well combined. I think it will be a mistake, however, to hamper the work being done here, for its splendid work is now recognized by the Army and the Navy. I call the attention of the committee to what Major General Patrick said upon this subject. He says:

> Aeronautics is progressing rapidly and greater technical knowledge is necessary if we are to keep pace with developments abroad. Engineering experimentation conducted by the Army and Navy, and based upon existing knowledge, will contribute measurably to the general development of aviation, but, in my judgment, well-directed scientific research, as conducted by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, is essential to substantial progress. The Army Air Service depends upon the advisory committee for the study and solution of the more difficult problems. I believe, both as Chief of the Air Service and as a member of the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics, that it would be unwise economy to curtail or postpone the research programs of the advisory committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not directing my criticism toward curtailing the activities of any work being done by the Government. I am in favor of a consolidation of them in one committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So am I.

Mr. STAFFORD. No one can tell what is being duplicated. There must be and there is duplication so far as the Army and the Navy aeronautic work is concerned.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not trying to hamper the department development of aeronautic work. I only say that it should be consolidated under one head. If this were a private establishment, no one for a moment would contend that it ought to have 10 separate activities engaged in exploration or experimental work.

It should be under one head. The Ford Motor Co. does not have its experimental work distributed throughout its branches; it is all under one head. The same can be said of the Dodge Co. and of the General Motors Co., and of all these great industrial companies.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To show how the Navy is calling upon this board, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that they are making experiments for the Navy into the theoretical analysis of the design and construction of the Navy rigid airship ZR–1. They are also making investigations leading to the development of a high-speed fuel-injection engine to operate on fuel oil instead of gasoline, to be of lightweight construction and suitable for use as a power plant in airplanes and in airships.

Mr. STAFFORD. The work the gentleman is citing there is being done by the Army, so far as its rigid airship is concerned.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, no; it has been turned over to this committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Navy has turned it over, but the Army is engaged in that work, according to the hearings before our committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For the Navy they are doing this work, and they are also making investigation to determine the distribution of loading between wings of biplanes and triplanes of varying gap-chord ratios and with various degrees of stagger for air foils of several types. So that I think we would be making a mistake if we were to cut off the head in order to save the tail.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are very much indebted to the gentleman from Indiana for the highly technical information which he has given us.

The Clerk read as follows:

> International exchanges: For the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including necessary employees and purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $43,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. So far as the international exchanges are concerned I notice that there is an appropriation of $43,000. Last year it was $50,000. Was it suggested that we should make that reduction of $7,000 this year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The printing comes out of that, so that the international exchanges would amount to $40,000 for 1924, but in addition to that of course they will have their printing paid out of a separate item.

Mr. FESS. Then it is not a reduction?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is a reduction of $2,000, but they think they can get along with that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on the Smithsonian Institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes upon the Smithsonian Institution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the Smithsonian Institution is quietly doing about the most important research work of any organization not only in the United States but in the world. At least it is assembling data of wonderful value to the student of various and important subjects. I think that it has accumulated the most important body of information of any organization of its kind in the country. I am wondering whether the Members have ever made any investigation of the character of work that this organization is now carrying on and has been carrying on for a great many years. For example, take the work on American ethnology, in order to get at accurate information with respect to the genesis and progress of the American Indian.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Ought not the gentleman to say the genesis and the exodus of the American Indians?

Mr. FESS. The genesis and the evolution. Exodus would be a proper term also when we consider the rapid vanishing of not only the race as distinct, but especially the loss of the evidence of its early existence.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Unfortunately.

Mr. FESS. Unfortunately. I hope that the membership of the committee will not take as a matter of levity what I am going to say. Publications of this bureau completed are regarded as the most accurate and valuable source of information upon the American Indians collected anywhere or even attempted. One small publication of two volumes, known as the North American Indian, is regarded by expert thought in our country as about the last word upon this subject, and is rated as a very valuable publication by all authorities in our universities in the country. Just recently, only a few days ago, your attention has been called to the new discovery somewhere in Egypt of a tomb of an ancient Egyptian king, containing some very rare finds that are variously estimated in value up to $40,000,000. This was done under the direction of Lord Carnarvon. By the way, two Americans are identified with that remarkable work, and our country comes in also for some recognition. While that is regarded as a very important find, I presume a good many of our people overlook some of the recent discoveries in the southwest of our country, showing the early stages and development of the early life of the Indian. There are four or five discoveries made but recently, discoveries where you can see the skeleton of the ancient cliff dweller just as it was buried, with no interruptions, no displacements, and it is looked upon as one of the very remarkable discoveries of recent times. It is reported to Congress that visitors may now see one of the skeletons of the race of cliff dwellers as he was placed in his grave. Not a single bone has been removed from position. This is the first time in North American archæology that an effort has been made to protect an Indian skeleton in situ. This is the recently discovered Pipe Shrine House, so called because of the many pipes found in the grave.

One of the most interesting discoveries is an ancient ruin in the Mesa Verde called the Clan House, because of the fine masonry of subterranean rooms. Some for sleeping, others for grinding corn, and still others for storerooms.

The Smithsonian Institution is directing that sort of work, but this is only one phase of its scientific and historic activities.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Is the gentleman able to state how ancient is the specimen discovered?

Mr. FESS. No; I think it does not undertake to even estimate the age. In fact, the cliff dweller, who might be regarded as the American aborigine, is wrapped in mystery so far as time dates. How old no one seems to know how to estimate. The question of discussion has been running for years whether the cliff dweller, the mound builder, and the American Indian are all the same people. Major Powell, an eminent name connected with this institution in the past, wrote much on this subject. There is an immense amount of information tending to prove them the same people, while there is information contradicting it. I think that the question is still without any definite conclusion. That much on this particular phase of the work, the Bureau of American Ethnology. Its work on the language of the Indian, his songs, and his architecture is very important. The Bureau of Exchanges is the one bureau of the institution that is collecting the largest amount of sources, what we call when we study history original sources, as evidence in order to determine a judgment. These exchanges are with at least 85 different countries. I just enumerated them as I hold the report of the institution in my hand—85 different countries. Some of us without investigating would question whether there are that many different countries in the world, but when you come to enumerate them, big and little, different and indifferent, there are more than that. Just think of it. Here is an institution at the Capital of the United States that has direct connection from a scientific standpoint with 85 countries of the world, covering almost every civilization, ancient, medieval, and modern, known to history. That of itself is a very remarkable fact when historically and scientifically considered.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. What is the function of these international exchanges; what is exchanged?

Mr. FESS. The function of the exchange activity is whenever there is published in the United States any scientific work or pamphlet of any sort 85 countries are on the mailing list that may get that scientific publication, so that those countries with which we are in negotiation—or relationship, I should say—may send us every scientific work that is published in their country. By that method there may be collected something over a million specimens that the Smithsonian Institution has of scientific work that did not cost any more than the cost of the exchange. The report of the secretary for 1922 shows 383,157 packages exchanged. It is one of the most remarkable facts of our Government's activity or that of any government along scientific lines.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It only relates to literature and reports?

Mr. FESS. Literature, usually science; almost entirely science. In other words, though it is said that a scientific publication 10 years old is out of date, notwithstanding that it is what we would call our treasury of valuable information. It is our resource or evidence of the information as to what the thought was in that particular time when it was written, and this Bureau of International Exchange, which is working quietly, is only one of other bureaus of the Smithsonian Institution doing work for which I notice we appropriate rather a handsome sum. It is collecting these publications in science and literature that are put in permanent form in all parts of the whole world, doing this work from day to day and from year to year, making available for our use this information and this Capital the best center for research work by the use of the original sources of any point in the world. That is one reason that the country long ago saw Washington as the greatest center of scholarships, not only on the continent but in the future the greatest in the world.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. TILSON. Speaking of exchanges, is there a different kind of exchange that is possible among these museums of natural history which is an exchange of the actual specimen, where one expedition, for instance, procures a considerable number, or several of a particular specimen that would be very valuable, and instead of destroying the surplus specimens, exchange them with other museums of other countries?

Mr. FESS. That is correct, and the report of the Secretary shows that in the Zoological Garden, where were handled 2,201 animals this year, 520 were deducted, either by exchange or death. Of the 1,681 left, 490 are mammals, 1,069 birds, and 122 reptiles. There have been sent out specimens of different species that we have propagated by natural process here which we do not have use for and which would be a duplication if we kept them, and we are supplying other countries with them in exchange for what they can give us.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me that would be a very proper way to supplement and fill our museums.

Mr. FESS. That is true. Another reason in connection with that: The Zoological Garden, or more properly park, would naturally fall as an adjunct to the institution whose original purpose was a museum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his colleague may proceed for an additional five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. The work of the original Smithsonian Institution was to deal with the past—mainly, its function was that of a museum. However, it included gathering details of art collections of rare prints, pictures, and so on, so as to supply the source of the study of the past progress in the evolution of the races of men. Quite naturally it took on in addition the collection of the specimens of three dimensions, such as we have now in the famous National Museum.

Thus far it deals only with what was, rather than what now is. Consequently, quite naturally if the Museum is one specific feature and an important bureau of the institution, you would expect the live specimens also to be made a distinctive part of the institution; so in connection with the gathering from the world over of specimens of the past to be brought here and to be housed in a building, so would it be an important feature to do the same thing, to have brought here in live form and placed in the park specimens of life throughout the globe. So that in addition to studying the past from the Museum, there would be a garden or park attached, a zoological garden or park, where both the past and present may be studied. Now, in addition to these activities, they have connected here with the institution what is called astrophysical work, or work which has to do with the study of the physical properties of the celestial bodies. May I say, members of the committee, that there probably is no place were a closer analysis, finer discriminaion in real research is made than in connection with this organization. This work is partially carried on here in the Capital and partly elsewhere. It maintains a station on Mount Harqua Hala and the Montezuma Station in Chile. There is also a station at Mount Wilson, Calif. The important expedition to Chile was to study the solar variations in cooperation with the stations of California and Arizona.

Still another important activity was that of art study. There are two branches. One is the National Gallery of Art proper, and the other is the collection known as the Freer art collection. Our friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] will correct me if I am in error when I say that the Freer collection is in the fine new building just west of the old original building.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is to be housed there?

Mr. FESS. That is to house the collections that have come or are to come from the donations of the benefactor, Mr. Freer, and the collections to be made through this benefaction. It is a very important character of collection. I will read the report briefly if I can have the time. By the way, I must make an apology to the committee for not having my remarks in better form, but I did not know we were reaching this item at this time.

At the Freer Gallery the work that has been carried on this year includes the classification and cataloguing of Chinese, Japanese, and Thibetan paintings; Chinese tapestry; Chinese and Japanese pottery; preliminary classification of Korean pottery, Japanese stone sculpture, and the cataloguing of American paintings, drawings, and prints, including etchings and lithographs. Important progress has been made on this work, but that building has not yet been completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the building has been completed, but not opened to the public.

Mr. FESS. They had to stop work on it, perhaps through lack of funds. My friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] will know about that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I believe it is in process of being completed now, but I do not think it is ready for occupancy.

Mr. FESS. I think that, owing to a temporary lack of applicable funds, the work was suspended from July to December.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the building devoted to the collection of Mr. Freer exclusively?

Mr. FESS. I understand it is to be devoted to those collections and to collections that are of the same type under his beneficence. I have not gone into this report sufficiently in detail to give definite information on that point.

Here, gentlemen, was the original gift of a half million dollars back in 1846 by the famous Englishman whose name the institution bears. It has been very carefully handled without any particular effort to add to it. In a country of so much wealth as ours it would have been easy to have gotten any amount of additions if they had been sought, but the regents have gone on the basis, it appears, that whenever some one is found sufficiently public-spirited to give either collections that are representative and historical or funds with which to secure them they should accept them without pressing any campaign for funds. There does not appear to have been any commercial feature at all.

The Government has not hesitated, however, to make necessary appropriations for each department of the Smithsonian Institution to keep it not only a going concern but to allow it to grow. That is why I asked the chairman of the subcommittee whether the cut from $50,000 to $43,000 for the exchange work was justifiable. He reports that it is not a cut; that there is an allowance for printing, and so on. So that it would seem to me that this is one particular work of the Government that should not be cut.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have long been curious to learn what contribution is made by reason of the will of James Smithson for the maintenance of the Smithsonian Institution, or whether that bequest or devise had been exhausted; whether the expenses of the institution to-day are entirely borne by the Government.

Mr. FESS. No. The Smithsonian consolidated fund of $177,965 is invested in securities—railroad, industrial, and municipal. There is deposited in the United States Treasury a fund of $1,000,000. It will be seen that there is an endowment for the support of the institution, and it is in good form, but, measured by the character of work carried on, it is not nearly enough to handle properly the wonderful work that is going on. Some public-spirited citizens will doubtless make further contributions when the real importance of the work is better understood.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The reports show the investments of the institution fund. I suppose the gentleman will agree with me that this institution has done very fine work throughout its history as an independent establishment?

Mr. FESS. I certainly do. I know of no other agency of its kind that approaches it in the amount and importance of its accomplishments.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will be considering whether it would not be inexpedient to put it under the control of any bureau or department of the Government. That has been suggested, and it is a question that may be brought before us after a while.

Mr. FESS. I would doubt seriously the expediency of that. It has been in existence three-fourths of a century, and not more than a half dozen secretaries have directed it in all that time. That should not be disturbed. I would think it unwise to change that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So would I.

Mr. FESS. I have not called attention to the importance of the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, or some other important features of the work. I recall reading Oliver Wendel Holmes's travels in Europe. Some one asked him if he had visited the British Museum, and he said he had. He was asked how long one ought to stay in the museum in order to become acquainted with its treasures, and his reply was that one ought to have been born in the museum, lived in it until he was 80 years old, and never to have left it in order to become acquainted with its treasures. I think the time will come when this Smithsonian Institution will far surpass the British Museum, especially if it continues to grow as it has done hitherto.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in behalf of the item now under consideration, providing for continuing the ethnological research work among the American Indians, and more especially the excavation and the preservation of archæological remains. The Mesa Verde National Park is situated in the extreme southwest corner of the State of Colorado, in my congressional district. That park contains America's greatest historical asset, the home of many of the ancient cliff dwellers. The ruins of that prehistoric and extinct race are the scenes where the Smithsonian Institution is now carrying on some wonderfully interesting and important excavations. And I firmly believe that there is nowhere among all the thousands of activities of our Government an expenditure of money that brings about as important educational and far-reaching results in proportion to the amount expended as does the continuing of this development and discovery work concerning the American Indian of some six to eight centuries ago.

The work of excavating and restoring those ruins has for many years past been in charge of Dr. Jesse Walter Fewkes, an archæologist of the Bureau of American Ethnology. He is also the Chief of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. He is a wonderfully efficient, capable, and high-class man for that work, and he is very earnestly and diligently devoting his life to this great work. His discoveries rival those that have been made in Egypt and all other places throughout the world, and he is deserving of the highest praise and appreciation, not only from Congress but from the American people, for his scientific knowledge, devotion, and wonderfully successful work in solving the mysteries of the origin, the life, the habits, and the nature of that prehistoric race in the southwestern part of the United States.

Since he commenced this great work the attendance in the way of visitors to that park has increased from 25 persons the first year until during this past summer there were over 4,500 people coming from all over the world to visit the park.

His work is making history every day—the history of the life of the human beings who inhabited that country ages before Columbus was born and before the Spaniards ever touched foot upon this continent. In fact, there are no means yet discovered by which the exact date that those ruins were inhabited can be definitely determined.

I have visited those ruins myself several times. Everybody who ever visits the Mesa Verde National Park and views those ruins always wants to and usually does, if possible, go there again. There is a kind of an indescribable charm and weird fascination about trying to study out and learn what were the habits, activities, and degree of intelligence, and what manner of people that extinct race was. Strange and never to be forgotten is the queer impression upon a person when you first see, for instance, the Cliff Palace ruins. As you stand on the brink of the precipice, on one side of the canyon, it resembles an ancient and partially disintegrated castle. You will in reality be speechless with amazement as you look at those walls and towers in their sheltered site, defying the ravages of time, and wonder and long to lift the veil of obscurity and learn what manner of human beings they were.

The first time I visited the Mesa Verde was nearly 20 years ago, before there was any road or scarcely any trail into that country. My wife and I went on horseback, with a guide, carrying our water and food on pack horses, and slowly making our way up the long and steep bluffs and canyons to get into that country. We camped out under the pifion trees and spent several days climbing around among the ruins, and really we had the most marvelously interesting trip of our lives. We were all alone nearly all the time we were there.

In those days there was no official guardian or anyone to protect those ruins, and everyone who went there carried off practically whatever he found. I remember going quite a distance and getting a long pole, and finally succeeded in climbing up that way into a small crevice in the side of the cliff above and to one side of one of the ruins, in a wild and gloomy gorge, and getting into the dust a foot deep that had been accumulating for centuries. I am confident no human being had been there for six or seven hundred years. No animal could reach there. I crawled into a remote corner that had never been disturbed, and, scraping away the dust and dirt, I unearthed some human bones and found quite a lot of small corncobs and a stone hatchet, a few bone implements, a couple of metates, and a grinding stone, a broken food bowl, and a few specimens of broken pottery. There was some corn that had become practically petrified. I know no white man had ever been there, because if he had those articles would not have been left there. While they were not very important, I did like everyone else, and carried those specimens away with me as souvenirs, and they are in a cabinet in my home now.

To me it has always seemed like a crying shame, and one of the most unfortunate and regrettable things that has ever happened in the study of the history of this country, that all of those wonderful ruins were left entirely unguarded and unprotected for 25 years after they were first known of and hundreds of people went there for no historic or educational purpose, but merely as pothunters and vandals to collect and carry away and sell for whatever they could get for them the most perfect, splendid, and very rarest and best relics and specimens. People came from all over the world and they carried off thousands of articles that can never be recovered, and which would have made wonderfully valuable collections if they could have been put in museums throughout the country.

There were a few men who for many years made a business of ransacking and mutilating ruins all over that country and collecting and selling rare relics. Personally, I have always felt they should have been publicly condemned and in some way stopped and prosecuted as vandals, instead of being referred to as heroic and historical discoverers and archæologists.

There was a Swedish nobleman named Baron Gustav Nordenskiold who visited the Mesa Verde several years before I was there. He went at it in a wholesale way and hired and took in there quite a number of laborers, and dug out of all those main ruins the choicest specimens and most complete human mummies and relics that were left, and carried away, I was told, 10 or 12 carloads of the most precious and valuable articles that have ever been found in the ruins. He shipped them back to Stockholm, where I understand they are now in a museum. I never heard of his having any authority or right to loot and strip all those ruins of all those specimens.

And yet nobody ever questioned his going in there, or tried to interfere with his carrying out of our country all of those priceless relics. I have always since felt that it would not be inappropriate for our Government to politely suggest to the Government of Sweden the propriety of kindly returning them. I ought to say, however, that the baron afterwards, in 1893, published his memoirs of his trip to the Mesa Verde in the form of a large and superbly illustrated and very expensive volume entitled "The Cliff Dwellers of the Mesa Verde," which is a splendid contribution to ethnology and archæological history. But the English translation is accessible in only a very few libraries in this country.

The cliff dwellings were originally constructed partly for defense and partly for shelter. They are mainly built in the caves in the side of the canyons and under overhanging cliffs that entirely protect them from rain, and also protected them from predatory enemies who could not reach them from either above or below. The cavity in the side of the bluff in which the Cliff Palace is built is 425 feet long and 80 feet high and 80 feet deep, and contains about 150 rooms, and it may have had a population of nearly 1,000 people in the wintertime. In fact, it was practically a pueblo (that is a town or small city), built in a cave in the side of the face of the canyon. The Cliff Palace is the largest, most picturesque, and most typical cliff dwelling in the Southwest. This ruin, as well as the Spruce Tree House and the Balcony House, show the highest aboriginal achievement in stonework north of Mexico. The Kivas (that is their circular subterranean ceremonial rooms), are the best and most complete of all the ruins.

When and why and how those people left that country remains an unsolved mystery. The Indians have an uncanny fear of the dead, and none of them have ever been near these ruins since they were deserted. Eagles have nested for hundreds of years in some of them. The sand lizards and the rattlesnakes have basked unmolested in the sunshine, and there has during all these centuries been nothing to disturb the awful stillness and lonely solitude of those mysterious regions except the occasional weird howl of a hungry coyote or the melancholy hoot of a horned owl.

Baron Nordenskiold states very positively that the cliff dwellers were attacked by hostile neighbors in superior numbers and ferocity, and that finally all that did not escape were exterminated. He says the large number of human remains that he found, many of them not buried or cremated, shows conclusively that they were violently killed and left where slain because there was no one left to bury or burn them. The cliff dwellers apparently cremated most of their dead and only buried the more important personages or those that were especially cherished. My meager study of the subject occasionally for several years leads me to largely coincide with the baron. Not only for the reason that he gives but also for another reason which I do not recall that he mentioned, namely, it required long, patient, skillful, and awfully hard work to make the variety of pottery and all the stone and bone implements and even the wooden and other utensils that they used, and they must have treasured them very highly after they got them completed. It seems natural and conclusive to me that they certainly would not have left them as they did in such large quantities in those buildings if they had had any time or opportunity of taking them with them.

Many ruins were left just exactly as they were when the inhabitants lived in them. Everything they used was left, including the best implements known at that time, proving to me that they must have been attacked and either killed or so suddenly driven out that they had no way of taking their personal effects with them. I can not believe that all of the trainloads of treasures, including unburied human remains, thousands of everyday necessary implements, rare pottery, and all kinds of utensils and relics that everybody carried away during all those years while that entire country was wholly unprotected would ever have been left behind by those people if they just peacefully and gradually migrated from their homes and moved away from that country.

On the other hand, Doctor Fewkes, who is undoubtedly the highest living authority on this subject, says that the cause of desertion of the cliff dwellings by those people was not due so much to predatory enemies as to the change of climate and the failure of crops and the disappearance of their water supply. There is no question whatever in my mind but what the climate has gradually and greatly changed in that country, and the rainfall must be very much less now than it was hundreds of years ago. While there are deep snows on the mesas in the wintertime and irregular showers in the summer, nevertheless the dry season is so long and so hot in that region now that a population as large as those ruins indicate could not possibly live there at this time on agricultural products such as they had and with the means of raising them that they had.

They were evidently not a warlike people in the sense that most other Indian tribes were. They were apparently peaceable and lived mainly upon agricultural products, principally corn, and while the corncobs we find there are nearly all small, nevertheless that climate would not now even produce that much without irrigation. I thought at one time I saw the remains of a reservoir with quite old trees growing on the banks of it, and which, if it was such, would indicate that they stored water and possibly irrigated some. But future explorations may show that the circular mound indicating the rim of a reservoir might be the disintegrated remains of a circular chain of buildings of some kind.

Doctor Fewkes is quite right also in saying that the water supply in that country now, even with our knowledge as to improving the springs, is wholly inadequate for a large population; and if those people stayed in those dwellings, both on the mesa and in the canyon, until the present climatic changes were brought about and the water supply did fail and it became too arid for them to grow crops, they were, of course, compelled to move away from there on that account. But I am rather inclined to believe that they moved away from there before that condition occurred.

The cliff dwellers had no sheep or horses or burros or other beasts of burden. I do not remember ever reading anything to indicate that they even had any dogs. They had no metals or glass. Their life and these ruins belonged entirely to the Stone Age in America. They show no signs whatever that those people ever saw a white man or any evidence that they ever knew anything of white man's culture. Corn was their staple food, but they had squash and beans and domesticated turkeys, and they evidently killed a deer occasionally and a few mountain sheep and coyotes and frequently cottontails and jack rabbits. You plainly see finger prints and the prints of the hands in the mud daubing. Mostly but not all of them are small, showing that the women did most of the work in spreading the mortar and in mud chinking the crevices in the stone walls.

Where the descendants of the Cliff Palace, the Spruce Tree House, and the Balcony House now dwell, or whether they are entirely extinct, nobody knows.

Doctor Fewkes appeared before this subcommittee at the hearings upon this bill, and his statement appears on pages 158 to 162 of the printed hearings. He described the work he has been doing in former years, and more particularly during the past summer. You would all be interested in reading his description. And I know if you did you would more heartily approve this item in the present bill, which I know you are going to do, anyway, providing for the continuance of his splendid work.

I am going to give you briefly the substance of his statements and including the contents of some of the bulletins he has issued upon this subject containing a description of this park and the excavation work he is doing:

EXCAVATION WORK IN THE MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK.

Local tradition does not agree as to when or by whom the ruins were first discovered. They were known of in a general way by a few people in 1881, and several others saw some ruins during the succeeding years. But one story is that in the winter of 1888 two cowboys from the little town of Mancos, in southwestern Colorado, while searching for stray cattle, discovered in one of the deep canyons of the great plateau west of the town a large ruined building indicating a prehistoric people. In their amazement they called it Cliff Palace. On the same day in looking over into the depths of another canyon 2 miles away they saw another great building in the cliffs to which they gave the name Spruce Tree House on account of a giant spruce tree which grew out of the rooms. The plateau where these relics of the past were found had received the name of Mesa Verde (meaning green mesa) from the fact that a large part of it was covered with spruce and piñon trees that remained verdant throughout the year. Buildings similar to those seen by these men had been discovered by a Government expedition in the Mancos Valley 10 years before and called cliff houses, but these two magnificent examples are the largest of this type that have yet been found in our Southwest. It was not until 1890 that any description of these ruins was ever published in the United States. The sequence of this discovery worked great harm to these buildings. They contained a great many articles or relics that had a commercial value. Several years after many other cliff houses, large and small, were discovered, and, as I have said, a desire to traffic in the pottery and other ornaments and relics of the ancient inhabitants led to a vandalism in which walls were torn down and many rooms mutilated to obtain specimens.

This vandalism went so far that some public-spirited women of Colorado, becoming indignant at the wanton spoliation, outrageous plundering, and destruction of these priceless antiquities, formed a society called the Colorado Cliff Dwellers' Association, the object of which was to separate what is now Mesa Verde from the Ute Reservation to preserve its antiquities for posterity. After several years of vigorous agitation the members of this association in 1906 succeeded in persuading Congress to set aside from the Ute Reservation about 50,000 acres of this plateau as a reserve to protect these relics of the past. Later this tract of land was made into a park and is now known as the Mesa Verde National Park. At that time the only way by which one could visit these ruins was, as I have stated, by a very rough trail and on horseback. The plateau rose precipitously on all sides from the valley. There were no wagon roads. It was part of the far-sighted purpose of the Department of the Interior to develop the park, to construct roads, and facilitate visits by tourists, and for that purpose an appropriation was obtained from Congress. At that time there were no buildings on the reservation; the very scanty water supply had to be developed. There was, of course, no accommodation for visitors and they were obliged to bring their own provisions and camp near the ruins. The friends of the movement early recognized that the Mesa Verde differed from other parks in that it was an educational institution—a place where antiquities of a bygone age could be studied first hand, for many wild theories of the kinship of the builders were current. Among many necessary steps to be taken to develop the park was the clearing out of the débris that filled the rooms of these ruins and the repair of their walls in order that they might not be further destroyed by man or the elements.

The most urgent need of all was to obtain a more intelligent knowledge of the former inhabitants—their antiquity, where they came from, when they came, and where they went when they disappeared. To obtain this knowledge demanded an expert archæologist. The repairs should be done by one who had a proper estimation of the value of the ruins. The Secretary of the Interior, who is custodian of the public lands, naturally sought the advice of the Smithsonian Institution, where there were experts in this line of work, and in 1908, two years after congressional legislation had made this reservation, Doctor Fewkes was selected and appointed to visit these ruins and begin such archæological work as seemed necessary. Up to that time the work of the archæologist on our southwestern ruins had not been directed to this end. The method was to obtain many specimens, not to preserve standing walls. The idea was to strip our ruins of specimens and carry them away to adorn the shelves of eastern museums. Doctor Fewkes recognized that the walls of the buildings were the most striking of the antiquities and that the need was to repair the standing walls and other antiquities that could not be moved. There should also be created authoritative publications setting forth what these buildings taught. This was a new departure in archæology, a new point of view in research in this science. This method of work performed the first year at Mesa Verde has now been adopted by other institutions in other areas of the Southwest. It is not too much, I think, to say that a new archæology was born on the Mesa Verde in 1908.

The first ruin taken up in this way, known as Spruce Tree House, was in all points a cliff dwelling of typical form, containing all the architectural features of the ancient people. It is one of the best in the park, and, being situated near a strong spring of water, is practically the most convenient for tourists to visit. It is also one of the latest, or possibly the last, that was inhabited. The work on it took about three months. The endeavor was to preserve the walls as nearly as possible as they were originally, and not to add anything that would suggest the work of the white man; to preserve all sky lines in their broken condition; to reinforce the foundations where they were weak; and to clear out and repair the subterranean rooms. The plan was also to develop the trails approaching this ruin.

The incipient stages of this work were known to only a few people. Those who inspected it came on horseback. No carriage roads had yet been constructed, and only about two dozen people visited the park during that summer. The knowledge of the interest there was little known this side of Colorado, and even there it was not then duly appreciated. The cost of the summer's field work was small. In the following winter a small monograph was written and published by the Smithsonian Institution on the results, and an illustrated report to the Secretary of the Interior was prepared and distributed by that department. It is estimated that since its excavation and repair Spruce Tree House has been visited by over 15,000 people. The printed reports on it have long since been exhausted.

The following year—1909—Doctor Fewkes continued work on the Mesa Verde, this year on the magnificent cliff dwelling called Cliff Palace, the largest and certainly one of the most picturesque of our cliff houses. This ruin was completely excavated and repaired during the summer. A report was prepared on this building and later published as a bulletin of the Bureau of American Ethnology. The result of this season's work increased the interest of tourists.

The foundation of the National Park Service and the appointment of Mr. Stephen T. Mather as director of this new service gave a great impetus to the Mesa Verde National Park. He recognized from the beginning the educational possibilities of these buildings. The construction of some roads in the park has made it possible more readily to visit the ruins. Congress has been treating the park fairly in the way of appropriations, but there is great need of additional and better roads throughout the park. It will well repay the Government to build them and to improve this park in every way, because there is nothing comparable with it in this country, and the whole civilized world will sooner or later want to visit this park.

Every year there will be an enormous increase in the tourists visiting the park, and Congress ought by all means to encourage that ever-growing desire of the American people to "see America first." In 1915 Doctor Fewkes discovered on the park an ancient building of large size and mysterious character now known as Sun Temple. Situated in a commanding position opposite the Cliff Palace and looking down one of the most beautiful canyons in Colorado, it immediately attracted attention. The discovery of this unique ruin led to a great advance in our knowledge of the prehistoric people of Colorado.

The prehistoric inhabitants of the Mesa Verde not only inhabited cliff dwellings but also villages of considerable size on the top of the mesa. These buildings closely resembled the so-called pueblos of New Mexico. The population of the villages in prehistoric times was very large—larger, perhaps, than the number of white people at the present time in the adjoining valley. The existence of these villages on the mesa top was discovered in 1916 when a mound, 4¼ miles north of Spruce Tree House, was opened and a large building brought to light. From its highest walls one can see into four States, and on account of the view it was called Far View House.

There is every reason to believe that in early times the Mesa Verde population retired to the cliff houses for the winter and engaged in a continuous round of ceremonies of a dramatic nature, rarely venturing outside of their immediate vicinity. They were agricultural Indians of normal size. Their granaries were stored with food, and the deep snow covering the plateau made it impossible for them to go very far from home. Later the villages on the mesa top were likewise winter homes. In the summer they passed their time working on the top of the mesa, cultivating maize or Indian corn, beans, squash, and other vegetal foods. The permanent dwellings on the top of the mesa resemble closely the modern pueblos of New Mexico, but were much more populous. Each cluster of pueblos consists of a number of houses covering a large area, each having a characteristic shape and special use. In one of these clusters there were large buildings devoted to ceremonies, others were used for storage, and still others were habitations. Around them rose their fields of corn or farms. There were many large villages, which are now nothing more than mounds of earth; their walls have fallen, and their sites are piles of rocks in sagebrush clearings among the trees. There are cedar and piñon trees, several hundred years old, growing on top of some of these mounds.

During the past summer a building 70 feet square was found, called Pipe Shrine House, in the middle of which was a circular room, which was apparently constructed for ceremonial purposes. It has a shrine on the floor where many objects which indicated its purpose were found; among other offerings were several tobacco pipes, some of which were blackened with smoke, while others had never been used.

These pipes and similar unique objects have not previously been found on the mesa. There were likewise various other offerings indicating that the priests in years agone had smoked to the gods of the world's quarters and thrown their pipes into the fire as offerings to the gods. At the northeast corner of this building there was a shrine to the sun, in which was a slab of stone bearing a pictograph representing the sun; and on the south side, at the foot of the stairway, somewhat removed from view, was a square chamber, in which stood an idol representing the mountain lion, surrounded by other fetiches. At the southeast corner was a burial ground—the cemetery of the neighboring ruin—in which were several human skeletons, one of which was surrounded by a stone wall and protected by a fireproof roof, and there one can see laid out in his final resting place all that is left of one of the ancient people who lived five centuries ago, protected by a wire screen and visible to any visitor; not a pigmy or a giant, but a man of ordinary height and about 50 years old, accompanied by mortuary objects—bowls of food and water—that were piously placed there by his relatives before America was discovered. The grading of the land surrounding this ruin was a task of magnitude. Trees, bushes, and a heterogeneous collection of stones and débris of various kinds had accumulated. This had to be leveled for the construction of a roadway by which visitors could approach these buildings and see them in somewhat the same condition they formerly had.

The discoveries on the park in the summer of 1920 were particularly important, since they opened up a new vista into the culture of the prehistoric inhabitants of what is now the Mesa Verde National Park.

If there is any one discovery to which man owes his first steps in the infancy of his culture, it is the invention of how to make fire at will. It may be taken as an axiom that there is no race of men that is ignorant of this invention, and while we may say without any question that this knowledge was universal, it is rarely that we find surviving objects which indicate how this fire was made. In America it was produced by the twirling of a stick with the hand, except in some races like the Eskimo. We infer from what is known that the inhabitants of Mesa Verde in later times made fire by twirling two sticks which have been found repeatedly in their cliff dwellings. There is a widespread tradition among the Pueblo Indians that in olden times they kept a fire continually going in some room in their village, and from this fire were fed the fireplaces in the pueblo.

Certain American tribes have a special room or even a temple constructed for the preservation of fire, and the protection of fire was one of the most important ceremonies in their rituals. As a rule, however, at the present day none of our Indian tribes preserve the new fire ceremony. The fire has long since gone out in the sacred rooms of the Pueblos, who have become acquainted with matches, and no longer need it for secular uses. The nearest modern representatives of the cliff dwellers are the Pueblos of New Mexico and the Hopi Indians of Arizona.

In 1920 a building not far from Sun Temple was excavated which presented an enigma to archæologists on account of its strange form. It was quite unlike any other building, with the possible exception of Sun Temple, but instead of being D-shaped it was rectangular in form.

In the center of a large plaza there was a fire pit too extensive for cooking and with no indication of calcined human bones. This fire hole contained bushels of ashes, indicating that great fires were kindled in it. On the western end of this building was a chamber with a small fireplace in the corner, its walls decorated with symbolic figures representing different animals and human beings, but the most significant feature was a hunchbacked being similar to the figures identified as the god of fire. The inference was, therefore, that in this room the fire was kindled by the priests, and when the flames were ignited in the prepared fuel it was carried by a cedar-bark torch to the great central fireplace above mentioned and there was performed a barbaric and elaborate dance in the presence of spectators who sat on the seats surrounding it. This fire was probably conserved, and represented the life of the state, those who needed it having to ignite their own fire from this central fireplace.

It can be well said that no such intensive restoration work in the United States has ever been attempted on prehistoric ruins elsewhere situated. The appreciation of the public in response to this work can be readily seen in the enlarged number of visitors who have sought this interesting locality. New and better means of access have kept pace with the archæological development of the ruins. The necessity for accommodations for the visitors has led to the building of a hotel at Spruce Tree Camp.

A consideration of this subject forms another chapter in the growth of the park not here considered. The contribution of the Bureau of American Ethnology to the park is a scientific one and deals with the archæological steps taken to make the ruins object lessons, teaching through visual means the story of the past inhabitants.

By the existing law all portable specimens collected by Government officials are legally under the jurisdiction of the Smithsonian Institution. Up to a few years ago it would be hazardous to leave any pottery or objects of value on the park over winter without care. The specimens which have now accumulated form a considerable collection now housed in the United States National Museum in Washington. Not only is it required by law that these objects be thus cared for, but also from time to time it is customary to prepare reports describing them or comparing them with related objects. It was part of the plan of those who labored to preserve the Mesa Verde antiquities from destruction to install smaller objects on the park, necessitating the construction of a museum building for that purpose. To this end a small log cabin has already been erected, but adequate means should be provided for a more substantial building.

The magnitude of the work already done has opened a vista of what remains unaccomplished. With the means thus far available we have obtained much illumination on the problem of the cliff dweller and his relation to existing tribes, but there remains much to be discovered that may materially modify our present knowledge.

This park is not one for recreation alone but for instruction in a true sense of the word. It is a scenic park, with beautiful outlooks. The official auto stage runs daily from the little city of Mancos into the park. The road from Mancos to the top of the plateau is wonderful, giving a view of the town of Cortez, the county seat of Montezuma County, and of that rich valley. From that point one can see the distant Blue Mountains of Utah; the Carrizo Range in Arizona; the wonderful Ship Rock, famous far and wide for its model Navaho Indian School; and the far-away Taos Mountains in New Mexico. None of these, however, excel in wonder and beauty the La Plata Mountains to the north, generally covered with snow, forming a lovely setting for Sun Temple, and Cliff Palace as seen from the road which ends in Sun Point. From this same point, looking down the canyon, one can see likewise rising the cottonwood trees lining the Mancos River, the only flowing water in this neighborhood. There is also a good auto road into the park from the city of Durango, the thriving and beautiful metropolis of the southwest, about 35 miles east of the park. The park is open from June until November. During that time there are good accommodations and marvelously scenic drives all over that and the surrounding country.

It is desirable that the archæological work in the development of the Mesa Verde should go on. Every year makes it possible for the scientific man to improve his methods of excavation and repair and add to the sum of our knowledge new points of view and new information regarding the manners and customs of these ancient people. The expense is not large; the results are very important to both the professional archæologist and the layman.

On behalf of the people of southwestern Colorado and the National Park Service, I urgently invite you all to visit the Mesa Verde National Park, knowing full well that if you do it will be one of the most interesting and educational trips of your life, and that you will always thereafter feel that your knowledge of the human race and what the race in this country has gone through in the centuries past has been greatly enhanced, and it will always be a delight to you to have studied the ruins of the cliff dwellers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to use just a moment to answer some questions which, on the front page of his Weekly last Saturday, Editor W. V. Helm, of Dallas, Tex., propounds to me. His questions are pertinent, and deserve an answer from any public official. I answer as follows:

1. I am not a Ku Klux. I have never been one.

2. I recently said here that Texas is not dominated by the Klan, though probably some of our best citizens and preachers were members, because such is a fact. Any man with an ounce of discernment knows who are the prominent Klansmen in Texas.

3. In the Democratic primary one of my most prominent opponents was a Klansman. The people generally knew that he was and that I was not a member. Yet I received 15,513 more votes than he did.

4. And in the November general election I defeated my opponent by a majority of 22,633 votes, and received 6,851 more votes than my district gave the Democratic nominee for the United States Senate, who was reputed to be a Klansman.

5. I will gladly support a law to require all secret orders to make public their membership, and to make them all responsible for any unlawful acts, and to prevent them from wearing disguises in public.

6. I am a national legislator. My duties are national in their scope. The lawful control of Klan members in Texas is a State matter. The Federal Government has nothing to do with it. The Attorney General of the United States has so held. There is already too much centralization of power in Washington now. This Government has no more right to interfere with the State's rightful control of Klansmen in Texas than it has to interfere with the State's control of Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Columbus, or Knights of Pythias in Texas. Our State must attend to that.

7. During the eight years that I was judge of the forty-second judicial district no one will deny that I vigorously enforced all laws without fear or favor. I have never changed. I stand now for strict enforcement of all laws.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the independent offices appropriation bill, H. R. 13696, had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to file at any time before midnight the report of the conferees upon the Interior Department appropriation bill for printing in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan, chairman of the subcommittee on the Interior Department appropriation bill, asks unanimous consent that he may have until midnight to-night in which to file the report of the conferees on that bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I want to ask the gentleman what the conferees did with peyote?

Mr. CRAMTON. The House provision is retained in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought the gentleman would be strong enough to see that that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 to the bill (H. R. 13615) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, January 12, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

904. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a statement of the expenditures in the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. S. 419. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esperanza; without amendment (Rept. No. 1384). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. S. 420. An act for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1385). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. S. 421. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington; without amendment (Rept. No. 1386). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BALDWIN: A bill (H. R. 13769) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education, to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries, to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects, and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917, extending its provisions to the Territories; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. MILLS: A bill (H. R. 13770) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 13771) to regulate commerce in certain agricultural products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BLAND of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 13772) to authorize the Secretary of War to reappoint and immediately discharge or retire certain warrant officers of the Army mine planter service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 13773) to amend an act to regulate radio communication, approved August 13, 1912, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13775) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 9, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Borah	Cameron	Colt
Ball	Bursum	Capper	Couzens
Bayard	Calder	Caraway	Culberson
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Stanley

Johnson	Moses	Smoot

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. DIAL] is absent on account of the death of a relative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, reporting, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, that the commission has no motor vehicle of any kind and that consequently there is no expense connected with the use of such vehicles by that office, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, relative to the number and cost of maintenance of motor vehicles used by the commission, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, January 11, 1923.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

The Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to Senate Resolution No. 399, of January 6, 1923, has the honor to submit the following report:

No passenger vehicles are operated by this commission, nor does it make any allowances for upkeep or operation of privately owned automobiles in the city of Washington.

The Interstate Commerce Commission Building, which is located at the southeast corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Eighteenth Street NW., contains a garage of sufficient capacity to accommodate two automobiles. No direct expense for rental of the garage is incurred by the commission, in view of the fact that the space occupied as a garage is included in the rental of the building. The only employee detailed in connection with the maintenance of the garage is the chauffeur of the commission's truck, whose basic salary is $900 per annum. This garage is used solely for the purpose of housing two Government-owned automobile trucks, one being the property of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the other the property of the United States Railroad Administration.

This commission does not operate or maintain any passenger vehicles outside of the city of Washington.

Respectfully,

B. H. MEYER, Chairman.

SHIPPING BOARD CONTRACT FOR TANKERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 390, agreed to January 3, 1923, detailed information relative to a contract made with the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the communication from the chairman of the Shipping Board be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that that action be taken by unanimous consent instead of on motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The communication is as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, January 10, 1923.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to the Senate Resolution 390, instructing the United States Shipping Board to furnish to the Senate at the earliest possible time certain statements and figures, as specified in the resolution, with reference to certain transactions with the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), I have the honor to submit the following detailed information:

The Emergency Fleet Corporation entered into contract 458 SC, August 14, 1918, with the Northwest Steel Co. for construction of 10 steam steel vessels, about 8,800 dead-weight tons carrying capacity each. The Fleet Corporation suspended all work on 6 of these vessels and canceled construction of these 6 vessels on September 15, 1919.

The Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) desired to purchase seven 12,000-ton vessels, provided the Fleet Corporation would finance the construction thereof. The Northwest Steel Co., desiring to procure contract for construction of these vessels, agreed to accept cancellation of the six vessels under suspension and cancellation and release the Fleet Corporation from all claims on account thereof. In consideration of this release the Fleet Corporation agreed to finance the construction of seven 12,000-ton vessels upon the express condition that the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) would obligate itself to repay to the Fleet Corporation all money advanced, disbursed, or expended, or cost incurred by the Fleet Corporation.

This the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) contracted to do under contract No. 531 SC, dated April 12, 1920, between the Fleet Corporation, Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), Old Colony Trust Co., Northwest Steel Co., and Northwest Bridge & Iron Co. This contract called for the construction of seven steel tank steamers of 12,000 dead-weight tons, at a lump-sum price of $2,400,000 each, to be paid for by the Fleet Corporation, as follows:

Ten per cent of contract price of all vessels when contract took effect.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when keel was laid.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when one-half of center keelson was in place.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when keelson was in place.

Ten per cent of contract price of each vessel when center line bulkhead, midship transverse bulkheads, and longitudinal to main deck was in place.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when end transverse, longitudinals, and all framing to weather deck were in place.

Ten per cent of contract price of each vessel when bulkheads and decks were in place.

Ten per cent of contract price of each vessel when vessel was fully plated and decks and outside of vessel were entirely calked.

Ten per cent of contract price of each vessel when vessel was successfully launched.

Ten per cent of contract price of each vessel when steel houses were completed and the machinery, boilers, auxiliaries, and equipment were installed.

Balance of contract price of each vessel upon completion, delivery, and acceptance of the vessel.

The Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) agreed under this contract to purchase these vessels at a price of $2,400,000 each; a total of $16,800,000, payable to the Fleet Corporation in gold coin or equivalent, as follows:

Twenty-five per cent of purchase price of each vessel, or $600,000, an aggregate of $4,200,000, in installments, as follows, which the Old Colony Trust Co., as trustee, agreed to pay to the Fleet Corporation:

Five per cent of contract price of all vessels when builder's contract took effect.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when the keel thereof was laid.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when one-half of keelson with midship bottom transverse, including bulkhead floors, were in place.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when center keelson with midship bottom transverses, including bulkhead floors, were in place.

Five per cent of contract price of each vessel when vessel was successfully launched.

Seventy-five per cent of the purchase price of each vessel, or $1,800,000, by five notes of the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), secured by a first mortgage on each vessel, said notes and mortgages to be executed and delivered to the Fleet Corporation as such vessel is delivered to Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.).

These notes to bear 5 per cent (5%) interest per annum, payable semiannually, in amount and with maturities as follows:

Payable 1 year after delivery	$336,000
Payable 2 years after delivery	480,000
Payable 3 years after delivery	336,000
Payable 4 years after delivery	336,000
Payable 5 years after delivery	288,000

It was also agreed that if at any time before the maturity of these notes the usual time for payment of ships sold by the Fleet Corporation shall be extended beyond five (5) years, the maturity of the above notes should be extended so that the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) would be accorded as favorable times for payment as were accorded other purchasers of ships.

Delivery of possession and transfer of title and ownership of the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) to be made by Fleet Corporation as follows:

Simultaneously with the acceptance of one of said vessels by Fleet Corporation under builder's contract and the delivery of possession of same to Fleet Corporation, the Fleet Corporation would, provided the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) was not then in default under any of the provisions of said mortgages, deliver to Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) possession of said vessel at the works of the Northwest Bridge & Iron Co., Portland, Oreg., and would execute and deliver to the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), at the office of the United States Shipping Board, Washington, D. C., a good and sufficient bill of sale, upon the condition that the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) simultaneously execute and deliver to the Fleet Corporation the mortgages previously referred to, and to the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, a second mortgage as security for the payment to the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, and/or holders of obligations issued under such second mortgage, of such amount representing or arising out of the payments made by the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, as should be agreed by the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) and the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, and specified in such second mortgage.

The Fleet Corporation and the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) agreed with the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, that in case of default by the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) under any provisions of the builder's contract on sales contract that the Old Colony Trust Co., trustee, was to be vested with and exercise all the rights of the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), provided, however, that the Old Colony Trust Co. should not be liable in excess of the obligation to pay the sum of $600,000 for each vessel, or an aggregate of $4,200,000.

2. Number of tankers, 7; dead-weight tonnage, 12,000 each; total, 84,000. Whether built by E. F. C. or caused to be built. Built by Northwest Steel Co., Portland, Oreg., under contract No. 531 S. C., dated April 12, 1920.

Swiftsure, 12,000 tons, January 17, 1921.
Swiftwind, 12,000 tons, June 30, 1921.

Total cost to Government		$17,565,733.59
Lump-sum cost		16,800,000.00
Interest figured as agreed upon to Dec. 31, 1921		432,808.22
Insurance on six vessels from Aug. 3, to Dec. 31, 1921		100,898.50
Marine insurance, Dec. 31, 1921, to Mar. 20, 1922		92,394.23
For changes and extras on seven vessels		134,132.64
For overhead expenses from Apr. 13, 1920, to Dec. 31, 1921, as per contract dated Apr. 12, 1920	$10,000.00
Less cash payment	4,500.00
		5,500.00
Total		17,565,733.59
Total amount realized by Government		6,780,000.00
Cash paid by Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) on vessels ($46 per ton)		3,840,000.00
Cash received from sale of securities to M. G. Chace Co. ($34.50 per ton)		2,940,000.00
84,000 tons ($80.70 per ton)		6,780,000.00

For your information I wish to state that there are open accounts receivable items standing on the books of the corporation against Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) which are not included in the sales price covered by notes and mortgages but which have been included in the total cost to the Government.

For changes and extras on 7 vessels		$134,132.64
For overhead expenses from Apr. 13, 1920, to Dec. 31, 1921, as per contract dated Apr. 12, 1920	$10,000

		5,500.00
For marine insurance from Dec. 31, 1921, to Mar. 20, 1922		92,394.23
Total		232,026.87

In connection with the total amount realized by the Government, it should be borne in mind that the Northwest Steel Co. released the Fleet Corporation from all claims arising out of the suspension and cancellation of six vessels previously contracted for, when the contract for these seven tankers for Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) was signed. The Ship Construction Division estimated this claim on account of cancellation to be approximately $2,690,700, or about $50.96 per ton.

Cash	$80.70
Claim	50.96
Per ton total	131.66

Through oversight of the staff of prior boards, the Swiftsure Co. had not carried out the contract obligations to give to the board the mortgage security on all of the vessels contracted to be purchased which it was contracted the board should have, and without which the Government might suffer total loss.

After several months' effort by the present board, on December 13, 1921, a preferred mortgage was finally executed covering all of the vessels, and notes secured by the preferred mortgage were received by the Shipping Board in performance of the obligation theretofore undertaken by the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.). By the time the belated notes were received, the Swiftsure Co. was already on the verge of complete financial disintegration, and its statement reflected its bankrupt condition.

* * * * * * *

When the present administration of the Shipping Board took office, one of the biggest problems it had to study for a possible solution was that of the so-called "pioneer ship purchasers"—meaning buyers of Shipping Board tonnage at prices ranging from $180 to $225 per ton, who had purchased this tonnage by giving notes secured, in most instances, with mortgages for deferred payments falling due at intervals over a period of years, and all notes bearing interest at 5 per cent per annum.

Most of these "pioneer purchasers" were in arrears on both principal and interest. Some had paid nothing; others had paid varying amounts from 2½ per cent of the total purchase price to 25 per cent thereof, giving notes or contracts of conditional sale for the balance.

Efforts on the part of the board to collect past-due and current amounts due, of either principal or interest, were met universally with the unqualified statements from over 70 of this class of ship purchasers that, owing to the drop in the shipping business and world values for tonnage, they would be ruined and forced into bankruptcy if required to make payments, in whole or in part, on the basis of the contract terms of purchase, which were inflated war prices. A thorough investigation of the financial position of each of these "pioneer purchasers" proved their statements to be correct in most instances.

After months of exhaustive study of this subject, and with full realization of its importance to the development of the American merchant marine, and after a further study of the legal powers and limitations of the Shipping Board in dealing with this situation, the board reached the conclusion that, in view of the generally insolvent condition of these purchasers, it would be impossible to collect the face value of its notes by any ordinary means, and that legal procedure to effect collection would result not only in wrecking these companies, on whom the American merchant marine must depend in large measure for its nucleus, but also in the recovery by the board only of its collateral behind the notes, which was the ships for which there was no market, especially in view of the enormous stock of idle ships already held by the board, and of which it was able to dispose of substantially none.

In view of the above, the board resolved to treat all "pioneer purchasers" as nearly alike as their individual situations would permit by offering for public sale, through advertising methods legally prescribed, these securities, with the predetermined estimate that their realizable return to the United States should be as nearly as possible the current market value of the collateral behind the securities—to wit, the vessels themselves. By this process it was thought and hoped that buyers at least friendly to the "pioneer purchasers" would in each instance be the inchoate holders of the securities. Without exception, this has proven to be the case. At the same time, the board believes that it has met in a practical manner the mandate of Congress to liquidate promptly and to the best possible advantage the assets held by the board for the United States, thus serving in each case the best interests of the United States.

In the process of carrying out this policy, and in the absence of sufficient sales of ships—almost none, in fact—to adequately determine "current market price," the board fixed such "current market price" in each instance to the best of its ability, having in mind, among other conditions, all the conditions to be considered by the board, as specifically set out in section 5 of the merchant marine act, 1920.

This procedure was adopted in every case, with uniformly satisfactory results. One of the important cases was the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.). Using the same methods of determining values, the notes of this company were sold to the only bidder, M. G. Chace Co., for $2,940,000 cash, which equals $35 per ton. This amount was much higher than the original bid of M. G. Chace Co., and was only secured after long negotiations. There was then, and has been since, no real market for tankers, as evidenced by the sale, during 18 months of earnest effort, of only six tankers at $45 per ton, most of which were sold long after the settlement was made of the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.) case, involving seven tankers in one transaction.

By this settlement the United States has received a total of $85 per ton, and now has left 84 tankers which it can not sell at $45 per ton.

Subsequent to this settlement which was made, owing to the precarious financial condition of the Swiftsure Oil Transport (Inc.), the company went into bankruptcy, indicating that either the conditions of settlement were too severe or that some subsequent event precipitated the position which was threatened previously. In either event the board's action resulted in the payment to the United States of $2,940,000 cash which could then have been obtained in no other manner, and, at best, failing this settlement the United States would have received seven tankers to add to its large idle stock of 84 unmarketable tankers, and then only after lengthy and expensive litigation in bankruptcy courts and other courts.

In addition to the financial benefits accruing to the United States by this and all other similar settlements of "pioneer purchasers," the companies involved have been maintained as going shipping concerns, and the ships affected have been kept on the seas under the American flag.

Respectfully,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

PETITIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a meeting of the Foundry Equipment Manufacturers' Association, at Cleveland, Ohio, favoring amendment of the immigration laws so as to provide for admission into the United States of skilled and unskilled laborers, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of 43 citizens of Anamoose and vicinity, in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Albany and Richmond, both in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed by members of the Women's City Club, of New York, N. Y., praying an amendment of the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE BOTANIC GARDEN.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library resolutions adopted by the Garden Club of Wilmington, Del., favoring the passage of legislation to increase the area of the United States Botanic Garden in the city of Washington.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GARDEN CLUB OF WILMINGTON, DEL.

Whereas Senate bill No. 4485 and House bill No. 2166 are now pending before Congress; and

Whereas the Garden Club of Wilmington, Del., is deeply interested therein;

Resolved, That we approve the passage of Senate bill No. 4485 and disapprove the passage of House bill No. 2166; and further be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to our two Senators and Representatives with the request that it be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

MARGARETTA FERRIDAY BARTON
(Mrs. C. Marshall Barton),
President.

Attest:

MARY G. BANCROFT
(Mrs. Henry Bancroft),
Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 263) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to accept membership for the United States in the Permanent Association of the International Road Congresses, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (S. 4309) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii,' approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, granting certain powers to the board of harbor commissioners of the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes," approved July 9, 1921, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1005) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4327) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 4328) granting a pension to Andrew J. Burke; and

A bill (S. 4329) granting a pension to Katie F. Cross; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 4330) granting an increase of pension to Eloise Wilkinson; and

A bill (S. 4331) granting an increase of pension to Cordelia F. McInroe; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4332) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAVAL STORES TRAFFIC.

Mr. HARRISON submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1076) establishing standard grades of naval stores, preventing deception in transactions in naval stores, regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING AT FIFTH AND RITTENHOUSE STREETS.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the acquisition of a site for a public school near Fifth and Rittenhouse Streets NW. In doing so I call especial attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that this site is recommended by the Board of Education and the District Commissioners. I introduced a similar amendment last session, but it was not acted on, notwithstanding a favorable report from the District Commissioners. In this connection I present for insertion in the RECORD and reference to the Appropriations Committee a statement explaining the need of this school, which was called to the attention of the House Committee on Appropriations but which was not acted on. In view of the serious shortage in school buildings in this city, I hope the committee will give favorable consideration to this amendment.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ERNEST H. PULLMAN.
RITTENHOUSE STREET SCHOOL.

201 SHERIDAN STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., December 28, 1922.

To the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS:

I desire to urge inclusion in the District of Columbia appropriation bill an appropriation of $30,000 for the acquisition of a site for a public school at Fifth and Rittenhouse Streets NW. This item was recommended by the Board of Education and the District Commissioners but eliminated by the Budget Bureau.

There are many compelling reasons for a school in this territory. Dr. T. T. Read, of the Bureau of Mines, living at 300 Rittenhouse Street, first suggested a school in this territory. Last year I urged an appropriation for the school, but the House Committee on Appropriations declined to consider the matter. Senator ODDIE, of Nevada, introduced an amendment to the District bill authorizing this school, but it was not acted on, notwithstanding it was indorsed by the District Commissioners, as per letter in the files of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

This school is desired for one of the new rapidly developing residential sections of the city, in which the detached-type dwelling predominates under the zoning law. It is rapidly filling up with residences, and unless a site for the school is soon acquired condemnation proceedings will be necessary, as has been the case in other sections, particularly in Petworth, where a church was condemned for school purposes.

Two sites on Rittenhouse Street which were offered to the school authorities 18 months ago have since been utilized for residence construction.

The proposed school will relieve the congestion now prevailing at the Takoma and Brightwood Schools and permit Maryland pupils near the District line to attend the latter schools instead of requiring them to attend schools down town as is being done this school term.

School pupils living in the Rittenhouse Street territory are largely in the lower grades, and because of the distance to present schools are required to walk a mile or more to the Takoma or Brightwood Schools, subject to the risk of traffic over poorly improved roads. The committee is respectfully referred to testimony on this point given by the school authorities before your committee last year. The new school will accommodate the score or more of young children being cared for by the Methodist Home for Children at Second and Rittenhouse Streets, in addition to the children of others living in the community, who are now required to brave the elements and dangers of traffic in attending the more distant schools. In the case of children in school the full day, the distance prevents them from going home at midday, requiring them to eat cold lunches, and in winter going home at almost dark, which is too long an absence from home for young children. These pupils should have closer school facilities.

It is unnecessary to point out that the residents of this and other suburban communities pay the same rate of taxes as those in the more thickly settled settlements, and that they are entitled to school and other facilities as city residents.

It is also unnecessary to point out that there is justification for the committee in inserting items in the bill not estimated for by the Budget, as there have been several instances where the committee has included items not carried in the Budget, notably the funds this year under the maternity law Certainly needed school improvements should be considered in this connection.

Yours very truly, ERNEST H. PULLMAN.

The amendment, which proposes to appropriate $30,000 for the purchase of a site on which to locate an eight-room extensible public school in the vicinity of Fifth and Rittenhouse Streets NW., was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 403), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 340, agreed to September 18, 1922, authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to continue the employment of an additional clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, until the end of the present Congress, be, and the same hereby is, further continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25, 29, 32, 34, 35, 38, 41, 43, and 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 14, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, 33, 44, 46, 50, 51, 52, 54, and 56, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,730"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,230"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$365,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$280,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$1,670,190"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 97 of the bill, in line 4, strike out "$1,727,700" and insert "$1,769,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$73,000, including not exceeding $38,000 for completion of the widening of the Nisqually entrance to Paradise Valley Road"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$97,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 2, 30, 31, 36, 37, and 53.

REED SMOOT,
CHARLES CURTIS,
WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the conference report be agreed to, as far as there has been agreement on the amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand the Senator to state that this is a final report?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not a final report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

NEW JERSEY SHIPBUILDING & DREDGING CO.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on last Monday the Senate passed the bill (S. 3515) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I understand that he does not desire to press the motion; and as the Senator is now present, I should like to know if he will withdraw the motion at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to doing so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator from New York inform us as to the nature of the bill?

Mr. CALDER. The bill is for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., to reimburse them for a dredge which was sunk by a Government vessel. The bill was debated at length and passed, but the Senator from Utah later entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which that action was taken.

Mr. SMOOT. As the bill now stands, it merely proposes to reimburse the owners for damage to the boat?

Mr. CALDER. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. And does not provide any compensation for the number of days during which the boat was laid up?

Mr. CALDER. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider having been withdrawn, the bill stands passed.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a short editorial from the New York World of this morning bearing upon the proposed legislation now on the calendar having for its purpose the validating of certain illegal taxes levied against national banks. I ask unanimous consent to have it incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[New York World, January 12, 1923.]

CONGRESS AND THE BANK-TAX MUDDLE.

We do not know why Representative OGDEN MILLS and other complainants should be taking the bank-tax troubles of this State to Washington. The place for them to go to is Albany.

Congress can not well do better than it has done under a law passed nearly 60 years ago. This law permits the States to tax national-bank shares as personal property to the owner but the rate of tax must not be higher than on other banking capital. So this State for years has had a tax of 1 per cent on the book value of shares in all banks, national or State, and it has continued this tax after all other intangible personal property has been exempted from the old tax.

Then came the State income tax to make good the loss of revenue from prohibition's conversion of the excise taxes into profits for bootleggers, and this is the cause of the whole mischief. The 1 per cent tax on bank shares was continued and income from the shares was taxed additionally. But private or unincorporated banks are taxed on income alone, and not over 3 per cent, which is, of course, a very much lower tax than 1 per cent on the capitalized value of income. This is a clear discrimination in favor of some moneyed or banking capital against that of the national banks in New York State. Those banks object, and why should they not? And they have won in the recent decision of the court of appeals.

What would Mr. MILLS and the others have Congress do? Validate the discrimination? Congress should not and never will do it, and if it did the Supreme Court would have something to say. The thing to do is to end the discrimination, and that is a job for Albany, not Washington. Congress can pertinently be appealed to on this score for such a liberalization of the Volstead law as will restore to this and other States similarly situated some part at least of their old excise revenues. But how otherwise?

CLAIMS OF NORWEGIAN SUBJECTS (S. DOC. NO. 288).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State respecting the arbitration of claims of Norwegian subjects against the United States arising out of requisitions by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation requesting that I recommend that an appropriation be made to satisfy the award rendered by the arbitral tribunal against the United States, with interest to date of payment, and that in making the appropriation authorization be granted to withhold from the total amount of the award the sum of $22,800 with which to pay the claim of Page Brothers, American citizens, mentioned in the agreement of June 30, 1921, and in the award of the tribunal.

I recommend that in order to effect prompt satisfaction of the award made by the arbitral tribunal the Congress authorize the requisite appropriation.

A copy of the award is attached hereto.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1923.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have had handed to me by the Secretary of the Senate a telegram giving a copy of a senate joint memorial adopted by the Washington State Legislature relating to the need of the appropriation for seed wheat in certain sections of Washington, which was put on the pending agricultural appropriation bill yesterday. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

OLYMPIA, WASH., January 12, 1923.

SECRETARY OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

I herewith transmit senate joint memorial from the Washington Legislature.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled respectfully represent as follows:

Whereas a large area in the State of Washington which constitutes one of the largest wheat-growing districts of said State; and

Whereas the annual yield of wheat in this district has averaged 20 bushels per acre; and

Whereas by reason of drought there has been a failure of crop; and

Whereas the bankers, dealers, millers, and business interests in the district have from time to time during said drought period advanced loans to the farmers to provide seed wheat; and

Whereas said credit is now exhausted; and

Whereas the moisture in said district during the past few months has been sufficient to justify the belief that the season of 1923 will bring a normal crop; and

Whereas there are approximately 300,000 acres in said drought-stricken district that are ready for seeding, but which the owners will be unable to crop unless they are extended help to provide seed; and

Whereas said assistance must be available during the month of January, 1923, or it will be too late to make a crop this season:

Now, therefore, your memorialists respectfully petition that the Congress of the United States appropriate the sum of $500,000 for immediate relief of the wheat growers in the said drought-stricken district. And your memorialists will ever pray.

VICTOR ZEDWICK,
Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] whether he regards as pending the amendment which is shown in the record of yesterday's proceedings as having been presented by him? There is some confusion in the record with regard to the matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to discuss the amendment before a point of order is made against it. I sent it to the Secretary's desk yesterday for the purpose of giving notice to the Senate that I would offer it in connection with the amendment then pending. I did not want to have it construed as pending so that a point of order could be made against it at that time. I stated that I wanted to present it this morning and discuss it. My understanding was that we were going to take a recess then, as we did, and I am now ready to present it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desired to be informed in regard to the matter, and will assume that the amendment is not pending.

Mr. LODGE. Is not the amendment of the Senator from Alabama pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion, based on the record as it appears, that the amendment has not been offered and is not pending.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator from Alabama just offered it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has not yet offered it. The Chair will now recognize the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Agricultural appropriation bill is now under consideration by the Senate. The item that has long been contained in the bill for the distribution of choice field and garden seeds has been stricken out. The Budget Bureau made no estimate for it. When the bill was under consideration in the House of Representatives the item was put in the bill in Committee of the Whole, but when the committee rose and the seed-distribution amendment came up in the House proper a point of order was made against it, and the Chair sustained the point of order. An appeal was then taken from the decision of the Chair, and the matter was disposed of on motion to table the appeal, I believe.

Now, Mr. President, we are in this situation: The House of Representatives, with a large majority of Members who favor this item, have been so tied and bound by the rules of that body and by the action of the Budget Bureau that it has been unable to get what its Members desired for their people back home. That is the situation. I talked with Members of the House on yesterday, who told me that a considerable majority of the Members of the House were in favor of the seed-distribution item.

Mr. President, when the bill came to the Senate the Appropriations Committee having the measure in charge failed to incorporate in it the item for the usual distribution of seeds. A year ago the same situation existed. The Senate then put back in the bill this item which had been left out, and I am hoping that the Senate will pursue the same course to-day.

I presume a point of order will be made against the amendment. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] last evening indicated an enthusiastic willingness to make the point of order against the amendment. I could not help being reminded of the Senator's conduct on yesterday morning when he appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and asked for an increase in the appropriation to exterminate the corn borer in New England. How placid and how mild-mannered and kind-hearted he was when he was appealing to our committee to come to the rescue of the corn producers of his section, and when we generously agreed to recommend the additional appropriation asked for, how the Senator bowed and smiled most graciously; but after he had obtained what he wanted in the bill and came back upon the floor of the Senate when some of us asked that thousands of farmers in the United States, including the farmers of New England, should have the benefit of the distribution of choice field and garden seeds, thereby introducing many different varieties of seed in the various communities of the country, the Senator was ready to make the point of order and deny our request. I was reminded of what happened to me once when I practiced law more than 20 years ago. I was defending a man in the circuit court in my home county.

I talked to a character witness who had many favorable things to say about my client. He impressed me so favorably that I decided I would put him on the witness stand. When, however, I called him to the stand to testify in behalf of my client, to my utter surprise and amazement he testified that he would not believe him under oath and that his general character was bad. I was so dumbfounded that I said to him, "Do you not remember having a conversation with me in front of the courthouse this morning, and you said to me that he was a man of good character and that you would believe him on his oath?" He replied, "Yes, squire; I recall that, but the situation is different. I was talking then, and I am swearing now." [Laughter.] So the Senator from Massachusetts displayed to us the generous and gracious side of his nature when he was asking for aid to crush the poor little corn borer in New England; but when some of us ask for an appropriation to provide for the distribution of seed throughout the South, to the cotton-factory towns, where the children do not have the garden facilities that are available to some in other sections and are not able to buy seed as some others are, where the seed may be distributed and be the means of enabling the planting of gardens in their communities, the Senator from Massachusetts changes his attitude altogether and evinces a disposition to strike the whole thing down.

Mr. President, I do not believe, in the first place, that the amendment is subject to a point of order, because the same provision is existing law. It is in the last Agricultural appropriation bill. The amendment does not propose to change the law. It may be out of date under a Republican administration to do so, but I am going to take the position that the Senate of the United States is at liberty to do what it pleases regarding an appropriation that affects the welfare of the people of this country.

I take the position that the House has a right to do that. I am aware of the fact that Congress has surrendered many of its rights under the Budget rule set up by the Republican Congress. We wanted a Budget arrangement made, but we did not expect, Mr. President, to surrender all the rights of Congress. We expected to have a kind of auditing committee to help hold appropriations down, but we did not propose to set up an all-powerful bureau and give to it power greater than that of the people's Congress. Yet that has been done by a Republican Congress.

What are we doing now? We are submitting to the estimates made by the Budget Bureau, no official of which ever had any experience in agricultural matters. There is not a thing in the history of any one of the officials of that bureau which indicates that he knows anything about agriculture. Then, I submit to the Senate, what right has one of those men or all of them to tell Senators from the agricultural sections of the country that they shall have or shall not have a certain item in the Agricultural appropriation bill?

I have been looking in "Who's Who" to find out of whom this Budget Bureau is composed. I find that General Lord was born in Rockland, Me., and that he is a member of the Army and Navy Club. That well fits him for understanding the needs of agriculture in the South and West. Another one of them was born in Ohio; and another one in Iowa; and all of them, I believe, are members of some club—the Metropolitan Club here, or some other club. The other four members are not even listed in "Who's Who." I submit that that would be a very convincing argument among the farmers of the United States—to tell them that a Budget Bureau was composed of men of such peculiar qualifications to pass on matters of this kind. That would be a very convincing argument to them.

Mr. President, I find that this Budget Bureau is not so cheeseparing in some matters as with regard to agriculture. I find that this Budget Bureau was good enough to provide for an increase in the appropriation for the Navy. Do Senators catch the full significance of that? A disarmament conference, assembled in this city not long ago, pledged this Government to a reduction of war armaments of every kind, and pointed out the necessity of cutting down expenses in connection with providing war implements. Here is an appropriation flying in the face of those recommendations, flying in the face of the plighted faith of this Government, and the appropriation in time of peace, when we are at peace with the world, is larger than it was a year ago, and I have not heard one word of condemnation from the Budget Bureau for its conduct in this regard. Is this Budget Bureau to become a biased or partial concern or instrumentality to dole out favors to certain interests in the country? Can it be that those who make money out of building battleships and furnishing material to go into battleships are more powerful with the Budget Bureau than the millions of farmers in distress in the South and West?

Who was it that was present when this Budget Bureau made up the estimates for the naval appropriation bill? Who was it that was so powerful that they persuaded that bureau to put in an increased amount for naval affairs? Who was it that was present when they were induced to cut the Agricultural appropriation bill $6,000,000?

Mr. President, they have stricken down some of the most important and essential agencies in the field of agriculture. They have stricken them out—these members of the various clubs in the city of Washington, these members who know absolutely nothing about dirt farming, who know nothing about the needs of the people out yonder, struggling to live under the deadly influence of a deflation conducted by the Republican Party.

"Oh," they say, "we will strike it out"; and I find here that Doctor Sawyer has been a constant adviser of the Budget Bureau. Now, think of that! What does Doctor Sawyer know about agricultural affairs? What does he know about the necessity for distributing choice field and garden seeds in the South? Why, he does not know anything about it.

The people of the United States will not submit to having these affairs run by a few high-brow, narrow-visioned men.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but may I make a statement? The Senator spoke about Doctor Sawyer knowing nothing about farming. Doctor Sawyer owns and lives upon a very large farm which he operates himself, or which is operated under his direction, at Marion, Ohio—White Oak Farm.

Mr. HEFLIN. What does he produce?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Every kind of thing that can be grown in that locality. He runs it in connection with his sanitarium there.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am glad to hear that. I pause for other Republican Senators to tell me what experience the members of the Budget Bureau have had with regard to farming. I mentioned Doctor Sawyer incidentally, because the report showed that he had been there hobnobbing with the bureau. He might have been after an additional appropriation to fight the corn borer of Ohio, as the Senator from Massachusetts was for his section of the country.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] appeared before our committee and made a splendid speech in favor of an additional appropriation for the corn borer, and I dare say that is just what Doctor Sawyer was doing there—trying to get an additional appropriation to fight the corn borer. His interest in the corn borer has evidently called him to the Budget Bureau's sessions. What does he know about cotton, sugar cane, and sweet potatoes?

Now, I want somebody on the other side to tell me what the members of the Budget Bureau know about farming—about agriculture in any form. I am willing to yield to any Senator to tell me what qualifications the chairman of that bureau has, or his assistants have, to tell Senators from the South and West what should be done regarding agriculture. I pause for a reply. I do not get any reply. There is not a Senator over there who can tell me any reason why these men should have this power. There is not one of them there who can tell that a single one of them ever had any experience in farming or knows anything on earth about farming.

Mr. President, I submit that it is wrong—it is outrageous—to appoint a Budget Bureau composed of men who are friendly to certain big interests and who smilingly approve increased appropriations for a Navy when the rank and file of the American people are trying to get away from hateful war. You have here a bureau that will recommend the appropriation of additional sums for that purpose, and yet agriculture, the most peaceful industry of them all, the one which produces that which feeds and clothes the world, is to be kicked about, is to be denied a fair chance in the struggle for existence, while these special interests can be taken care of.

Let me read to the Senate briefly from a list of appropriation bills that have been passed:

Navy, an increase over a year ago.
State Department and Department of Justice, an increase over a year ago.
Department of Commerce, an increase over a year ago.
Post Office Department, an increase over a year ago.
Agriculture, a decrease of $6,000,000.

Mr. President, agriculture is already suffering more than any other industry in the country. Who increased these other appropriations and cut down agriculture? Why, the Budget Bureau. Has it any farmers on it? Not one. Has it any man on it who has any knowledge of agriculture? Not one, so far as I know. I have turned to the Republican side of this Chamber and I have challenged any one of them to tell me if he knows of any experience that any one of them has had that would equip him for the work of passing on appropriation bills affecting the agriculture of the United States, and not a Senator there can rise and give such information.

Mr. President, I submit that it is an outrage on the millions of farmers in the North, East, West, and South to have a Budget Bureau composed of men who are hostile to agriculture. It may be out of ignorance—I do not know—or lack of information on these matters, but we ought not to be made to suffer for that.

Oh, Mr. President, if the American people knew how little by little the rights of the people are being surrendered to the special interests of this country they would be alarmed about what is going on here. Could there be a more ugly piece of testimony showing the centralization of power than a Budget Bureau with authority to fix an item in an appropriation bill and to override the will of a majority of 435 Members of the House, coming up from all over the country? That is what you have. Every Member of the House will tell you that under the rule and under the law as you have fixed it the House were bound and tied and could not vote on the question of whether or not they would have seed for distribution as formerly. That question was not permitted to be put to the body. They were not allowed to vote on it.

Why do I say that? An amendment was put on in Committee of the Whole, and the House showed that it favored this item. It voted it in; and when the bill got back in the House the same amendment was presented, and a point of order was made against it, and the idea prevailed that the Budget Bureau and the ruling of the Chair must be sustained. That was the issue, and not the issue as to whether they should have seed. Any Member of the House will tell you that they have not yet had an opportunity to vote on whether or not they would have seed distribution, and yet a majority in the House want seed. How are you going to answer an argument like that? That is what I want to know. There is no denying the fact that the House has been shorn of its power.

What is Congress for? Why pay 435 Members to represent the American people in the other branch of Congress if you are going to have a Budget Bureau of seven men to sit in judgment in these matters and override their will? If you are going to make laws to conform to the will of seven men instead of doing that which the American people want done—this is their Government—you ought to change the rules and let this Budget Bureau do certain things but not give it the power that it has.

I will tell you what ought to be done with it, Mr. President. The Agricultural Committee, of which I am a member, ought to have the right to make up its own bill and then submit the whole bill as made up to the Budget Bureau, or invite the Budget Bureau, at least, to come down to the Agricultural Committee. I am in favor of that. They are getting so big that they will want Congress to come up there. I want to bring them down in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and say to them: "We have provided an appropriation of $40,000,000," or whatever it is, "and we have gone over all the items, we have heard the testimony, and we believe this amount is necessary. Now, what have you to say about it? Have you any testimony contrary to that that we have had? We shall be glad to hear you," and then let us decide whether we will accept the judgment of the Budget Bureau or not.

That is not the way you do it. You have taken away from us the right to make up the bill. We have nothing to do with it, and the Budget Bureau tells us what we can have, and from its judgment there is no appeal. Do you think the American people are going to stand for that? Not long.

Mr. President, that Budget Bureau can be made very useful, and I am in favor of fixing it so that it will be useful; but I am not going to sit silent, coming from an agricultural section, and permit men in a Budget Bureau, who do not know anything about agriculture, under conditions where nobody in the Senate can say that either one of them is fitted from his knowledge of agriculture to pass on agricultural matters, to send a proclamation to the Senate stating "you can have this much and no more." I do not intend to submit to it. It is right and proper that we should have these items go in which are needed by the agricultural interests of the country.

Take the case of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. They had not provided for the corn borer, and yet the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] convinced me that they really needed this additional money. The Budget Bureau had denied it, and but for our action in requesting it, and the unanimous consent granted in this Chamber, that proposition would not have been in order. Think of that, that we are so tied by the order of the Budget Bureau that the whole Senate is helpless unless unanimous consent can be had to permit somebody to get a favor. Then they close up the unanimous-consent business, and somebody rises and says, "I make a point of order against the other," and you put in the hands of one man, who makes a point of order, and the Chair, who may decide with him, the authority to determine the whole matter. That is wrong, Mr. President. It ought not to be the situation.

Mr. President, I understand that since the naval appropriation bill was passed, with an increase of a million and a half or two million over the last appropriation, it has been discovered that the officials neglected to put in an estimate of six million and a half dollars for some service in connection with the big guns to be used on the battleships and that the Budget Bureau is ready to make proper recommendations for that.

It is proper that these things should be emphasized. This Government ought to deal fairly with all classes. It ought to be absolutely fair to those who make money out of building big navies. It ought to be fair to those who make money by furnishing war implements of any kind. It ought to be fair to every legitimate interest in the country.

I have no hostility toward any legitimate institution in the country. I want every one of them to have a fair deal, but I am getting very weary of having special authority lodged in the hands of special agents or special interests to pass on matters that affect the whole people of the United States; and when I see those special agents doling out favors to one class of people and striking down another class, I think it is my duty to call attention to it and to protest against it, and that is what I am doing here to-day.

If I can, I want to make Senators see how measly is this effort to strike out $360,000 to buy choice field and garden seed to distribute among 110,000,000 people; how measly it is; yet you are getting ready to vote $50,000,000 subsidy to the Ship Trust. I suppose you want to deprive the little children who enjoy these flower seeds and the poor who enjoy the vegetables produced from these garden seed, in order to accumulate, little by little, the money that you want to bestow upon the Ship Trust.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the Senator state that the House was denied an opportunity to vote upon this proposition?

Mr. HEFLIN. I said they were denied an opportunity to vote on the question of whether they would have seed or not. The vote was on an appeal from the Chair. The Chair had ruled that the matter was not in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not a fact that the House, by a vote of more than 2 to 1, sustained the Chair in the ruling that it was not in order?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I stated they sustained the Chair, and I stated day before yesterday that the Chair, in a way, in his ruling, appealed to the House to sustain his ruling, and I never heard of that being done before since I have been a Member of Congress, and I have not talked with anybody who does remember such an occasion, where the Speaker himself, a man from New England, far removed from the great grain-growing West, far removed from the cotton-producing South, ruled that an item was out of order, and appealing from the Speaker's chair to the Members to sustain the judgment of the Chair, and the judgment of the Chair was sustaining the action of the Budget Bureau, no member of which has one scintilla of qualification to pass on agricultural matters.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator state that the Speaker of the House made a speech asking the House to sustain his decision?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have been told by a very reputable and responsible Member of the House that in his ruling he made an appeal to the House to sustain him.

Mr. LENROOT. Has not the Senator read the ruling? Would the Senator make a statement of that kind without reading the ruling?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I would if it were told me by certain Members of the House.

Mr. LENROOT. When the Senator has the RECORD before him, and could verify it if it were true?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator, since he has said that, if there is anything in the ruling that would substantiate the proposition that an appeal was at all made by the Speaker to the House in this matter?

Mr. LENROOT. There is nothing. The Speaker did not say one word following his ruling, "The Chair sustains the point of order." The RECORD is there. The Senator could have read it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am talking about when the Chair was passing on the point of order. What did he say?

Mr. LENROOT. He passed on the merits of it, and held, of course, that it was not in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. And in that statement appealed to the Republican side to sustain his ruling, I have been told.

Mr. LENROOT. It seems to me that before making a statement of that kind concerning the Speaker of the House the Senator might have read the RECORD that was before him.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let me say that the Senator is not satisfied on that question yet.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that the Senator read the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator will read it before he will admit that the Speaker did not make the appeal. I am not satisfied about it yet, because I believe that the Member of the House who heard him and told me that he made that appeal told the truth. I do not know whether the RECORD was changed after the ruling was made or not, but I am going to make a further inquiry into it. I do not make a statement on this floor unless I have reason for it, and I have not made one yet that has been disproved. I am not satisfied about this. I will look into it. Senators will hear from me again on this. I will not be switched off from this other matter now.

I have already commented on the Navy appropriation, and there is an increase in the appropriation for the Department of Justice. Here is the Department of Commerce with an increase; here is the Post Office Department with an increase. The State Department, which has to do with our foreign affairs, has had its appropriation increased.

The Department of Justice, which has been so severely criticized by Senators on this floor, has had its appropriation increased, and the Budget Bureau has acquiesced in it all; but when it came to doing something for the farmer, $6,000,000 are lopped off, and no good reason given for it. In the case of some of the items which we have looked into—one suggested by the Senator from Louisiana—it has been shown that the Budget Bureau was wrong and made a mistake in their ruling in the matter.

One item called attention to by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] was the mosaic parasite, which injuriously affects sugar cane. We asked for $10,000 additional to fight that pest in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, and the other Southern States, and the Secretary of Agriculture and his advisers recommended that we have it. What happened? The Budget Bureau turned down the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and his advisers. Then what happened? Every southern Senator was in favor of this item. The Members of the House from the South were in favor of it, and certain men from Iowa, Ohio, Maine, and elsewhere decided that the South should not have $10,000 additional to check a new pest that is making ravages in the cane fields of our section.

What happened then? We came to make inquiry, and what were we told? The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said that the Secretary, or somebody speaking for him, stated, "I am not at liberty to tell you what we recommended." Senators, think of a Cabinet officer saying, "I am not at liberty to tell you what we recommended. You will have to go to the Budget Bureau to find out what we recommended."

In better and brighter days a Member of the Senate could get the information he wanted from a Secretary who was free and unfettered, who would tell him what he knew, and do it gladly and fearlessly; but now you have tied the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and so embarrassed him under the Budget bureaucracy that he declines to tell a United States Senator what he advised regarding a pest making ravages in that Senator's own State, and advises him to go to the bureaucracy of the Budget to find out what he had recommended. Oh, Mr. President, when the American people get onto this arrangement there is going to be a stir amongst them, and you are going to hear from them.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] did find out that the Secretary of Agriculture and his advisers had recommended this thing, and he was able to state on this floor that they had recomended it; yet with the whole South backing the proposition the Senator from Wisconsin rose in his place to make a point of order against the proposition, and it was about to go out. I believe the Chair made the ruling, though none of us heard it, that it was not in order.

What did we have to do because of these restrictions you have thrown around the Congress, because of these surrendered rights of the American people? We had to assemble the Committee on Agriculture again and recommend that $10,000, and come in and ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed, so that we could get that $10,000 for the cane producers of the United States. Does anybody think the American people are going to stand for such methods of procedure?

I stated before that there had been stricken out of the bill many very meritorious and important items. No reason was given for it. The agents in the field said, "We need the money"; the Agricultural Department said, "We need the money"; the Budget Bureau said, "You can not have it"; and the Republican Senate is voting to sustain the judgment of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. President, I want to say to my friends on the other side of the aisle that this treatment of the agricultural section of the country in refusing to permit these choice garden and field seeds to be sent is in very bad taste when we consider what they have done for the other departments of the Government. The distribution of seeds has become an institution in the country. For a long, long time these seeds have been distributed. Old men in the South and West, too old to do anything else much now, go to the post office in the springtime asking if they have any mail. The postmaster says, "No." They say, "Well, about this time of year I usually get a package of seed from the Government. I am getting too old to do anything else much now, so I make a little garden and I enjoy the garden, and my grandchildren all enjoy the vegetables produced from those seeds. Hasn't my package of seeds come yet?" "No; they have not come, Uncle Johnny." He comes back again the next day, and again. This is happening in the South and in the West. Finally the postmaster says, "Uncle Johnny, you will not get any seed this year. The Republican Congress has stricken out the item which carried a small appropriation for this purpose and you will get no more seed from the Government." Then Uncle Johnny will shake his head and say, "Well, that is about all I have been getting for the last two or three years from the Government while the Republicans were in power, just a little package of seed, and now they have taken that away. Why have they done that, Mr. Postmaster?"

The postmaster will say, "Well, they have to raise a lot of money. They are trying to pass a ship subsidy bill up there. Some of the ships that cost us $600,000 and $800,000 each are being sold to the Shipping Trust for $1,600 and $2,100, and the Shipping Trust is not satisfied with that. It wants the Government to pay it $50,000,000 a year to run the ships after being given to it, and the Government has got to get the money from somewhere and this $360,000 will help some. It is not much, but they have to get money wherever they can, so they have decided to take it from you and the children and the people generally in the agricultural section, in the little villages, in the towns, and in the rural districts of the country."

Mr. President, they have stricken this item that permitted us to send a few cuttings of vines of various kinds. I have seen some of the cotton factories in the South—in South Carolina, for instance—where they have planted these cuttings and the places where the boys and girls have to work looked like a school yard, with flowers blooming and vines creeping up along the walls of the factory buildings. They had robbed the buildings of a look of despair and gloom and nakedness which they had in the old days. They were making these places attractive. Flowers bloomed about the factory, vines trailed up the walls, and that was one good that this small appropriation did.

Not only that, but we used to send the seed to the schools in the West and South and the community schools, where four or five communities would send their children to one big school, and where they would use the cuttings and flower seeds to make the school yard and school building and whole surroundings more attractive. Now, some Senators on the other side of the Chamber are ready to make a point of order to prevent the sending out of any of the cuttings or any of the little vines or any of the seed that have given so much pleasure in the days that are gone.

Mr. President, when I see Senators over on the other side of the aisle vote to increase the naval appropriation bill, the Department of Commerce appropriation bill, and the Department of Justice appropriation bill, and then striking down agriculture in this way, already on the toboggan slide, already stricken and wounded sore, I think of the story that the beloved and lamented Senator Bob Taylor used to tell about the widower who had one son 8 years old. The widower married again, and by the second wife he had two or three boys. In the fall time when the weather got cold he went to town to buy some shoes for all of them. He brought back nice, warm, comfortable soft shoes for the children by the second wife, but the boy by the first wife was having a hard time. He brought him a pair of rough brogan shoes. The boy put them on and sat looking at the fireplace and the tears gathered in his eyes. His father said, "What is the matter?" He said, "They hurt me." He said, "Don't they fit?" "Yes; they fit, but they hurt me," he said, with a sob. "Where do they hurt you?" He said, "They hurt me in here," pointing to his heart.

Mr. President, it is enough to touch the sympathy of those who have sympathy to see how agriculture is treated by the Republican Senate and the Republican House. Here is one little item, not quite one-half of $1,000,000, which is proposed to be eliminated, and yet twenty-odd million dollars were appropriated to buy seed and vines and anything else wanted in Russia for a people far across the sea. But the $360,000 is going to be struck out because the Budget Bureau does not want us to have it.

As to the naval appropriation bill, the Steel Trust said "increase it," and it was increased. I asked the Senator in charge of the naval appropriation bill on the floor whether the amount was larger this year than last year and he said it was larger. I assert to-day that the agricultural appropriation bill is crippled by the taking out of it, without rime or reason, of $6,000,000. Those of us who come from the agricultural sections where the boll weevil has worked so much ruin, where deflation has destroyed the prosperity of the people and bound them in the bondage of the mortgage, feel as did the little boy—it hurts us in our hearts to see Republican Senators standing here and fighting to strike out a little item of $360,000.

Mr. President, I have gone through my State and I have often stopped at the homes of farmers. They would say, "Come in and have dinner. We have some vegetables produced from the seed you sent out. They are fine. The neighbors are all bragging about them." Mr. President, it gives them a little comfort. I appeal to Republican Senators to allow us to continue to enjoy that little measure of comfort. We have sent out a few of the flower seed. I have seen the flowers blooming by the roadside, in yards about the houses of humble surroundings. I have scented their fragrance as they cheered the inmates of that humble home. But now I see a concerted drive here to strike out the appropriation for that purpose, and it is said "What care we for their comfort? What care we for the perfume of the flowers in those localities? What care we for the vegetables they may produce? The Budget committee, composed of university club men and metropolitan club men, have said we can not have it, and because, forsooth, they made no provision for it, we shall not have it." The House, hog tied by its rules and by the judgment of the Budget bureaucracy, never had a chance to express its judgment in favor of free seed.

I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that he go and poll the Members of the House as to how they feel about free seed distribution. I dare say they will tell him, if he will promise not to tell the Budget Bureau, that at least a great majority of them are in favor of sending out these seed.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate much longer. One of the things accomplished by seed distribution was this: For instance, some western farmer had been working on a certain kind of seed until he had produced a very fine product. He communicated with the Agricultural Department. He would say, "Here is a fine tomato seed. Whereas in certain sections they have been producing small tomatoes, I have produced from this seed a large lucious tomato. You ought to distribute the seed." So the department would say, "They are choice seed—prize seed—and we will distribute them"; and in that way they were introduced in my section and in other sections. That applies to seeds generally. But the provision is to be stricken out and this opportunity taken from us.

What has the medical profession done in this regard? Some surgeon has performed an operation and he tells the symptoms to the doctors in convention assembled. He did not know what it was, but he decided a certain thing was the cause, and he performed the operation and found he was correct. So he told the other doctors of it, spread the news, and thus many lives were saved by the dissemination of that information.

So here we are with just a little more than a quarter of a million dollars, having the opportunity each year to spread among the people a variety of choice seed, the best seed in the country, and we are about to be deprived of it. I am told that last year, or possibly the year before, we had 232,000 garden acres; that they produced $195,000,000 worth of vegetables and other garden truck; and that of this about one-tenth or a little less was produced from seed sent out by Congress. Think of that.

Suppose they had produced but $2,000,000 worth from it, that would be a pretty fair return on the investment. We would get a better return from that than from the $50,000,000 which it is proposed to give to the Shipping Trust to stick in their pockets and rejoice as they ride across the briny deep and sit upon the deck on moonlight nights looking at the stars and singing the praises of the Republican Congress for the kindly gift of a $50,000,000 subsidy. Oh, Mr. President, there are a great many curious things happening here.

How would my friends on the other side of the Chamber defend themselves out on the stump? Suppose somebody should rise and say that we had formerly distributed seed in the community and that they were very much enjoyed and did a great deal of good. They would ask why you ceased to send them. What would you say? Some of you would say that you did not think the people appreciated them. They would tell you that you were very much mistaken. They would say, "We know that the big seed houses have been fighting this appropriation for years; we know that they have for years and years carried on a consistent and persistent propaganda to prevent the free distribution of seed; we know that they are in a position to contribute to the campaign fund of your party, which they have done, no doubt, and are therefore entitled to be heard, and at last the big seed houses have triumphed, and the school children, the women, the masses generally in the rural districts have lost." That will be the story written about this transaction if this item of $360,000 be dropped from the pending bill.

The people will also ask you to explain why you voted to excuse the big income-tax payers from paying $90,000,000 a year and go free, for we get not a dollar from that source to-day.

They will further ask you to explain why it was that you permitted the profiteers to be excused from paying $450,000,000 a year; and they will ask you why it was that you paid without question $700,000,000 of questionable war contracts after the war was over? Then they will ask you, lastly, "What about increasing the appropriation carried in the bill for the Navy, in the bills for the Department of Commerce, for the Post Office Department, for the State Department, and for the Department of Justice, while you struck down the appropriation for agriculture? What about the $50,000,000 that you are proposing to give as a ship subsidy when you will not appropriate even $360,000 to give cheer to the women and the children of the country who would like to see a flower blooming about the yard; to give cheer to the old men and women who are now too old to do much else but work a garden, and who derive pleasure from receiving a little packet of seed from the Government?"

Mr. President, I am reminded of what Sam Jones, the great evangelist, once said to a little country boy. When Sam was driving through the South one hot day he came upon a little piece of branch bottom land just after a rain, when the weather was steaming hot. A little boy was down there plowing. He had run around the corn. There are Senators on the other side who do not know any more what I am talking about than the Budget Bureau would know when I say that he "ran around the corn." [Laughter.] I am going to use another similar expression. He had barred it off. Some Senators think I mean by that he had put it in the shape of an iron bar. He had barred the corn off and left it, because the rain had come, and it had rained so continually that he could not go back there and plow the corn again and throw the dirt back to the roots. So the roots of the corn had become exposed, and the sunshine between the showers had caused the blades of the corn to turn yellow.

This little country boy was down there plowing; he was holding the great big handles of a Columbus plowstock; and he was throwing the dirt to the corn, tugging away, brave little hero of the kingdom of agriculture. As he tugged along he reached the end of the row. Sam Jones stopped his buggy, just over the fence from the boy, and said, "Whoa! Ah, that is a little hero, and I must say a word of comfort and cheer to him and interrogate him a little." He said, "Son, you have neglected your corn until it has turned yellow." The boy said, "Yes; we planted the yellow kind." [Laughter.] "Get up Beck," he said to his mule. The boy just turned right around and drove back and left Sam Jones sitting there in the buggy perplexed; but he decided to take another crack at the little fellow. So when he came back Sam said to him, "If you do not hurry up and cultivate that corn very rapidly, you will not make more than half a crop." The boy replied, "Working on halves, anyhow," [laughter], and he turned right around and drove on back down the corn row to the other end. This reply angered Sam Jones considerably, and when the boy came back the next time Sam looked at him and said, "Do you know that there is very little between you and a fool?" The boy said quickly, "Nothing but a fence. Get up Beck." [Laughter.] And he drove on.

Here are Senators over there who voted to excuse the great income taxpayers the payment of $90,000,000 a year, excusing the profiteers the payment of $450,000,000 a year, paying questionable war contracts amounting to $700,000,000, and about to give to the ship trust $50,000,000 a year in the form of a subsidy, and yet they are about to deny to the whole agricultural people of the United States the right to have a few flower seed and a few garden seed and choice field seed that cost in all just $360,000. How far are they removed from the fence that the boy spoke of in his reply to Sam Jones? [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that there has been no estimate made for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the amendment had been moved.

Mr. HEFLIN. Was the Senator attempting to make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I intend to make the point of order against the amendment when the time comes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Merely for the Senator's benefit, I will say a few words more. Then I shall be through, and I shall give him a chance to take such action as he desires.

I appeal to the Senator to let us continue in the bill the item for seed distribution. If it shall be continued, gardens will spring up as if by magic; choice green vegetables basking in the sun and reveling in the rain will rise up and call him blessed; and when the table groans with a variety of fruits of the garden and the faces about such a splendid repast are beaming with smiles, all will gratefully remember that while Republican Senators were proposing a subsidy of $50,000,000 to the Shipping Trust they paused long enough to permit $360,000 to be appropriated to encourage citizens everywhere to raise their own vegetables by distributing among them a variety of choice vegetable seed. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to harden not his heart.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I suggested yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packing, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry, and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for nor has it been recommended by any committee, for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry voted it down, and the Committee on Appropriations did not report it. I may also say that the Department of Agriculture is opposed to it. In any event, it is general legislation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, before the Chair rules upon the point of order I desire to state that we did not have a full attendance in the Committee on Agriculture when the question was considered. I believe there are sufficient Senators, members of the committee, who are favorable to the interests of agriculture to vote for the free-seed amendment; I am satisfied that a clear majority of the members of the committee are in favor of the proposition. However, of course, I am in the hands of the Senator from Massachusetts and the majority. If it is determined that the Budget Bureau shall be followed instead of the justice of the cause and the merits of the case, of course, I do not know that there is anything else I can do; but I should be very glad if the Senator would withdraw his point of order and let us vote on the question and have a roll call. Such a roll call would be very interesting; I myself will undertake to make it interesting in some sections. I should like to present the issues involved here to the people who sit in front of the speakers in 1924 during the Presidential campaign, and I should like to let them know how much influence is possessed by the big seed houses of Chicago, from which one of the hotel proprietors came who demanded that this bill should be reduced a million dollars. I should like the people to know the whole facts in the case. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his point of order and let the Senate vote upon this question

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SIMMONS. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McCumber	Shields
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Simmons
Bayard	Harreld	McKinley	Smith
Borah	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Moses	Stanley
Cameron	Johnson	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Townsend
Couzens	Kellogg	Norbeck	Underwood
Culberson	Kendrick	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Ladd	Overman	Warren
Ernst	La Follette	Phipps	Weller
Fernald	Lenroot	Pomerene	Williams
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to say just one word with reference to this appeal.

I hope the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who appealed from the decision of the Chair, will, before the vote is taken, undertake to tell the Senate wherein he thinks the Chair was wrong in making this ruling. It does not seem to me possible that any Senator can believe the Chair was wrong in the ruling that he has just made; and it therefore involves the question whether the Senate of the United States proposes to be governed by the rules that the Senate itself has made. It is not a question of the merits of this case, whether a Senator is in favor of free seeds or not. It is a question of whether a Senator believes the President of the Senate has made an erroneous ruling. If, in his judgment, the ruling of the Chair was correct, I submit that it is the duty of every Senator to vote to sustain the decision of the Chair.

This same question has been up before many times. This identical matter has been ruled upon by the Senate heretofore. It has been ruled out of order. Not over two weeks ago the same identical question was up in the House. The Chair properly ruled that the item was not in order, and he was sustained in that ruling by a vote of more than 2 to 1. I hope the Senate will not now violate its own rules by declaring that the Chair was wrong in the ruling that he has made, when it seems to me that every Senator must be satisfied that instead of being wrong the Chair was right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was under the impression—and I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I am wrong about that—that an estimate had been made, and that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had refused to make the appropriation in accordance with the estimate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, no estimate was made. The item was not estimated for by the Budget Bureau. It was not estimated for, nor was any appropriation proposed by the Agricultural Department. The Agricultural Department is against it. Both the committees before whom this matter has come have refused to report it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was aware, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had refused to make the appropriation, but I assumed that the department had made an estimate.

Mr. LODGE. No; the department made no estimate at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assumed that an estimate had been made because this item has been in the bills from time immemorial; and if the Agricultural Department at this time has not made an estimate for it, it would seem that the Agricultural Department has changed its policy with reference to this matter.

Mr. LODGE. The Agricultural Department is opposed to it, and has been for some time.

Mr. SIMMONS. When the Senator says "for some time," how long a time does he mean?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly for several years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think, if the Senator will allow me, the Agricultural Department by word of mouth has said that it was opposed to it, but I think heretofore it has always sent down an estimate.

Mr. LODGE. They had no estimate last year. At all events, they sent no estimate, and the Bureau of the Budget sent no estimate. There was no estimate before Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that point. My impression is that heretofore the Agricultural Department, without regard to whether or not it was in favor of the legislation, has made an estimate and sent it to the Congress, and that the Congress for many, many years has never failed to adopt legislation to carry out that estimate.

Mr. LODGE. What the Agricultural Department has done in the past does not affect the present. No estimate has been made for it either by the department or by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not the question I am asking the Senator. I am asking the Senator if this is not the first time that the Department of Agriculture has failed to make an estimate for this item?

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think the fact that it is the first time makes it in order?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not. I am not contending that, but I am asking my question of the Senator for the purpose of corroborating the statement which I have just made, that I assumed when I made the point of order that the Department of Agriculture, in pursuance of the common custom in this matter, had made an estimate, and that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of this body had refused to make the appropriation in pursuance of that estimate. Of course, if I am mistaken about that I wish to withdraw my appeal, because I think in that case there is no ground for an appeal from the decision of the Chair; but when I made the point I did not know that the Agricultural Department had been so derelict in this matter, or that the Agricultural Department had now suddenly changed its immemorial policy with reference to this item so important to the agricultural interests of the United States. I want now to stress the point—and if I am not right about that I should like to have some Senator enlighten me—that this is the first time the United States Agricultural Department, whether it was in favor of this legislation or not, has assumed to itself the right summarily to cut off the appropriation by refusing to estimate for it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Not for a period of two years has the Agricultural Department made any estimate on this item. The department failed to do so last year as a matter of policy, which I approved, and likewise this year. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget made no estimate for it. It was not reported by the committee in either branch of Congress; and, indeed, yesterday, at a meeting of the Agricultural Committee, 11 being present, the committee voted to keep this item out of the bill. The ruling on the point of order as made by the Chair, I think, is entirely correct.

That, briefly, is the history of the situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, then, as I understand, last year the Agricultural Department did not make an estimate; but, notwithstanding that fact, the committee brought in a bill and we did make an appropriation. So, after all, this Republican Congress can not escape its share of the responsibility.

Mr. McNARY. The House committee reported the bill with that item in it, and the Senate refused to agree to it; but in conference the Senate conferees yielded in order to get an Agricultural bill out, and the item remained in the bill for this year.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that in the last Congress, while the present Secretary of Agriculture did not make an estimate for this purpose, the Congress took the bit in its mouth and made the appropriation. I had assumed, without recalling the facts, that the estimate came from the department and the Congress acted in accordance with it.

We have this fact developed, Mr. President, as the result of this colloquy, and it is that fact which I wish to emphasize and get before the people of the country, especially the farmers of the United States, that up to the time the present administration came into power no Secretary of Agriculture, at least for many years in the past, has refused to make an estimate to lay the foundation for an appropriation to purchase a few special varieties of seed for the benefit of that vast proportion of our population which is engaged in agriculture.

I understood one Senator on the other side to say that they would gladly assume the responsibility for this action of the Republican Secretary of Agriculture. They are entitled to the responsibility, and I give them the responsibility willingly; but I want the farmers of the country to understand where the responsibility is and what party for the first time has refused even to make an estimate and give the Congress of the United States an opportunity to express its judgment as to whether or not this little pittance that heretofore has been allowed the farmers, and which they have appreciated very much, shall now be denied to them upon, I suppose, the ostensible plea of economy.

Mr. President, we hear a great deal about the economy of the present administration. When you begin to analyze the foundations of this claim you will find that their economy consists in the lopping off of small, petty sums, while they pay no attention to the large appropriations which are demanded in behalf of the big interests of the United States.

Mr. President, I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair, because it was made by me under a misapprehension of fact; but I am amazed to know that the Republican Secretary of Agriculture, in disregard of all the customs and precedents and the repeated action of Congress in granting this little pittance to the farmer, has assumed the responsibility of refusing even to let the Congress know what the estimate would be of the expense of furnishing this seed in case it should desire to continue this appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator will withdraw his appeal, because I think in the circumstances the Chair is eminently correct, and upon the appeal I should have been obliged to vote to sustain the Chair. The Senator was laboring under a misapprehension, as he has explained, as the foundation for his appeal. As the case is, clearly the point of order is well taken against the amendment proposed.

The discussion, however, brings to light a situation which ought to be impressed upon the Congress, it seems to me. For instance, although Congress may feel that an appropriation ought to be made for certain public purposes, if department refuses to estimate for that appropriation in any way, Congress can not legislate and can not provide the appropriation

It is emphasized somewhat by a situation of which I know where Congress has authorized certain aids to navigation in navigable waters, as was done two years ago in a particular instance. The Department of Commerce has never made any estimate covering that item, and therefore no appropriation has been made. I have offered amendments to appropriation bills to take care of that item, authorized by Congress, and have been confronted with the proposition that the proposal is out of order, can not be considered, and can not be allowed, because no estimate has been made by the department covering the item. So we find ourselves unable to carry out the purposes of Congress, even after laws have been passed authorizing certain improvements, certain public works, because the department does not see fit to lay down an estimate covering those items. That situation is intolerable, and I hope we can find some way out of that dilemma in order that the public business may be properly conducted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to imply that the committee having jurisdiction may not recommend any appropriation that is authorized by law that it sees fit to recommend, regardless of an estimate or want of estimate by the Budget Bureau?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the proposition which has always been put up to me when I went before the committee with an item of that sort, that inasmuch as no estimate was made by the department the committee did not feel authorized to recommend it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean that they do not feel authorized. They never allege their want of authority, but as a matter of policy they may decline to do it. The Senator understands that they have jurisdiction and power to make an appropriation if they choose to make it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have so contended, but without success, because they fall back upon their lack of power to do it, and base their inability upon the proposal that the department have not made any estimate for it, and therefore that they are not empowered to recommend the appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator indicate any committee that has taken the position with the Senator that they had no power to recommend an appropriation because it had not been estimated for by the Budget Bureau?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Appropriations Committee has done that repeatedly.

Mr. LENROOT. On what bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. On appropriations bills, at various times.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator signify one?

Mr. FLETCHER. I could point them out by a little examination into my previous experiences before that committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sure the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Florida say this: That the committee is governed largely by the estimates, but has never stated its want of authority? It usually follows the estimates, as far as it can, because the departments inquire into the matter; but as to the want of authority to bring in an appropriation, it has never said it had no power to do it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been the impression given me that the committee did not feel authorized or empowered to recommend the appropriation because there were no estimates by the department.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee might have felt disinclined because of the lack of estimates.

Mr. FLETCHER. If they had put it upon that ground, I could have had some sort of remedy, perhaps, but that has not been the ground, apparently, on which they sought to base their action in discussing the matter with me. In a case of that sort if the committee says, "We propose to be governed by the estimates, and the estimates are not here, and therefore we will not act upon this; we must reject the amendment or the proposal," they are still accomplishing the same thing. If they lay down a rule that they will not go beyond the estimates, it accomplishes the same thing as if they had no power to do it.

Mr. LENROOT. In the one case the criticism would be directed against the committee and in the other against the law. Certainly the Senator sees the distinction.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see the distinction. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will insist upon that being the law. So far I have never heard it insisted upon by any member of the committee before which these matters have been presented.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield further, I wish to say, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that it has never been represented to any Senator that the committee had not jurisdiction to either increase an appropriation or make a new one, if it was authorized by law, irrespective of Budget estimates. I certainly have always taken that position as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator has not been a member of the committee a very great while. He became a member in March, 1922. I have not presented a matter of that sort to the Senator while he was a member of the committee so far as I know, but I have had matters of that kind before the committee, and they have invariably rejected the proposals because there were no estimates. That is the ground upon which they put their action.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true, too. The Senator knows that the question of a Budget has been discussed from one end of this country to another.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe a great majority of the people of the United States believe in the Budget. Nearly every civilized country has it, and I am very glad we have one.

Mr. FLETCHER. I voted for the Budget law.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator voted for it. I wish to say now that General Lord, the head of the Budget Bureau, is one of the very best men in the United States for that position. I know of no man who is his equal, and I want to say, in passing, that General Lord is the only man in charge of Government appropriations who in years past has come to my office and pointed out to me where an appropriation could be cut so as to save the Government of the United States money and not interfere with the activities of the Government.

I do not know whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, and I do not care to which party he belongs. I know that when a question arose, when General Dawes was going to leave the service of the Government, as to where to get a man to take that position, I told the President that there was one man capable of filling the position just as well as General Dawes or any other living man, and he was General Lord. I want to pay tribute to that splendid man. I do not believe there is a man who looks after the interests of the Government better than he. He would do no one any harm, and he would make no recommendation for an appropriation that he did not believe to be absolutely necessary. As far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, there would have to be some mighty good evidence to cause me to vote to increase an appropriation that has been recommended from the Budget.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I know General Lord. I met him in connection with military matters, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I have the very highest respect and admiration for General Lord. I have no question about his capacity, his ability, and his integrity. So far as I am concerned, I can pay to him personally just as high a compliment as can the Senator from Utah, and I do not know his politics and never have bothered to inquire about his politics.

Of course, this is a matter not controlled by General Lord. I am not making these observations as in any way reflecting upon the Bureau of the Budget. If the department does not submit estimates to the Budget Bureau, the Budget Bureau is not likely to go and dig them up, to hunt up items which have been authorized by Congress in previous legislation in order to recommend an appropriation.

I think the fault lies with the departments in not following up the acts of Congress authorizing appropriations for public purposes, such, for instance, as aids to navigation, making recommendations and estimates with reference thereto. Of course, if the departments do not submit estimates to the Budge Bureau the Budget Bureau is not likely to know about them at all. They would not be likely to bother about previous legislation, and find out what items should be taken care of as having been authorized in the past. I do not care to dwell upon that subject further; I only mentioned it.

I am glad to have developed the fact that the Appropriations Committee feels authorized to deal with items, notwithstanding the absence of estimates. I shall take very great pleasure in presenting a few of them to the committee, and I hope I will get some sympathy from that committee, because there are items which have been authorized by Congress in previous years and have never been taken care of, and the only reason given for not taking care of them was that the departments had not made estimates for them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I indorse all that both Senators have said about General Lord. I think he is one of the most efficient men we have in the Government service. I have known him for a long time. I knew him when he was in charge of the supply bills of the War Department, and I regard him as a man of great ability and one who wants to do what is exactly right for the Government in the line of economy and efficiency. But as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and as a Member of the Senate, I wish some way could be determined upon by which the Senate could know how much the departments have estimated to the Budget as the amounts they think necessary to be appropriated. I think the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has an amendment along that line. We have not that information. Information is sent to us by the Budget in the Book of Estimates, but how much the departments estimate for we do not know.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations ought to have that information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we will have it. We will devise some method of getting it.

Mr. FLETCHER. They ought to compare the estimates of the departments with the estimates submitted by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; to see how much the Budget has decreased an estimate asked for by a department. I think the Senate ought to have them, and I think the Senator from Mississippi has an amendment that will cover that matter. I will ask the Senator if that is not the case.

Mr. HARRISON. I intend to offer an amendment carrying out that idea before the bill is passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will support that amendment most heartily, because I think Senators ought to have full information as to the amount necessary to be appropriated for certain items. If the Budget has defeated an item, they ought to give some reason for their action.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the committee ought to have that information. Now, I wish to submit just a few observations regarding the bill, but I will yield for the Chair to make an announcement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] having withdrawn his appeal, if there is no objection the order for the yeas and nays upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair will be rescinded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there are two items in the bill to which I would like to direct the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge and the Senate for a few moments. The first item I would call attention to is found beginning at the bottom of page 49 and continuing on page 50, reading:

For investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $165,000.

That appropriation is intended to cover all the various subjects mentioned, practically all kinds of field crops, cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, and so forth, and the cigarette beetle and the Argentine ant. Therefore there is carried in the bill an appropriation of only $165,000 for all these subjects. It seems to me if we go so far as to provide a specific appropriation, for instance, for the barberry bush, and a specific appropriation for the corn borer, and for various other matters pointed out and named in the bill and especially set forth, that we ought to dignify the evils of the boll weevil by making an appropriation especially applicable to the elimination and treatment of that very great menace to an important industry in the country. I do now know what the estimate was either from the department or from the Budget. I presume perhaps this is in accordance with the estimate submitted. It does seem to me, however, that the amount is too small and wholly inadequate if we are going to give any proper treatment to the subject of the destruction or control or elimination of the boll weevil.

I have before me a copy of the Lexington (S. C.) Cotton News of January 1, which contains a very interesting and instructive article, entitled:

Crisis in cotton-growing situation can only be relieved by solution of several pending economic problems of vital concern to the growers.

The article is quite lengthy, and I shall not ask to have the whole of it put in the RECORD, but just to show the importance of the one subject I would quote from it to this extent:

ENORMOUS DESTRUCTION OF COTTON BOLL WEEVIL IN ITS STEADY MIGRATION AND INFESTATION OF THE COTTON AREA OF THE UNITED STATES.

Within the past 30 years the cotton boll weevil has extended its infestation over practically 97 per cent of the entire cotton area of this country. The boll weevil to-day is far different from his ancestors who crossed the Mexican border into Texas some 30 years ago. He has a far stronger vitality. Climatic conditions which meant annihilation to his forefathers now fail to destroy him or even seriously affect his vitality. Although persistent efforts have been put forth by governmental agencies and private individuals and vast sums expended during this entire period for the purpose of discovering some method or means of destroying or controlling the weevil, still no practical method has yet been discovered and no method of checking its persistent invasion and destructive ravages invented.

As the result of experiments and study in Florida there was devised a remedy which appeared to have very considerable merit and no doubt is of very great value, but this article would seem to indicate that it is insufficient and has the objection of being too expensive, and that there is an absence of the material necessary to carry out the proposed plan of extermination as devised by Doctor Newell and his assistants in Florida. That plan was called the calcium-arsenate application plan. It seems there is a shortage of the material and that it is a very expensive method of dealing with the situation.

The article would seem to indicate that although they know of that plan and it is valuable in many ways and great progress has been made along the line of finding a way of overcoming this very serious pest, yet, at the same time, he is still flourishing and still carrying on his devastating work, and evidently there is much to be done in the way of investigation and treatment of this devastating insect.

The article continues—

The past two years have been the most destructive during the full 30 years of the insect's presence in the United States, and the spring of 1923 will find the growers, generally, in a more helpless and defenseless position to cope with this menace to the cotton crop than during any of the years that have passed and gone. The production of a normal crop in 1923, under prevailing conditions, is humanly impossible. Nothing short of the most favorable climatic conditions in all sections of the Cotton Belt in 1923 will enable the growers to produce a crop in excess of the short yield this season.

The record of the weevil in its gradual infestation of the cotton States shows a reduction of between 60 and 70 per cent in production of the first two years' invasion in each State, with a gradual return to 50 and 60 per cent of yield per acre, with the most favorable crop seasons, as compared with production under preweevil conditions.

So that when this pest attacks cotton it reduces production from 60 to 70 per cent. After the invasion has begun and after dealing with him and treating the situation in every possible way to avoid his destructive consequences, they will get back only to a 50 or 60 per cent production as compared to the time before his invasion occurred, and in some States only to 30 or 40 per cent. The article shows that in Georgia and South Carolina they have dropped to 30 per cent in the last two years, and their future as important cotton-growing States is a matter of the gravest uncertainty. The article is a most interesting one. As I said, it discusses the new discovery by Doctor Newell and the plant board of Florida, the calcium arsenate application, and shows that it is insufficient and inadequate and does not accomplish what ought to be accomplished in the way of dealing with the pest. We have scarcely begun the work that ought to be done. I have great faith that much more can be accomplished.

There is much yet to be learned. The article contains an estimate of the cost of the application, showing apparently that the cost of it is so great that by the time all that is involved in the cultivation and treatment of the plant is taken into consideration there would be nothing left for the grower.

I refer to this because while we are dealing with various pests affecting agricultural production in the country and specifying appropriations for particular things, running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, yet when we come to deal with this pest we link him up with various other items and only appropriate $165,000 to cover the whole field of crops.

I inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether or not the department has considered the matter and reported on it, and whether they feel that they can not use any greater amount than this with good effect and with proper economy, or whether this is just a mere estimate to enable them to go on with some experiments which they are now making?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Florida that the department did not recommend any sum in excess of the amount carried in the bill, namely, $165,000 for this item. It went to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget in that sum. The director reported a like sum to Congress. The department heads appeared before the House and Senate committees and made no request for further sums, nor did any witness appear before either of the committees urging a larger appropriation. Consequently a larger appropriation was not made.

The Senator well knows that only enough money can be used to carry on investigational work. This year most of the money was devoted to different poisons that might be used to exterminate the boll weevil. It was found that it cost in the neighborhood of $3 to $5 per acre to apply it. Now, the Senator knows that Congress could not appropriate enough money, even in cooperation with the States, to eradicate the male and female boll weevils of the South.

There is only one practical thing to do and the Senator knows it better than I do, because he is a southern farmer and I am a western farmer. The Senator will have to zone the country and exterminate the cotton upon which the boll weevil lives and feeds and thrives, by a rotation of crops. When that is done the evil will be exterminated.

A part of Georgia, Florida, and North Carolina, for instance, could be taken and an absolute change in character of the crops made. It has nothing then to feed and thrive upon and will perish. Within a year, by a change of crop, the boll weevil would be exterminated. That is the only practical way in which it can ever be done. All Congress has ever done was to appropriate enough money to experiment to find some practical way by which not that the boll weevil may be destroyed but the ravages controlled.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon mean to suggest that if we rotate the crops on a given piece of land, it would eliminate the boll weevil?

Mr. McNARY. I make the assertion not, as I said, as a southern farmer, but I have read literature which has led me to believe it. I ask the Senator, who raises tobacco and corn in large quantities, if it is not a fact that if he would rotate crops, if he would plant an entirely new crop, not on a particular piece of land but, as I said, in the whole region, he would eventually exterminate the boll weevil?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course we could exterminate the boll weevil by stopping the raising of cotton.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The boll weevil extends over practically the entire cotton area, and we could not exterminate it by that process unless we stopped raising cotton in the whole southern area.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator did not get my thought. I used the word "zoning." We might go into every State and divide it into four quarters and take one-half or one-quarter and replace the cotton there by some other crop. The losses would not be great, but in two or three years, by keeping up the production in that way, eventually we would destroy the bug that does so much damage annually to the cotton crop. That is the practical way to handle the matter, and some day the southern people will understand it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Oregon understand that if I should not plant a single acre of cotton upon my land and my neighbor within 50 miles should plant some of his land in cotton that the boll weevil would get to his cotton? Suppose we take a whole county, and it decides that it will not plant any cotton at all for the purpose of destroying the boll weevil. The counties around, however, plant cotton. Does not the Senator know that the boll weevil would get into the counties where it was planted?

Mr. McNARY. Why, certainly; but I assume that the people of the South are sufficiently patriotic and generous and have sufficient good judgment to take the larger use of the county, or perhaps of the State, or part of the South, with natural physical barriers between them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I make the point that the boll weevil extends over the whole area, and we can not zone it unless we include the whole area.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think so at all. I know there are natural barriers which would prevent the boll weevil traveling from locality to locality. It is easy to discover those barriers in rivers or mountains. But, in any event, I wish to make this point in reply to the Senator from Florida: Nowhere down the line has there been a request made for a larger sum of money for this purpose than that which is specified in the bill. That is the reason, I will say to my good friend from Florida, that the committee did not report an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is exactly the information which I wished to obtain. I myself do not know all of the circumstances, but I can not understand why a request was not urged before the committee or the department for a greater appropriation, for I conceive this to be a most important matter, one of great public concern not only to our country but to the entire world, for it concerns the production of a commodity to which the whole world must look for clothing.

I would not for a moment indicate that I should ask any such appropriation as would take care of the situation to the extent the Senator suggests may be necessary in order completely to deal with the subject. I know that local organizations and associations and individuals and States are cooperating liberally and are exerting themselves to the limit in the effort to overcome this great menace; but it does seem to me that they have not as yet scratched the surface in the way of investigation in order to determine what enemies exist or what methods or means may be devised for successfully controlling the boll weevil.

I wish that those investigations, studies, and experiments may be continued and others presented until something comes of them, as I believe that something will come of them.

A few years ago there was imported into the State of Washington from Japan what was called the citrus canker. From the State of Washington it spread into Texas, and from a nursery in Texas to a nursery in Florida, until the whole citrus industry was threatened. If we had not seized that situation in time and made a proper appropriation in order to help the States—legislatures not being in session just then—and to help the communities, as we did, cooperating on a 50–50 basis, and put the experts of the Department of Agriculture in the field to study the conditions and the means of overcoming that terrible disease of the citrus trees and fruits, we probably would have lost the whole citrus industry. This year Florida is sending out 15,000,000 boxes of oranges and grape fruit; but if the citrus canker had not been dealt with as it was dealt with last year and the year before and the year before that we should have been sending out probably only 1,500 boxes this year. We have saved the whole citrus industry and we have absolutely destroyed and gotten rid of the citrus canker in the State.

I believe that something of that sort may be done with reference to the boll weevil if we go at it in the proper manner and with sufficient persistency and give the department a little leeway in the matter of finances to aid the experts from the department. I admire them greatly; I honor them and respect them and am proud of them, because they have done splendid work in this field of investigation. The scientific men in the Department of Agriculture are experienced, and they know how to handle that situation in cooperation with the States and the communities everywhere. I believe they can conduct a successful fight to exterminate the boll weevil. We have, however, got to help them by making the proper appropriations. Of course, if nobody has asked for an increase in the appropriation, it is not incumbent on me to propose it at this time. Any amendment that I might offer proposing to increase the appropriation would properly be held to be out of order at this stage.

There is just one other item which I desire to mention. I notice that in the report of the committee, in the list of increases in the bill as reported from the committee to the Senate, there is an increase in the appropriation for "Forest roads and trails as authorized by law" of $3,500,000. I am not quite able to see that that is a matter of prime importance and need. When we are trying to economize, when we are cutting down the appropriations which are intended to help safeguard the food supply of the country, why should we now go to work and spend $6,500,000 to build roads in national forests?

Is it important that all of these roads should be now built? This bill carries on page 81 an appropriation of $6,500,000 for carrying out of the provisions of certain sections of the Federal highway act, and so forth; in other words, the committee proposes to increase the House provision, so far as roads and trails are concerned, by $3,500,000. It seems that an appropriation running into millions of dollars may be obtained for building roads in the forests, where few people live who can use them, but when it comes to making provision to reduce the ravages of devastating pests that destroy the food products of the country we have to economize and eliminate the items or make but meager appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator how much his amendment carries in excess of the appropriation provided in the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not offered the amendment, because I know it would be out of order. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] advises me that no estimate has been made by the Agricultural Department or by the Budget Bureau for an amount in excess of that carried in the pending bill. Therefore an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation would now be out of order; so I have not offered an amendment.

I am, however, calling attention to it, and, in conclusion, to the increase proposed by the committee of three and a half million dollars over the House provision for building forest roads and trails, making the total $6,500,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I know the Senator from Florida does not wish to misstate the record or misrepresent the actual situation. There has not been an increase in the item to which he refers over the House appropriation; it is only an apparent increase. Congress two years ago authorized the expenditure of $6,500,000 in 1924 for the construction of forest roads. Three million dollars, it was thought, would be sufficient to start the work in 1924, and the balance, $3,500,000, would be carried in a deficiency appropriation bill. The Senate committee thought, however, it might as well make the money all available in the pending bill rather than make half of it available in this bill and have half of it carried in a subsequent deficiency bill. So no appropriation is proposed in this bill in excess of any estimate or any law. It is simply handling the matter in one way instead of another. The whole amount proposed to be appropriated here, however, has been heretofore authorized.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been authorized by a previous Congress?

Mr. McNARY. It has been authorized by a previous Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I do not wish to mislead at all, but I was controlled by the report of the committee accompanying the pending bill. Under the head of "increases," the report states:

Bureau of Plant Industry: Eradication and control of the white pine blister $50,000

That is an increase. Under the head of "increases," also appears, "Bureau of Agricultural Economics," the increase is $283,600. Then, under the head of "increases," appears "Special items," the increase, according to the report, for "Forest roads and trails, as authorized by law," is $3,500,000 over the House bill. The amount carried by the bill as reported to the Senate is $72,901,653; the total increase by the Senate bill over the House bill being $3,833,600—made up of the increases mentioned. Included in that increase is the item for forest roads and trails, $3,500,000. That is all I care to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I listened a moment ago to the interrogation propounded by the Senator from Florida to the Senator from Oregon. The Senator from Oregon replied with his usual frankness, sincerity, and mental probity. I was astonished, however, to hear his reply, because I rather accuse myself, if it be true, that no increase on this particular appropriation has been asked for by anybody, as he states the case to be, and of that fact I have no doubt because he said it.

Mr. President, I desire to warn the Senate once more—I am not long to stay here—against the great mistake they are making in their attitude toward the boll weevil and the cotton crop. If they think that the amount of cotton produced in the United States of America is a mere sectional agricultural question, they are vastly mistaken. As a landowner and as a planter I can get along even though the ravages of the boll weevil shall become twice as great as they are now, because I can adapt my supplies and my mode of farming to the difficulty.

Mr. President, I may say that I am particularly addressing my remarks to the Senator from Oregon because he is the Senator who will have charge of the bill in the future. I quite realize that just at this moment I am speaking in the air, because any amendment which might be offered would probably go out on a point of order, as the Senator from Florida has said; but if Senators imagine that this is a sectional agricultural question, they are very much mistaken.

It does not affect the landlords of the South to any great extent. The plantations in which I am interested made more money last year raising cotton than they made in I do not know how many years. We had gradually adapted to the conditions the species of cotton to be planted and the mode of cultivation, and we had supplied ourselves with aid through cooperative societies in marketing our crops. We made less cotton, but the landlords made more money, and the rents upon the average cotton plantation in the South have been increased.

Mr. President, it just so happens that cotton is the poor man's clothing all over the world, not alone in America, not alone in Europe, not even alone in America, Europe, and Asia, but in the very wilds of Africa—wherever a man wears a woven breechclout, and much more where he wears more clothing. Even so-called woolen goods are for the most part sold because they are cheap, and they are cheap because they are mixed with cotton. The greatest calamity that could happen to the poor people of the world would be for cotton to be stabilized at a price above their power to purchase. A man may do without food and starve to death without violating any law of any State or of the United States, but he can not go out unclad or half clad without making himself liable to the penalties of the statutes against indecent exposure.

So that as between clothing and food, so far as the public is concerned, clothing is a much greater necessity than food itself. Food may be a greater necessity to the individual who is starving, but it is never as great a necessity to the public at large.

Mr. President, not only is it true that cotton is one of the essentials of living of the poor all over the world, no matter where, but it is also true that, so far as the United States of America are concerned in their international exchange relations with the balance of the world, cotton is almost the most important single product that enters into it; and if the semimonopoly of America in raising cotton shall pass out of existence at any time we shall be deprived of one of our arms in the international economic fight. It has been the case for years at a time that our entire so-called balance of trade has been owing to the production and sale abroad of cotton.

Mr. President, if cotton goes up to a price to which it threatens to go now, the world is full of valleys and hillsides that can raise cotton that hitherto have not raised it because foodstuffs to feed a numerous population in those parts of the globe have been of very much more importance, and they could not at former and normal prices subtract the amount of land necessary to raise cotton to any appreciable extent from the amount necessary for wheat and for rice. Cotton can be raised all through central China and all through southern China. Cotton can be raised toward Persia, from the Caucasus down pretty nearly to the Persian Gulf. Cotton can be raised in southern Russia and over nearly all of South America. Hitherto it has not been raised, for two reasons: First, because it could not be raised profitably at the old normal price of cotton, something between 10 and 15 cents; secondly, because, although they had the cheap labor—"the man behind the gun"—they did not have "the officer on the quarter-deck."

Mr. President, the man on the quarter-deck in cotton raising in the South was the old southern planter, his sons, and his grandsons. There never was any agriculture that reached as high a state of perfection as the agriculture concerned with the production of cotton in all its different phases in the different parts of the South, not because we had the best and the most intelligent labor—we were far from having it, either in slavery times or now—but because perhaps the most intelligent man on the agricultural quarter-deck that this world ever saw was the southern planter. He directed his forces; he coordinated them: he planned in advance. He was not only a great agriculturist, by the way, but he was, as our history proves, capable of furnishing the greatest statesmen and the greatest lawyers and the greatest diplomats—whether the greatest or not, very great, at any rate.

If, by not getting rid of the boll weevil, you shall bring about a condition of things under which cotton can be sold at a normal price of from 25 to 45 cents instead of from 10 to 15 cents, parts of the world not afflicted with the boll weevil, plumb across the Atlantic and plumb across the Pacific, where the boll weevil would have a pretty hard time traversing the water, will begin to raise cotton at 15 to 18 or 19 cents more abundantly than we can at the higher price, and the semimonopoly of America as the land of cotton raisers will be totally destroyed. With the semimonopoly of the cotton producer will go the magnificently increasing cotton-manufacturing business of New England and of the South, and with that calamity will come the calamity of the textile operatives in all the mills of the country; and when you add to that the calamity of the poor all over the world who will have to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more for still the cheapest clothing that there is—because, even at that price, cotton will be cheaper than wool or linen—you get some sort of an idea of the immense calamity that will come to the world and to this country as a whole, and not solely to any part of it as a section.

I am perfectly aware that when we speak of trying to extirpate any fatal enemy to the cotton crop, we apparently come here like the fellows who wanted appropriations for peach groves in Delaware and Massachusetts, or the men who wanted something for insects destroying vine culture in California. It looks that way at first blush, but it is not true. You could destroy every peach orchard in Delaware and New Jersey and all throughout New England, and you would not materially affect the prosperity of the American people. You could dig up every vine in California to-morrow, and you would not materially destroy the prosperity of anybody except the people who own the land on which they are raising the vines. That is about all.

Speaking as a cotton planter, I have come to the conclusion that I have no personal interest in this appropriation. I can get along; I can make just as good a profit; but my darkies who are working for me can not, because if I am forced to change the character of my agriculture, instead of having one tenant or share hand or laborer for each 16 or 20 acres of land after turning them into cattle ranches and sheep pastures and hog-raising divisions, I will not need one man to 50 acres. So the labor would go. It either must then submit to decreased payment per diem or per month, or it has to move and hunt occupation elsewhere.

I hope I shall be excused for having made these few remarks. I had made a vow to myself not to address the Senate any more; but I tell you that this is not a question that is sectional at all, and it is not a question affecting a class at all.

Speaking for my class, we can get along without your help, but our labor will have a harder time because we can not employ as many of them nor those left so constantly. Cotton is a very intensive crop. Somebody said once that it took 13 months to make a cotton crop each year—a month over the year itself—and when you get through with it and you have sold it, it pretty nearly does. It is a very intensive crop; so much so that in the richer and stiffer lands one man and a mule can not cultivate over 16 acres, and in the lighter lands he can hardly go over 25. In your agriculture out West, where you can use machinery of various sorts, one man can attend to anywhere from 50 to 200 acres, depending upon the character of the crop that is planted. Of course, sugar beets, and a few things peculiar in their character, are an exception; but they are never the main crop. They are never the crop relied upon altogether for the prosperity of the community.

If America ever loses her supremacy as a cotton producer she will almost certainly lose her favorable balance of trade. When she loses, if she does, her favorable balance of trade, she will lose her commanding position as a dictator of the rate of exchange, and so the national trouble will go clear up to the banks.

A wonderful thing is this plant cotton! The Germans call it baumwolle—tree wool—this wool that grows on a branch, on a shrub, so ancient that we do not know who first cultivated it, who first planted it. It was in Egypt long before we have any history of Egypt. The very first records mention it. It was in Persia long before America was discovered, long before the Middle Ages, long before the introduction of Christianity. It seems that God had thought that whereas men had begun to wear clothing beyond a fig leaf, and whereas they had gotten by social development into a situation where they must pay for their clothing, it was necessary that there should be something to give them an opportunity to buy cheap clothing; and with cotton at a bit—12½ cents—to 15 cents a pound, the world could be supplied through this plant forever with cheap clothing. Hitherto it has been supplied for the most part by these United States of America.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wanted to state my part in this appropriation in reference to the boll weevil and sustain what the chairman of the committee has said.

There was some doubt in my mind as to whether or not they had distributed these appropriations under different heads so that there might be what in my opinion was an adequate appropriation to combat the boll weevil. I mean, by having it under different heads, that they were approaching the problem from different bureaus within the Department of Agriculture. So I took occasion to ask the Secretary of Agriculture what provision, if any, they had made to carry on their experiments and their warfare against the weevil. He sent down a member of the Entomological Bureau and he pointed out the paragraph or the place in the bill which appropriated $160,000, which appropriation comprehended all southern field crops. That was a surprise to me, because I knew that this entomologist appeared to be very enthusiastic in his desire to experiment still further looking toward the eradication, or at least the control, of this pest. I asked him if he thought that was adequate. He said they might perhaps advantageously spend $20,000 more.

In other words, the Agricultural Department, through the Bureau of Entomology, having this matter in charge, seemed to be satisfied with the appropriation carried in the bill. I, having no personal knowledge of the methods employed by the Bureau of Entomology in experimenting as to the control and extermination of this pest, was not in a position to say that any more was necessary. In years gone by, when this weevil was comparatively new in this country, we were appropriating something like $600,000 annually. Whether or not the entomologists have practically surrendered and come to the conclusion that they can find nothing to check the insect, or at least to modify its ravages, I do not know. The history of the weevil is to the effect that about 27 years ago he crossed the Rio Grande, and his annual progress has not been materially checked from that day until this; until now, I am advised, he is at the extremity of northern cotton production in Virginia. He has moved along about 60 miles a year, with practically the same degree of destructive ravages, until he crossed the Mississippi River, and when he had crossed that river and had gotten into the wooded section of the east, the Atlantic Seaboard, where the facilities for hibernation were greater, his destruction far passed the destruction that was common west of the Mississippi River.

I do not know why the department did not ask for more money, or why they made this estimate. I took it for granted that the entomologists knew what was necessary to enable them to discharge their duty in the circumstances. This was what they asked for last year, and this is what they have asked for this year. I can not conceive how any great experimentation of a practical nature can be carried on with the total appropriation for all southern field investigations of $165,000.

I shall not go further into this matter pertaining to this appropriation. I vindicate the part I have taken in not asking for any addition by the fact that the Bureau of Entomology, in the Department of Agriculture, which has the responsibility in this matter, has not asked for any more, and I am not in a position to know whether they could use it if they got any more or not. Therefore I did not ask for any more.

The Senator from Mississippi a moment ago took occasion to mention the supremacy of cotton, and the conditions that would enable the southern landlord and others perhaps to be more prosperous without it than with it. A gentleman came into my office this morning who is connected with one of the great cotton organizations of the South. It is his duty to gather valuable and reliable statistics as to conditions. He had sent out post cards to every county in the Cotton Belt asking, among other things, these very pertinent questions: What per cent of labor has left your farm during the current year? What is the mule power now used?

Most cotton is cultivated with mule power or horsepower. What is the ability of the cotton growers east of the Mississippi River to finance themselves another year?

He just poured down on my desk indiscriminately the replies from several States. The percentage of labor that has left the farm ranged from 20 to 50 per cent, the average being about 35 per cent. The decrease in animal power was about the same. Less than 5 per cent of the cotton growers were reported in a condition to finance themselves the coming year as to fertilizers and other supplies necessary to make the crop. Yet I saw in one of the commercial journals that the South was getting ready next year to plant perhaps 40,000,000 acres of cotton. I make the assertion—and believe I am well within the statistics—that 35 per cent of the cotton labor of the South has left it in the last 12 months. They have gone to the industrial centers of the East, the North, and the Northeast. There is nothing there for them under present conditions. If there ever was a national menace, we will feel it this year in our national income. We will feel it more acutely next year, and if some method is not discovered by which the ravages of the boll weevil can be overcome cotton planting east of the Mississippi River will be practically a thing of the past in a few years, in my opinion.

This is a matter which ought to invite the attention of the Congress as no other matter that has ever been brought before it. It is a matter of more importance to our commercial life, to say nothing of the life of those engaged in its production, than any other matter that can be before us. I am glad to say that whenever this matter has been brought to the attention of the Senate in any practical form it has met with a ready response, and I propose from time to time as practical suggestions come to me in a form in which I can submit them to the Senate for the purpose of enabling us to relieve this situation to present them to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 55, line 3, strike out "$502,240," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Six hundred and fifty-two thousand two hundred and forty dollars: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in the State of California.

I invite the earnest attention of Senators to page 54, beginning at line 18, to and including line 3 on page 55. It will be seen that we here deal with a very important item in this appropriation bill. It reads:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in connection with rearing fur-bearing animals; for experiments, demonstrations, and cooperation in destroying mountain lions, wolves, coyotes, bobcats, prairie dogs, gophers, ground squirrels, jack rabbits, and other animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, and wild game; and for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies in predatory wild animals, $502,240.

At the very outset I wish to impress upon the minds of those who listen that my proposed amendment increases the amount set out in the bill and that as to the proviso its language is not mandatory but permissive; that is to say, I propose to increase the amount to be devoted to these very wise purposes, and I am hoping and suggesting that it will be made legally possible for the department to apply or make use of the amount stated, $150,000, in the State of California. As stated, the language of the proviso is permissive, not mandatory. I think we may well leave it to the good judgment of the department as to the amount the department shall deem necessary and proper to expend in my State.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator if the $150,000 proposed to be appropriated by his amendment is in excess of the estimate made by the department?

Mr. McNARY. Perhaps I can answer that more accurately than the Senator from California. The amount estimated by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget was $470,600. The amount allowed was $502,240, which is conformable to the sum that was allowed last year by Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that the $150,000 which the Senator from California proposes to add to the appropriation would be very much in excess of the estimate, or in excess of the amount allowed by the committee?

Mr. McNARY. The House allowed in excess of the Budget, in round figures, $31,000, and this would be an increase of $150,000 over the House appropriation, or an increase over the Budget estimate of about $181,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator from California to say that he is asking that $150,000 be expended in the State of California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The proviso in my suggested amendment makes it permissive, as I stated, and not mandatory.

Mr. SIMMONS. The inquiry I desire to make of the Senator is whether its use is confined, if it is used at all, to the State of California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. McNARY. I would like to have that matter cleared up in my own mind. I suggest that the Secretary read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 55, line 3, strike out "$502,240" and insert in lieu thereof:

Six hundred and fifty-two thousand two hundred and forty dollars: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in the State of California.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then it may not be used anywhere else.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. By no means. That does not follow. But if there be any question about that I certainly would be willing to have my suggestion amended so as not to make it necessary to expend that sum in that State, or not at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. It does authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to expend of the six hundred and odd thousand dollars $150,000 in the State of California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely. Under the general provision he may expend it as he sees fit.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, if he should exercise his discretion and spend that amount in California that State would get one-fourth of the entire appropriation. I simply suggest to the Senator from California that the State of California is very modest.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wish to acknowledge that it is only exceeded in its modesty by the State represented by the Senator.

Speaking seriously, I thought it but fair to say at the outset that this was not a mandatory provision but rather permissive. I think the sum total as fixed in the bill, $502,240, should be increased even without my suggested amendment touching the application of any portion of the increase. I say this with great respect for the Budget Bureau officers, whose estimate was $470,204, and with due respect to the House, which increased the amount to $502,240. When Senators consider the subject matter to be dealt with, the importance of the industries affected, and the dangers which threaten, which are imminent, which are not imaginary but actual, the increase in this appropriation which I suggest will appear to be a wise one. I shall detain the Senate, by their indulgence, for a few moments to give my reasons for asking this increase in amount and the permissible application of $150,000 to the State of California.

Doubtless Senators will recall that the State of California is second in area of all the States in our Union. We could take Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, and New York and place them all within the boundaries of California. I am not presuming to instruct anyone, but I beg to remind Senators that the State territorially is great, if not otherwise; that practically one-third of the territory of California is public lands; that the State is made up of great valleys and lofty mountains. The one-third of its territory which is Government land is largely mountainous, and there in the mountains—in the forests, in the shrubbery, the chaparral, the chamiso brush—is the breeding place of many of these predatory destructive animals.

The wild animals cause vast losses every year to the people of California. The Federal Government is answerable for these losses, answerable in a qualified sense; for much of our territory is public land, and it is in the public land, not thickly populated, mountainous in character, wooded, forest clad, where these animals are bred and whence they descend upon the flocks and the herds and the farms and do their damage.

I have in my hand a telegram from our State Fish and Game Commission of California, urging an additional appropriation. They say:

Urgent need that Government assist in predatory-animal control in California. Two-thirds of our land under supervision of Federal Government. Counties where land is located are willing to bear one-third of cost. Coyotes reported increasing on Government land. We ask your assistance in securing appropriation.

I have here resolutions of the California Wool Growers' Association urging additional appropriations:

Whereas the menace to the sheep industry of the State of California by the depredations of predatory animals, particularly coyotes, is of serious consequences and has amounted to losses approaching millions of dollars; and

Whereas the United States Government, through its Bureau of Biological Survey in cooperation with the State of California, has been doing effective work as is being done in other States, but wholly inadequate to meet even the partial needs to protect this sheep industry; and

Whereas every possible agency, including local associations, county and State governments, are exerting every effort to cope with this serious menace: Therefore be it

Resolved by the woolgrowers of the State of California in convention assembled, To ask assistance from the Federal Government, through Congress, for an appropriation not less than $150,000 in amount for the work in California, thus to make available for predatory-animal control a sum necessary for a much needed protection.

Passed unanimously by convention assembled, November 17, 1922, Stockton, Calif.

W. P. WING,
Secretary California Wool Growers' Association.

I do not think it necessary to encumber the RECORD with detailed facts or figures; the facts are well known, the figures many times published, but I urge upon the Senate, however, that the stock raisers and the farmers, represented by various associations, by the California Farm Bureau Federation, and by the official Fish and Game Commission of California, are very earnest in their request for this additional appropriation. The California Wool Growers' Association makes a strong presentation of this matter in the following letter:

CALIFORNIA WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, Calif., December 11, 1922.

Senator SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: We have recently sent you copies of resolutions concerning the depredations of predatory animals which were adopted by the California Wool Growers' Association in convention assembled at Stockton, Calif., November 17, 1922. This convention was truly representative of the sheep industry of California. We are again sending you copies of these resolutions, and would appreciate it if you can give the matter your earnest consideration.

Predatory animals have cost the live-stock interests of California the loss of millions of dollars annually. Predatory animals, and particularly the coyote, have put many sheepmen out of business on account of the great losses due to these animals. Cattle, hog, chicken, and turkey raisers have also suffered losses year after year, due to the constant depredations of the coyote.

During the past few years the Biological Survey Division of the United States Department of Agriculture has been able to effectively control the depredations of the coyote in sections where their men have been working. In some Western States the United States Biological Survey has secured appropriations for those districts from the Federal Government, so that they can actively go on with their campaign, and as a result they have materially decreased and in some sections exterminated the coyote. California has not secured sufficient appropriations from either the Federal or State Governments up to the present time to actively go on with this work. The old bounty law, which has been in operation for 50 years, is still used. As one woolgrower said at a meeting held to discuss this situation at Corning, December 9: "Forty years ago I could run my sheep in the mountains and the herder could go fishing or spend a night or two away from the sheep and when he came back they would be all right. We had the bounty law then. It has been in operation for 50 years. We have it now. To-day if I leave my sheep for half an hour without a herder I would suffer losses due to the coyote. I have never seen the situation so bad as it has been this last year, and we have had the old bounty system for 50 years."

In another section of the State, and this is a section where sheep are practically the only live stock that can be raised economically, the number of sheep have dwindled in 20 years over 75 per cent.

One grower in Mendocino County stated that 20 years ago there were over 400,000 sheep in the county. To-day there are only 66,000. Coyotes are responsible for the decrease. Well-informed men from Mendocino and Humboldt Counties say that the county is only adapted for sheep, but that they can not raise sheep as long as the coyote is king, and are, as a result, in the cattle business to a limited extent and are losing money every year.

It may interest you to know that in this coast section, from Sonoma to Humboldt County, the best wool of California is produced. It always commands the highest price. It would be a shame and a disgrace to California if this section had to go out of the sheep business, which it will do unless the coyote is controlled and exterminated within the next few years.

The same situation exists in many other sections of California. In Tehama County the growers have had four meetings within the last two months to discuss this situation.

Our resolutions ask that the Federal Government appropriate $150,000 for this predatory animal control work in California. It is only by systematic control that we can eventually exterminate the predatory animals. The Government system has proved effective and the growers are anxious that this system shall be adopted.

Besides asking the cooperation of the Federal Government, the association has secured the cooperation of the State of California and also of the counties where coyotes are causing damage.

We are only asking the Federal Government to do its share. The county will do its share and the State will do its share.

California at the present time has more sheep than any other State in the United States with the exception of Texas. There is no reason why California could not produce a million more sheep if predatory animals were controlled.

If we can count on you to back us up in this matter and to help us secure this appropriation, it will certainly be appreciated and you will be doing a real service for the live-stock interests of California.

It may interest you to know that the live-stock industry in California represents an investment of over $400,000,000.

May we have the benefit of your suggestions in regard to the matter?

Very sincerely,

W. P. WING, Secretary.

I am aware that objection has been raised to the use of this suggested amount in California, it being thought, perhaps, that we are overlooking or neglecting other States. Not so. There is the great State of Oregon to the north of us, there is the great State of Arizona to the southeast. There is Nevada to the east, and other public-land States of the West. Wild and predatory animals abound in all of these States. They are destructive. Now, each and all of these States are willing to do their share in exterminating these enemies, and all they ask is that the Federal Government shall do its share. California has appropriated large sums of money to do away with these predatory animals. The law in brief in California and the arrangements are these:

The State appropriates a certain amount, the several counties contribute. It is designed that the Federal Government shall appropriate one-third, the State one-third, and the individual county one-third of the amount devoted to a given county. I have heard it said elsewhere that too much is asked of the Federal Government, that the States have abdicated, that they are negligent, that they are parsimonious, and that they look to and plead with the Federal Government to do what they themselves should do. In this particular instance, however, I think it may be said of the Western States that they severally are willing to contribute their just proportion in and about the destruction of these predatory animals. Of course, the problem may not come home to Massachusetts nor as closely to the great State of North Carolina as it does to Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, or California, or any of the great public-land States, and where the population is more or less sparse.

My purpose here and now is to direct the attention of the Senate to the great damage done by these predatory animals. But my amendment, in legal effect, does not limit the increased appropriation thus sought to that particular matter, however important it is. Senators will recall the language of the bill as to the purpose to which the appropriation applies, and it will be seen that we deal with a great many matters, such as fur-bearing animals, the destruction of all these various destructive, ravenous, and in one sense worthless wild animals, and as to the food habits of birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, and particularly the appropriation deals with the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of diseases of predatory wild animals communicated to domestic animals and, in turn, to human beings.

I remember a few years ago when San Francisco was terror stricken with the fear of the bubonic plague. Senators will recall the learning upon that subject. It is, I suppose, agreed that the bubonic plague, the black death which swept away a third of Europe, is communicated by rats; hence to save humanity we set about to destroy rats. It is even so with many diseases which attack domestic animals. They are communicated to the domestic animals by or through the wild animal. In California, Mr. President, the coyote seems to thrive and multiply. He is a cowardly, sneaking, vicious creature, subtle, cunning, and it requires some ingenuity to trap or to destroy him. We are a great sheep-producing State, and the losses to that industry by the coyote mount into the millions and millions of dollars every year.

I submit to Senators that the increase proposed would be beneficial not only to my State but to all the States where wild animals abound. I repeat, because I at once see the force of objections made elsewhere, that the provision in the first instance is not mandatory on the department; second, it is not mandatory in so far as California is concerned. I should hesitate to ask it if it were so. I do not understand that because the amount is appropriated it must necessarily be expended. I still have some regard and some confidence in the officers of the Government, and I am satisfied that the amount would be wisely expended, and certainly without regard to geography, latitude, longitude, or political persuasion or complexion of any section of our country. As the Senator in charge of the bill stated, the Budget Bureau suggested a certain amount. The House increased it somewhat. I am suggesting that we raise the amount somewhat.

Perhaps I have said too much already. It is submitted to the good judgment of thoughtful men. I can not too earnestly state, however, that it is the unanimous voice of reputable societies and associations of my State, who express the matured judgment of like societies and associations in all of the Western States that this additional sum is needed and necessary.

I see the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] before me. If he were not in the Chamber to hear what I said a moment ago, I repeat that this matter comes home directly to Arizona, to California, to all of the Western States, and particularly the public-land States, and that my suggested amendment is permissive only as it applies to California.

I am willing to leave it to the judgment of the Department of Agriculture as to how much may be needed and where the money shall be expended for the destruction of the various predatory animals which prey upon the domestic industry of the several States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me at that point?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for observing my presence in the Chamber. It ought to be remembered in this connection that in the State of Arizona, for instance, where 52 per cent of the area of the State is withdrawn from settlement and 20,000 square miles are in forest reserves, the stock growers are charged an annual grazing fee for grazing their cattle and sheep thereon. They are required to pay that fee and to pay it promptly. The Federal Government in good faith, if it is going to establish a grazing domain and charge high fees for grazing live stock thereon, ought to be diligent and prompt to make reasonable appropriations for the destruction of the predatory animals within the forests, at least. I join with the Senator from California in support of his amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, all that has been stated by the Senator from Arizona is entirely accurate and true; but permit me to add that the great forest and public-land areas are the breeding places, so to speak, of these predatory wild animals. And these animals, having grown lusty and hungry, descend upon the farmer, the woolgrower, the cattle raiser, the poultry farms; there they wound and destroy, and then flee away to the mountains. I am not speaking for my State alone; I quite forget State boundaries. It might be thought, at first blush, that this suggested amendment was intended solely for the benefit of California. Perhaps I should be justified if I grounded my amendment upon the interests of my own State, but the amendment is broader than that.

Mr. ASHURST. I should not deem it improper if the Senator's amendment should relate to California alone, because my 11 years' experience in this Chamber has taught me that if the two Senators from California do not look after the interests of that State no other Senator will do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I know we have a good friend in the Senator from Arizona. I repeat myself, but I beg to remind the Senate that California has not stood idly by in the presence of this menace, negligent or indifferent or parsimonious; that, on the contrary, she has appropriated vast sums of money for the purpose of exterminating these animals, and that the arrangement in California has been—as stated—a given county contributes one-third, the State one-third, the Government to contribute one-third in this necessary work. The point of all I have said is that the amount here proposed to be appropriated for these various wise purposes is not sufficient to meet the necessities. Without indulging in generalities, I desire to say that it seems to me we shall be fully justified in providing this additional sum, having in mind the purpose for which the money is to be appropriated.

I sincerely hope that Senators will see the force of what I have said and will join with me in adopting the proposed amendment.

I am concerned with the subject matter, broadly speaking. I have in mind the welfare of the many public land States. If it be thought that this amendment is so framed that, while not making it mandatory, the money can not be expended elsewhere than in California, of course, I would gladly accept a suggestion to change the language which I have proposed; but I submit to the legal learning of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the provision which reads "provided, that of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in California" is permissive in character. If the amendment be agreed to, the appropriation will be increased by $150,000, and permission is given to expend that amount in one particular State, if the Secretary of Agriculture shall deem it necessary to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is what I think the language means—that the Secretary may spend $150,000 of the total appropriation provided in that section of the bill in the State of California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Undoubtedly. It says that he may do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator from California concluded his speech?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have concluded; and so I submit the amendment to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not make any point of order against the amendment which the Senator from California has offered, although I think it is just as amenable to the point of order as was the amendment proposing to increase the appropriation which is carried in the bill for the purpose of more effectually controlling the boll weevil. According to the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MCNARY], as I understood him, the Senator from California proposes by his amendment to increase the amount estimated by the Budget Bureau by $180,000 and to increase the amount actually allowed by the Committee on Appropriations by $150,000. I do not undertake to say that the additional amount is not needed to accomplish the laudable purpose the Senator from California had in view. I myself have no doubt that wolves, rats, rabbits, mice, and possibly other animals that inhabit the West and now and then make raids upon the vegetable growth and products of the farmers and upon the stock of that section are very destructive. I have no doubt that the State of California is in need of all the protection against the ravages of predatory animals which the Senator asks for it.

California is undoubtedly, as the Senator says, a great State; her area is very large; her interests are very diversified, and she is entitled to all the protection which the United States Government, in cooperation with the State and its counties, can give for the purpose of stamping out these pests or minimizing their ravages. I expect possibly that the Senator will obtain the adoption of his amendment unless the Senator in charge of the bill is as keen in protecting the Treasury against this invasion from California as he has been in protecting it against the equally legitimate requests of the cotton growers of the South.

California asks for very little in this body that it does not obtain. It has two very persuasive Senators. The eloquence of the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and the remarkable qualities of powerful presentation possessed by his colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], as well as by himself, are such that when they ask for anything in the Senate they generally get it. I thought that they got more in the tariff bill than any of the other States which were asking the Treasury to assist them in their industrial and commercial operations. I do not envy them; but I wish to say to the Senator from California that a point of order having been made to the amendment desired by the cotton growers of the South, intended to provide further funds for the protection of their crop against the depredations of one of the most destructive pests known to history, I thought probably a similar course would be pursued by the Senator in charge of the bill with reference to the request from California. I think it was a great injustice to the South that the point of order to which I have referred was made.

The whole cotton-growing section of the South is an area much larger than California. The crops that were involved were probably much more valuable than those of California that are put in jeopardy by the pest which the Senator seeks to get rid of; and yet, notwithstanding these facts, when it was proposed here to increase the appropriation which the committee had made, following out the findings of the Budget Bureau and the estimates of the department, we were met with a point of order, which was sustained.

Of course, if the point of order was good in the case of the boll weevil, it would be likewise as effective in the case of the predatory animals to which the Senator addresses his amendment; but I want it understood, Mr. President—and that is the only purpose for which I have taken the floor—that so far as I am concerned I have no sectional prejudices whatever. Whenever the West has asked for anything here to which I have thought it was entitled, I have voted for it with just the same willingness that I would vote for a like request if it came from the section from which I hail; and even when the section from which I come is treated unjustly and discriminated against, I am not disposed to take reprisals against any other section of the country because of that injustice to my own section. The question to my mind is, Is this good legislation that is proposed by the Senator from California? If it is, then I am for it, notwithstanding my section has been denied similar benefits under conditions which entitle it as much to what it asked as the conditions of California entitle it to what it asks. I think we should deal with these questions in a liberal spirit, and I deprecate very much the disposition of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to invoke the rules of order for the purpose of preventing legislation intended and calculated to subserve a good and high purpose.

I wanted to say that much to the Senator from California. It seems to me that he has made out a pretty fair case. We made out a better case. We were turned down. I do not know what will be the course of the chairman of the committee with reference to the proposition of the Senator, but I do know that it is equally obnoxious to the rule of order that has been appealed to against the cotton growers of the South; but I say to the Senator that that treatment toward my section of the country will not so prejudice me as to cause me to vote against his proposition if, after full discussion, I shall conclude that it is wise and proper legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. As I understand, the two agricultural credit bills are ready for consideration, and so is the Post Office appropriation bill. To-morrow is Saturday, and there may not be as long a session as usual. So I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I merely rise to say that I think the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] do him great honor, and I thank him for his expressions concerning the spirit which should move and govern us in legislating for any and all sections of our country.

I want to say, speaking for myself, that if the matter of the appropriation in respect of the boll-weevil danger has not passed beyond recall, my mind is very open to stand with the Senator as to the amount which he thinks necessary to deal with that great and destructive pest to such a great portion of our country.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose this proposition of the Senator from California. I do not believe in mistreating one section that is being afflicted by some pest because another class of our people have been mistreated by those in authority in this Chamber. I have not heard anybody on the other side rise to make a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has not been offered yet.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the amendment been offered, I inquire of the Senator from California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It has.

Mr. LENROOT. Just as soon as the Senator from Alabama will afford somebody on this side an opportunity, I think a point of order will be made.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am satisfied that if anybody over there will make it with a great deal of pleasure, it will be the Senator from Wisconsin. He takes delight, apparently, in striking down these items in the agricultural bill. He is ready to put this blade into this amendment, it seems, just as he did into the seed-distribution amendment this morning.

Mr. President, I have tried to cut down expenses and to reduce the appropriations where I thought they ought to be reduced, and where I felt certain items in the appropriations should be cut down. I have been unable to get that done, however. I thought the naval appropriation bill should have been cut down, but the majority party saw fit to increase it, and it has done so. So with the Commerce Department bill, so with the Department of Justice bill, so with the State Department bill. Now we come to agriculture—as I said this morning, to the industry that has suffered more under deflation than any other industry in the country—and here comes the Budget Bureau and strikes out $6,000,000 just as though it were blindfolded, and gives no reason for it. Nobody can sustain the action of the Budget Bureau.

I have not criticized the personnel of this bureau from the standpoint that some Senators seem to think. No doubt they are clean, clever, high-toned gentlemen; but what I am talking about is that they are not qualified to pass on an agricultural appropriation bill because of their lack of experience in matters pertaining to agriculture.

Here is General Lord, who was born at Rockland, Me., and is a member of the Army and Navy Club. He used to be a newspaper man—and it is a very honorable and fine business to work for some newspapers—and then he was clerk of the Ways and Means Committee of the House for quite a while, handling matters where they were taxing the American people, accumulating money for tariff barons, working out reports, showing how much you could tax this item and that item for the benefit of the tariff barons of the United States. I submit that while they were doing that they were taxing a great many items that the farmer had to buy, and what General Lord was doing in that regard did not fit him for the work that has been assigned to him here. He was made a brigadier general in 1919, and no doubt he is a very clever gentleman; but I submit, Mr. President, that nobody has shown me that his qualifications in any respect fit him to pass upon the questions that we are considering here regarding the appropriations for the agricultural interests of the United States. What is there in this work he has done that I have recited that qualifies him as a man capable of saying what the great agricultural people of my section need, or what we ought to have? He has not the necessary qualifications.

Another one of the members of the board, Mr. Stephens, was born at Marion, Ohio; and the other one—these three being the only ones we find in "Who's Who"—is Walter Winter Warwick. He was in the Government service. He is a lawyer also. So here is a former clerk of the Ways and Means Committee now a brigadier general in the Army, and a lawyer, and another lawyer in the Government service. The other members and assistants in this Budget Bureau are not even listed in "Who's Who in America." How are we going to find out who they are? We can not find out what their qualifications are or what their former occupations were.

Mr. President, I want now to call attention to another thing. Here is the Post Office appropriation bill, House bill 13593. Here is an item in it on page 20, beginning with line 18, for the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices in the city of New York, including the Borough of Brooklyn, $513,911.50, a great deal more than the item stricken out this morning to distribute valuable field and garden seed among the whole American people. I dare say that this thing will be adopted. This half million dollars and more will be given to the city of New York for this pneumatic-tube service, which has been condemned and repudiated by the Congress of the country as a graft upon the Government pure and simple. Now it has been restored. You are going to put it into the law. You are going to expend half a million dollars to give this pneumatic-tube service to the people of one city, and yet you could not spare $360,000 to the whole people in the agricultural sections and the factory towns and industrial centers of the country to get a few little flower seed, garden seed, and choice field seed. That is the sort of legislation we are enacting here, and I propose from time to time to call attention to it and put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that the people out in the country may know what is going on in this body.

I did not appeal from the decision of the Chair this morning. The Chair was not responsible for the rule which has been foisted upon the Senate by the majority party in this Chamber, and I did not appeal. The Senator from North Carolina did appeal, under a misapprehension as to just what had occurred previously in connection with the bill. It would be a waste of time to appeal.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not the Democratic Party have the same rule when it was in power, and would not the same application have had to be made, so far as applied to this case?

Mr. HEFLIN. If we had been in power, I certainly would have tried to change this condition, because I do not believe in it.

Mr. LENROOT. I was asking about the rule. The Senator says we foisted it upon the Senate. The Senator's party did not change the rule when it had the power to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. We did not have any Budget Bureau lording it over everything then, either.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator well knows that the Budget Bureau had nothing to do with the free-seed proposition, because the Secretary of Agriculture never recommended it or estimated for it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Doubtless he had been told by the Budget Bureau not to recommend it. The Secretary of Agriculture, who told the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] that he could not tell him what he had recommended regarding the sugar-cane pest, certainly is not going to recommend something that the Budget Bureau tells him not to recommend. I am satisfied that the Budget Bureau did tell him not to recommend free seed.

Now I want to comment again on that. It is the most outrageous thing I have witnessed. The Secretary of Agriculture, a member of the President's Cabinet, was afraid to tell a United States Senator about a matter of vital importance to his own section regarding agriculture. He could not tell him what he had recommended, but he must go to the Budget Bureau and get that information. It is a crying shame against a free Government. If the Budget Bureau is going to arrogate to itself any such power as that, the sooner we curtail that power the better it will be for the free people of this country.

I said on yesterday and again this morning that the Speaker of the House, in making his ruling in this matter, in which the Members of the House were never permitted to vote directly as to whether they would have seed or not, made an appeal to the membership to sustain that ruling and his position in the matter. The Senator from Wisconsin said that was not the fact, and asked me if I had read the ruling. I said no, I had not read it, but that I had talked with a Member of the House in whom I had great confidence, and I accepted his statement about it. Now I have the statement of the Speaker of the House, and this is what he said:

> The Chair thinks he ought to suggest that preserving the authority and binding force of parliamentary law is as much the duty of each Member of the House as it is the duty of the Chair, that the rights of every one of us here depend upon it—> and that each Member ought to vote on such a question, not as his interest or desires in respect to the particular subject may sway him but as he thinks is really the law.

What is that but an appeal to them, in advance, to sustain the ruling he is going to make?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. In a moment. He is saying to the Members of the House, "You are sent here to represent your constituents, and I do not care what your conviction is on the merits of this question or what your desires are; you ought to vote to sustain me." That is a nice pass to which we have come in this country. These rulings have been overturned from time to time, because there was no other way to do the right thing but to overturn them, and here is the Speaker saying, in the face of a bad law, that it is the duty of those who have the power to repeal it or override it to vote to sustain it, although they may believe that it is a bad law. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator indicate that that statement of the Speaker was made when any appeal was pending or a matter was before the House for a vote?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I am saying that when he was making his ruling he was appealing to them.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator disagree with that statement of the Speaker, that it is the duty of a Member to sustain the law?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not through with my statement yet. I will answer the Senator. The Speaker further said:

> It is unquestionably true that several times the Committee of the Whole House has overruled the decision of the chairman of that committee and has held that an amendment like this is in order. That, however, has never been done in the House. If the House should take that action, of course the Chair would bow to the opinion of the House and follow it; but until then the Chair thinks that he is bound to follow the rules of parliamentary law, and the Chair thinks the same duty rests upon every individual Member of the House.

There is an appeal to them while he is making his ruling. He doubtless knew they were going to appeal from his decision, and he was telling them what their duty was, and telling them that they must vote not as they thought they should vote, not as they would desire to vote, not as the merits of the case would require them to vote, but to vote in accordance with his ruling, because he was construing the law.

Now, you have this predicament in Congress: A majority of the Members of one branch of Congress favor free-seed distribution, and have not had an opportunity to vote on it under the ruling of the Republican Speaker and under the hard and fast Republican rule. That is the situation you have in the House of Representatives. I challenge the Senator from Wisconsin to poll the membership of the House. If he does, a majority of them will tell him that they favor free-seed distribution. Yet you have a Budget Bureau, composed of an Army officer and two lawyers and four others that we do not know, who say, "You can not do this," and "You can not do that," and you are up against it hard and fast. That is the situation.

I said this morning that I had been told that the Speaker had made this appeal. The Senator from Wisconsin challenged my statement and asked me if I had read the RECORD. I said I had not, and asked him if he had read it, and he said he had, and that there was nothing in it of that sort. Here it is, and it speaks for itself. I said then I would look into it and be heard from again on it, because I knew the man in the House who told me the Speaker had made this appeal had told the truth. I would believe him as quickly as I would believe any man who walks beneath the sun. That is why I acted upon his suggestion and dared to stand upon this floor and say what I did. I knew it was in there just as well as if I had read it myself, and here it is. The man presiding over a legislative body, about to submit his ruling to that body, appealed to that body not to vote as it wanted to vote, not to vote as the interests of their constituents would have them to vote, but to vote according to the judgment of the Speaker in his construction of the law.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has now repeated what he stated this morning, that the Speaker of the House appealed to the membership of the House to sustain his ruling. There is not one single word in the language the Senator has read, or in the RECORD, that bears out that statement of the Senator from Alabama. The Speaker did ask the membership to sustain the law, but he did not suggest to them otherwise than that they should vote as they believed the law required them to vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. Who was giving them the law?

Mr. LENROOT. It was the Speaker's duty to rule upon the question, and it was the duty of every Member——

Mr. HEFLIN. His appeal to them was to sustain the law as he had construed it.

Mr. LENROOT. It was not. The appeal to them was to vote as they thought the law was. If the Senator does not think that members of legislative bodies should be bound by their own rules, of course, the Senator is welcome to think so.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am willing to have anybody who has heard me read the statement of the Speaker and heard the comments, say whether I am right about it or not. If the Senator from Wisconsin does not understand it even now, that is not my fault. I am going to read it again. I am going to give him another chance.

For while there is life there is hope.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will please emphasize when he comes to the point where the Speaker appealed to the House to sustain his ruling, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, the Senator can not dodge and evade now by putting words in my mouth.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator stated——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am saying that the Speaker of the House appealed to the House in advance of an appeal taken from his decision, which he probably knew would come, to sustain him, and told them what their duty was in the premises. The effect of what he said was, "Do not vote as you want to vote; do not vote as your interests suggest you should vote. Vote as to what the law is, as I give it to you." That is the substance of it, and when an appeal was taken from his decision, they voted upon that question. The Member who told me about it said, "The Speaker ruled that way, and appealed to the House to sustain him." Those are the words he used to me. I said, "That is something new under the sun. I never heard of a Speaker doing that before," and several Members who were present said that they never did either. Here is the language. I read it again:

The Chair thinks he ought to suggest that preserving the authority and binding force of parliamentary law is as much the duty of each Member of the House as it is the duty of the Chair; that the rights of every one of us here depend upon it; and that each Member ought to vote on such a question not as his interest or desires in respect to the particular subject may sway him but as he thinks is really the law.

Mr. President, I have voted many a time to overturn the ruling of the Chair in that body as well as in this one. Nobody ever thought I was trying to violate the law by that action. It is the only immediate parliamentary procedure when right is on the one side and hard and fast wrong rules are on the other that you should take the side of right and overrule the wrong rules rather than strike down right and obey the wrong rules. That is the issue in a nutshell. And here was the Speaker saying to these gentlemen in effect: "Do not vote according to your desires or according to your interests in this particular thing." The Senator from Wisconsin says that that is not an appeal to them to sustain him. If it is not, I can not understand English, and I am willing to leave it to the verdict of Senators present to say which one of us is right, the Senator from Wisconsin or myself.

He concluded by saying:

But until then—

Until he is overturned—

the Chair thinks that he is bound to follow the rules of parliamentary law——

Mr. CARAWAY. As he understands it.

Mr. HEFLIN. As he understands it—

And the Chair thinks the same duty rests upon every individual Member of the House.

What else can you construe that to mean than as an appeal to them to vote as he was going to rule? There is nothing else to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator if it does not seem to him that the Chair was very doubtful of his ruling when he felt in advance the necessity of calling upon the House to sustain him in the discharge of his duty?

Mr. HEFLIN. It certainly looks so to me. Here is another thought that came to me. After saying the House in Committee of the Whole sometimes does overrule the Chairman, holding that it is proper to put a thing in the measure before that body, he said it had not been done in the House. Listen to this: He said until that was done he must hold to the law of procedure. When he said "until it is done" he intimated that it sometimes might be done; that the House had the authority to do it if it wanted to, and he was appealing to them not to do it. There it is in a nutshell, as I said before.

Mr. President, this is a government of the people. It does not belong to a few big cities that can have pneumatic tubes put in to serve certain interests at half a million dollars a year. It is well enough to let the people know that the masses of the people are discriminated against and special classes are legislated for in this Congress, day by day, week after week, and month after month. There is but one way to get the facts to them, and that is to tell them so that these newspaper men can hear them, and to put them in this RECORD, so that they can be gotten by the people over the country who are interested in their Government, who want to see it perpetuated to bless and benefit millions yet unborn.

Here we are, Mr. President, the greatest Government in all the world, surrendering its powers little by little to bureaucracies in the city of Washington. Concentration of wealth and concentration of power have been the two deadly evils in all the past. These two have wrecked the proudest ships of state that ever sailed. We have started on that course under the reign of the Republican Party. This Government in all its history has never made as much progress toward concentration of wealth in the hands of the few and centralization of power in Washington as it has in the past two years under the Republican administration. We have seen an evidence of it to-day that is shocking to everybody who knows how to analyze it properly—a Budget committee, composed of a few men appointed by the President, passing upon great questions that affect the whole people; Cabinet officers silent when it comes to giving information about projects in the States of Members of the House and Senate. "Did you recommend that this thing be taken care of? It is of vital concern to the farmers." The Secretary replies, "I am not permitted to talk. I made certain recommendations to the Budget Bureau. You will have to get what information you can from that bureau. Excuse me." And a Senator of the United States, representing in part his State in this great body, is turned away from the great head of the Department of Agriculture and driven to a bureaucracy to ask that bureaucracy, composed of men who have had no experience under the sun with the agricultural interests of the country.

The Senator says, "I would like for you to recommend for this project," and the bureaucracy says, "I will not do it." Then the Senator comes up here and says, "I have found out, through some devious way, that the Secretary of Agriculture is favorable to my project and the Budget Bureau is opposed to it. But I want to put the item in the pending bill."

"Members of the House from my State are for it. The agricultural agencies all over my State are for it. The farmers of my State are for it. Everybody who understands the project is for it, and I want to put it in." Then some clever gentleman like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], shrewd and smart as he is, rises and takes up some cold-blooded lines written in the rules and reads them and strikes the project dead without regard to its merit, without regard to the righteousness of things involved in it. That is what we are up against. Just rise and make a point of order, and the will of the Budget Bureau rises above the will of the people's Congress.

Talk about taxation without representation! That is what our fathers went to war about with the mother country. What have we here? We have representation in the House that is denied a voice. Go to the Agricultural Department, and the department agrees with the proposition. The House agrees with the Agricultural Department. The Budget Committee casts that agreement on the rocks, and it goes out on a point of order. Thus we come to government by commissions and government by bureaus or bureaucracies in the city of Washington.

The American people will soon have an opportunity to choose whether they will live up to the American form of Government in all of its pristine glory and power, distributed amongst the various States of the Union to represent the Government in the House and in the Senate, with a President at the head of the executive department and the Congress constituting the legislative department. We have stricken down the power of the President in a way, and of Congress in a way, and lodged that power with a bureau all powerful. That is what we have to-day. How much longer are we going to continue that sort of thing?

We see projects stricken from things that affect vitally sections far removed from those of the Senators who make the points of order. I am not going to retaliate. I will vote for any measure to relieve the farmers of Wisconsin of distress. I will vote for any measure, as I did on yesterday, to relieve the farmers of Massachusetts and Ohio. I will vote to relieve the farmers and the people of any State of any distress and affliction that may come upon them. But that is more than can be said for some Senators in this Chamber. There are Senators in this Chamber who will stand up and fight and beg for certain things for their States, and when they get what they want they are ready to stand up, cold as Greenland's icy mountains, and fight to strike out some things that ought to go to other sections to relieve the people of those sections in their distress.

Mr. President, I wanted to set this matter right about the ruling of the Speaker of the House. I wanted the RECORD to show that those who are trying to save money are appropriating $513,000 for pneumatic-tube service in New York City, and then fail and refuse to give $350,000 to distribute choice seeds, field and garden seeds, cuttings, vines, shrubbery for schools and factories and the people in the rural districts, towns, and villages of the whole Republic. I want the record to show these things.

As I said before, I do not intend to appeal from the decision of the Chair, because it is a useless consumption of time. We are simply bound and gagged under the rules of the Republican Senate. We can not proceed. We are helpless. All Senators here from the Southern States may stand together and band themselves together with all the membership of the South in the House, but if the Budget Bureau does not approve what we want done, though the Secretary of Agriculture may be willing, we are helpless if any Senator wants to rise and deny us the help that we ask.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment now pending which was offered by the Senator from California?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. McNARY. I make the point of order against the amendment and would like to have the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, as to the amendment, in so far as it increases the amount, I am not disposed to argue to change the view of the Presiding Officer, but I invite the attention of the Chair to an observation made in the House, as follows, when this very point was raised. On page 909 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be found the following:

> The CHAIRMAN. Let us dispose of the point of order first, if the gentleman will permit. The Chair, looking at this amendment, and especially the proviso, thinks it is worded in such a way as not to make it mandatory upon the department to spend the money in California.

Now, with great deference, I submit that the ruling there was correct. The provision is not mandatory.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator's amendment propose to increase the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; by $150,000.

Mr. LENROOT. That was not the question in the House, but that was the question here.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand, and out of candor and in fairness I said that I was not disposed to question now the ruling of the Chair as to the increase of the amount, although I must say I deplore very much the fact that anyone felt moved to raise the point of order, sympathizing very fully, as I do, with much that I have heard from the other side of the Chamber this afternoon. But I do not question motives of Senators. They decide as they think is right and proper, and I endeavor to do likewise.

In the nature of an amendment, I want to retain the proviso contained in the previously suggested amendment. I move, therefore, to amend on page 55, line 3, by adding after the numerals "$502,240" the words "Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in the State of California."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer which does not increase the appropriation a cent. I have received some communications from my own State and from other sections of the country asking me to secure an appropriation for the eradication of blackleg. I was very much astonished. I had heard of blackleg existing among gamblers, but inquiry among the cattle raisers in the Senate, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], develops the fact that it is a terrible disease among cattle.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator on what page he proposes to offer the amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. On page 23, line 16, after the word "pleuropneumonia," I propose to insert the word "blackleg" among the diseases of cattle which are there mentioned. That would add to the other diseases that of blackleg.

Mr. CARAWAY. Had not the Senator better make it read "blackleg among cattle"?

Mr. OVERMAN. The provision refers to the eradication of diseases in cattle. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] told me it is a very fatal disease among young cattle; that it kills them in 24 hours; that it will sometimes kill off a whole herd in that length of time. I think there will be no objection to the amendment. I have conferred with the Senator in charge of the bill, and I think he will have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I will state that I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. On page 15, line 12, after the word "for," I move to insert "agricultural interests during the harvest season and for"; after the word "interests," in line 13, to insert "for spraying and"; and then, in line 13, to increase the appropriation from $12,000 to $24,000, so that, if amended as proposed, the clause would read:

> For investigations, observations, and reports, forecasts, warnings, and advices for agricultural interests during the harvest season and for the protection of horticultural interests, for spraying and from frost damage, $24,000.

I have discussed the amendment with the chairman of the committee, and I understand he has no objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. Personally I am in very great sympathy with the amendment, but, of course, we must conform to the rules; and for that reason I ask for a ruling from the Chair as to the last item in the amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. The amendment is not subject to a point of order, because the entire item was put into the bill in the other House, and not recommended by the Budget Bureau. Therefore the clause may be amended in the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I understand the Senator from Arkansas desires to increase the appropriation which is now in the bill from $12,000 to $24,000?

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I propose.

Mr. McNARY. But there is no estimate for that amount from the Director of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. CARAWAY. Nor was there any estimate for the $12,000 carried in the bill as it came from the other House. It was not originally estimated for, but was placed in the bill in the House, and therefore we have a right to amend the clause under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. We have a right to amend it, but not to increase the appropriation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Other appropriations have been increased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McNARY. I stated to the Chair that I should like to have a ruling upon the amendment, and I make the point of order against it. I desire to determine whether or not the appropriation may be increased in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Oregon on the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. I make the point of order that the amount carried in the amendment has not been estimated for by the Budget Bureau and that it has not been reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate. The language of the bill is proposed to be changed, the appropriation is proposed to be doubled, and I think the amendment falls within the rule which was invoked a moment ago.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, as I understand the rule, the item not having been estimated for at all, but having been included in the bill in the House, the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

I should like to say, however, in addition, not arguing the point of order now, but merely discussing the amendment, that I have no personal knowledge of the ends sought to be accomplished by the increased appropriation. It does not affect the section from which I come. I have information before me here, however, that frequently, in spraying, the whole expense and effort may be lost simply because of a rain or a wind coming either just at the time of spraying or immediately afterwards; that thousands and thousands of dollars may be saved simply by notice of probable weather conditions being given. That is the entire intention of the amendment; to give notice to people who are engaged in horticulture that it is likely to rain on a certain day, and therefore it is a warning to them not to use a spray. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I hope the chairman of the committee will not make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to say that he understands the Senator from Oregon has made the point of order.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator from Oregon was going to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. The committee determined that the point of order should be made in all cases where there was a doubt as to whether an amendment came within the rule. This case is similar to one where the point was made a few moments ago unless the position taken by the Senator from Arkansas shall be sustained.

Mr. CARAWAY. This amendment is entirely different from the one to which the Senator from Oregon refers, because this item in its present shape came to us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. McNARY. I am merely submitting the matter to the Chair for a determination.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Chair that as to an item contained in the bill, whether or not it was originally estimated for and put in by the other House, can not have any bearing upon this question, for the rule specifically provides that "no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill." This appropriation is contained in the bill, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas seeks to increase it. The proposed appropriation has not been estimated for nor reported by a standing committee; so it is clear that it comes squarely within the inhibition of the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this amendment is quite different from other amendments as to which there was no estimate upon the part of the Budget Bureau or the Department of Agriculture. Here is a provision which, while it was recommended by no department nor by the Budget Bureau, was placed in the bill, on the floor of the other House, I presume. The Chair will recollect that only some months ago, in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I think it was, a certain amendment was placed in the bill in the other House touching the raising of revenue in the District of Columbia and affecting the question of taxes. It was quite a comprehensive provision, and it was changed by the committee here. I made the point of order against the change upon the part of the committee representing the Senate. The amendment proposed a change in existing law; it proposed to broaden it; and made many changes and alterations in it. The Chair held that, while the amendment was probably subject to a point of order originally in the House, since the House had placed it there, the Senate should not be confined to merely that proposition but should be permitted to enlarge upon it or to restrict it, and so forth, in dealing with the same matter.

What is sought to be done here? I concede that the entire provision would have been subject to a point of order originally because no estimate was made for it, but it has been brought to the Senate by the action of the House. The Senator from Arkansas seeks to enlarge the provision and add to it, for the additional protection of the horticultural interests, certain words as to spraying. I submit that he ought to be able to do that even though the Bureau of the Budget have made no recommendation for it, because the Bureau of the Budget can make no recommendation in such a case as that. They can deal only with the appropriation. If the original provision is in order, certainly an amendment to it as to spraying to protect the horticultural interests is likewise in order, and if the provision in regard to spraying is in order, then it would be in order to add the amount which may be necessary to provide for the spraying. I submit that, for the reasons I have stated, this case is quite different from the other cases which have been presented, and the point of order should not lie.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. What does the Senator say about the express prohibition in the rule that no increase in an appropriation contained in the bill shall be made?

Mr. HARRISON. I submit there is some doubt as to the question of increasing the amount by $12,000; but there can be no doubt, it seems to me, that the amendment as to spraying can be added, thus enlarging that provision of the bill which has been adopted by the House. Does not the Senator agree to the proposition that the spraying provision of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is in order, if it is not sought to increase the appropriation?

Mr. LENROOT. So far as the portion of the rule to which I have referred is concerned, that would certainly not be barred.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator as to that. As to increasing the appropriation, that is a close question; but it is quite different from the other cases that have come up, and, it seems to me, since the Presiding Officer very often says, "This question is a close one, and I wish to submit it to the Senate," that he could very well do so in this instance. It is one of those cases, it seems to me, that should appeal to him, and he might very well say, "I am going to let the Senate decide the question whether the amount should be $24,000 or $12,000." In other words, if we add the spraying feature to the House provision, the $12,000 additional might be needed in order to make the provision effective. But certainly the Chair ought to hold that the point of order is not well taken as to the first portion of the amendment. Of course, I know that the present Presiding Officer wants to do what is exactly fair and just, and I have no doubt that he will say to the Senate, "I will let the Senate decide the latter proposition."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, let me say there is no better parliamentarian in the Senate than is the Senator from Mississippi, and he knows very well that the Chair could not hold the point of order well taken only as to the last part of the amendment, but if any part of the amendment is subject to the point of order it all goes out. Of course, the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. HARRISON. If that should be the idea of the Chair, I understand the Senator from Arkansas would agree to strike out the proposed increase from $12,000 to $24,000 and then offer the first portion of the amendment and follow that with a proposal to increase the appropriation by $12,000 and let the Chair submit the latter proposition to the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. How could language be plainer than that found in the rule to the effect that the proposed increase is not in order?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I call attention to the fact that I do not think that portion of Rule XVI, quoted by the Senator from Wisconsin, has anything at all to do with this particular question. The portion of the rule to which the Senator from Wisconsin calls attention reads:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill.

The general rule is that if an item has been estimated for and if it is a part of the bill there can be no amendment increasing the amount, but it is also well established.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator mean "not estimated for"?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is also well established that an appropriation bill can contain no general legislation, but that rule has been construed to mean that if the House shall have undertaken to enact legislation upon an appropriation bill, then the door is open and the Senate may do anything it sees fit to enlarge or amend the provision which the House may have incorporated in the bill in violation of the rule.

Now, I wish to submit, Mr. President, that increasing the appropriation is just as much legislation in connection with perfecting the amendment attached to the bill by the House as is a change in the language so as to include spraying. It is all legislation. The general rule excludes the addition of any legislation to the bill; but when the House undertook to enter that field, then the Senate may amend the House provision and perfect it and add to the appropriation, which is as much a part of the legislation as the words of the provision themselves.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if that be true, then there would be no bar whatever, and every one of the appropriations in the bill would be subject to increase, would they not, because so many of the provisions are in the nature of legislation?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; simply because this item was not estimated for, but was put in on the floor of the House as an amendment despite the lack of an estimate.

Mr. LENROOT. Then does the Senator think that an item that has not been estimated for should have greater right than one which has been estimated for?

Mr. CARAWAY. Shall I say that legislation, because it has been attached to the bill in the House, shall be more sacred than that which we try to place on the bill when we write the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is right in that if the House enacts general legislation upon an appropriation bill it has opened the door and the Senate may amend that general legislation in any way it sees fit affecting the same general subject matter, but provided always that there is not another rule of the Senate that prohibits doing the specific thing which is desired to be done.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is no such limitation under the ruling laid down by Vice President Marshall which has been accepted as the rule of the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. We will see about that. Of course, a specific prohibition or a specific authorization in a rule always takes precedence over general language, even if it is in the rule; and when we find here a specific prohibition against increasing the amount of an item found in an appropriation bill unless estimated for, surely it can not be claimed, upon the broad rule that general legislation opens the door, that we can violate this specific rule in this particular matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, it is expressly said, and when we adopted this rule it was with the idea, that appropriation bills should all go to the Committee on Appropriations, and all general legislation should go to other committees; and yet we have accepted the doctrine, despite the explicit denial in the rule, that if the House shall undertake to legislate upon a general appropriation bill, then that opens the door, and we may add to it in the Senate; and I suggest that figures are just as much legislation as words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). In the opinion of the Chair, the following language of clause 1, Rule XVI, is the language applicable to the present case:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropiration already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

It appears to the Chair that the amendment under discussion does increase an appropriation already contained in the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Chair just there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. On page 20–A, under the heading "Substituted for clause 1, Rule XVI," we have this:

> All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

The other part of the rule provides that no legislation shall be had upon appropriation bills, and yet we permit it where it has been inaugurated in the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair was about to state, it appears to the Chair that the amendment under consideration does increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, and that, in effect, it does add a new item of appropriation. It seems that it is not made to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation or act, and that it has not been moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate. The Chair is, therefore, unable to see upon what basis the amendment could be held in order.

The Chair, therefore, declares the amendment out of order and sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall, of course, be curious to know how the Chair will reconcile his ruling with the former ruling that has been accepted; but we will pass that. I shall offer the amendment as it was, not increasing the item of appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, line 12, after the word "advices," it is proposed to insert "for agricultural interests during the harvest season, and"; and then, after the word "interests," on line 13, it is proposed to insert the words "for spraying, and"; so that, if amended, it will read as follows:

> For investigations, observations, and reports, forecasts, warnings, and advices for agricultural interests during the harvest season, and for the protection of horticultural interests for spraying, and from frost damage, $12,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I now move to strike out "$12,000" and make it "$24,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought a ruling was had upon that a few moments ago by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the matter is presented in a slightly different form. The Chair ruled upon the question when the two items were involved. The Senator from Arkansas has now separated them, and has offered one, which has been adopted. He is now offering another, which is the pending question.

Mr. McNARY. The change in the language, I understood, was accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McNARY. I feel constrained, naturally, to make the point of order against it in this form as well as in the form in which it was offered a few moments ago.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the ruling of the Chair has established the claim I have been making here to-day—that one branch of the Congress has been shorn of its power. Here is the House of Representatives, which took action upon this item suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, and the House voted in this increase because the House was convinced that the money asked for was needed and would be well expended for the purpose set out.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I did not understand the Chair to rule that the point of order was sustained. Did he?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; he did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ruled on the amendment now pending. The second amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas is now before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I understood.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am discussing the former ruling of the Chair. The House of Representatives, coming up from the body of one hundred and odd millions of people, sitting solemnly in judgment upon questions that affect the welfare of the people, has gone on record as favoring this proposition. It voted it into the law. It comes from that body to this. It is submitted to this body; and because the Budget Bureau has not O. K'd it the judgment of 435 Members of the House is to be set aside, and the Chair rules, under the rule laid down by this Republican Senate, that the Senate itself can not put that proposition in, simply because the Budget Bureau has not O. K'd it; that is all.

If a majority of the Senators want to put it in, they are helpless, because the Chair rules, in the face of the rules laid down, that this thing can not be done because it is not recommended by the Budget Bureau. This simply proves the contention I have been making here to-day, that the Congress is being shorn of its power. Rules governing it have been made not to expedite business and to meet the needs of the people but to circumscribe the power of Congress and prevent Congress from doing certain things that three or four men in a Budget Bureau do not want them to do.

This Budget Bureau is composed of men born in Maine, Iowa, Ohio, and other Northern States. What do they know about the need for spraying down in the State of Arkansas and the other Southern States to save fruit, to save the orchards of the people in those sections? These people, coming from those sections, have told Congress that they needed this help, and Congress said: "We agree that you do need it," and the House has passed it, and it comes to the Senate, and we want to give it to them; but the point of order is solemnly made that the Budget Bureau does not want them to have it, and we are going to be denied it. Little by little and bit by bit the Congress of the United States is being shorn of its power, and bureaus and commissions in the Capital are usurping the power once lodged in the American Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Presiding Officer that clause 1 of Rule XVI has nothing to do with the purpose for which an appropriation shall be made. We might strike out all of the language preceding the item of appropriation and substitute entirely new and different language, and within certain limits at least clause 1 of this rule would not apply; but the moment any attempt is made to increase the amount carried in the bill, and it is not estimated for, the rule applies. This part of the rule is designed to do just one thing, and that is to protect the amount of money carried in the bill; and, that being so, of course the rule applies equally well whether the amendment is offered separately or in conjunction with something else.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat? He is a member of the subcommittee that framed this legislation. I have forgotten the amount that was carried in the bill for the eradication of the barberry. What was that amount?

Mr. LENROOT. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senate raised it to what amount?

Mr. LENROOT. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Bureau of the Budget recommend the increased amount?

Mr. LENROOT. It did not.

Mr. HARRISON. When this proposition was up on day before yesterday I find in the RECORD a colloquy which I will read between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] regarding that item. I preface my remarks by saying that here is an item for $12,000 that is now being considered, which was not recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, that is now sought to be increased to $20,000, or whatever the amount may be. In the instance touching the barberry the amount was passed in the House at a certain figure, and an amendment was offered upon the floor of the Senate to increase the amount. Neither of the amendments had been recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Here is a colloquy that I will read:

> Mr. FLETCHER. * * * I sincerely hope, however, that the Senator will not make that point of order. We had here yesterday the question of taking care of the barberry bush, where the estimate of the department was only $200,000 and the report of the Budget Committee was $200,000. The House raised that $150,000, and the Senate raised it $150,000 more.

This is for the edification of the Chair, who is to rule on this proposition, also so that it may give greater force to the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin:

> Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
> Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.
> Mr. LENROOT. That is true, and that is a matter that affects very seriously my own State; and because I thought I ought to be consistent I voted against the increase.
> Mr. FLETCHER. But the Senator did not make the point of order.
> Mr. LENROOT. It was not subject to a point of order, because the House had acted upon the matter. It was not subject to a point of order at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will read a little later, either that same day or the next day, he will find that the Senator from Wisconsin, whom he now quotes, and who does not pretend to be infallible on any matter, stated that he believed he was mistaken about that statement and that it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I did not know that; I just read this.

Mr. CARAWAY. It shows, at least, if I may be permitted, without criticizing the Senator, that while the item was up he entertained the view that he could not maintain the point of order against it, and that merely as an academic expression of opinion two days later he said, "I may have been in error."

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; it was not up at that time. The matter had passed when that question was raised. It was no more academic at one time than it was at another.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was academic both times, and it was not so serious as I thought it was. I thought the Senator was giving it really serious consideration when he was arguing here. I am not criticizing the Senator from Wisconsin now. In many things I think he is subject to criticism, but in this I do not pretend to think that he is. I am saying, however, that he sat here and let the very same kind of legislation be enacted in the Senate without a point of order—he defended it a day or two later—and he now says that he has found out, a day or two later on, that he was possibly in error. I should think the Chair ought not to be very much persuaded when the Senator has entertained three opinions within the week as to the application of the rule.

I know that figures are just as much a part of an amendment as language; and it is perfectly absurd to say that you may add to the language, despite the general rule, because of the holding that the item came in the bill as it passed the House, but that you can not touch the figures; that there is something sacred about figures, but language may be changed in any way you see fit to change it. I sincerely hope the Chair will hold that the item may be increased. It is a small item, but it is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Chair is ready to rule. It is very clear to the Chair that there is a line of discrimination between the amendment on which the point of order has now been raised and the amendment which the Senate has just adopted. That was an amendment which placed a limitation on the appropriation. The Chair is therefore of the opinion——

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Chair's pardon; there was no limitation on the appropriation. It broadened it. I should be very sorry to have the Chair base his ruling on the ground that there was a limitation, when there is absolutely no word in it which could be tortured into a limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Perhaps the language the Chair used was unfortunate, but the Chair used it in a technical sense. At any rate, the amendment did not increase the appropriation. The Chair, of course, would have held that amendment in order if the question had been raised. It is clear to the Chair that the amendment now pending, on which a point of order has been raised, comes within the inhibitions of clause 1 of Rule XVI. Therefore, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order, and sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks a letter with reference to this matter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
CORNELL UNIVERSITY,
Ithaca, N. Y., January 10, 1923.

Hon. PETER G. TEN EYCK,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TEN EYCK: I am obliged for your telegram of yesterday. I thought I had better write you fully about the situation, as it is difficult to explain it in a telegram.

For several years we have been conducting in this State a spray service, which consists of technical advice as to time to spray for the control of particular diseases and insects and which is sent out from our various county-agent offices in the fruit belt. For this purpose special fruit assistant agents are employed for a period of six months for the fruit and potato growing seasons. These assistants are supervised and furnished technical entomological and pathological information by our specialists, together with a special weather forecast report which is made up here on special information secured from all over the United States and telephoned or wired to these special fruit assistants about midnight. The assistants get this information to growers before 7 o'clock in the morning by a telephone relay system. The growers belonging to this service, who number several thousand, pay a fee which covers the greater part of its cost, and base their spraying operations upon it. So important has this service become that it is estimated to control the movements of from 10,000 to 12,000 spray rigs in the State. Our fruit-packing associations are considering the requiring of all their members to have the spray service, in order to insure a better quality of fruit for the packing houses.

A vitally important factor in this spray service is the special weather report. This is based on forecasts made in the late evening with specific reference to the fruit belt and spraying conditions. It is based on special wires received from all over the United States.

We have also been giving a special harvest forecast to hay and grain growers, particularly in some 20 counties in the State, and would give it to a much larger number if our funds permitted. This harvest forecast is most important in July, August, and September. The fruit and potato spray forecast is most important in April, May, and June.

By taking up odds and ends of funds at the college and through some help from the United States Weather Bureau, derived from the same sources—odds and ends—we have been able to get along for the past year or two with a reasonably good service. We are told by the Weather Bureau, however, that they will be unable to give us any aid in the future without a special appropriation, and we are embarrassed here at the college by our own inability to properly finance the matter.

With this in mind, we strongly urged the Weather Bureau to ask for a special appropriation to cover this spray service. It is our understanding that the Weather Bureau recommended an item of $12,000 and that the Secretary approved this item and passed it on to the Budget officer. The item was to cover not only a spray service in this State but some other States. Five or six thousand dollars would probably cover our own needs, which are the cost of a special forecaster for a period of about six months and the telegraphic tolls of incoming and outgoing messages.

My understanding is that this item was disapproved by the Budget officer not so much because it was not a meritorious item but because it was a new item. We presented briefs and information directly to the Secretary and the Budget officer urging the item, but our needs were entirely disregarded by the latter.

When I learned some time ago that the Budget officer was allowing practically no new items and the committees of Congress were not likely to add to the Budget officer's recommendations we despaired of the item. Just recently we have learned that a similar item providing for weather and frost warnings for fruit growers in California, which had been eliminated by the Budget officer, was restored by the Senate committee. It seems to me grossly unfair to have this service provided for far Western States and not for New York.

Can you do anything about this matter now, and would it be advisable to press an amendment to the bill on the floor of the Senate? With this further information on the matter, will you kindly advise me by wire what you think can be done? If you think it advisable, and so advise me, I will make a special trip to Washington to talk with you and others about this item.

Very truly yours, M. C. BURRITT.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, I shall not criticize the Chair, but when the present occupant of the chair leaves the chair and goes to considering this matter he will wonder what he was thinking about when he made that ruling. It is so absolutely inconsistent, and for the good opinion I entertain of the Chair, I hope at some time he will take a week off and read the rules.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is it the intention to continue the session at this hour? It is now 13 minutes of 5 o'clock. I have been trying to get the floor all day to continue the remarks I was making yesterday when I was interrupted. I have two very important amendments to offer, and two other amendments which I would not get angry if the Senate should vote down, but they are of some importance.

Mr. CURTIS. Can not the Senator offer his amendment now? The farmers' relief bill is ready to be taken up to-morrow, as well as the Post Office appropriation bill. I understand all amendments to the Agricultural appropriation bill have been offered except those to be offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Can we not agree, since we are going to meet at 11 o'clock, that a vote shall be taken on the bill at not later than 1 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. CURTIS. Make it 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us make it half past 12.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be all right, if it is satisfactory to the Senator having the bill in charge.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I will present my amendments in the morning.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that a final vote upon the bill be had to-morrow at 12.30 o'clock.

Mr. LENROOT. That would necessitate a call for a quorum. I suggest that the Senator ask that all debate upon this bill close at not later than 12.30 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; let the request be put in that form.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this bill and any amendment thereto shall close at not later than half past 12 to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at 12.30 o'clock on the calendar day of Saturday, January 13, 1923, all debate on the bill H. R. 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and amendments thereto, shall cease.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is it the understanding that we are to take a recess now?

Mr. CURTIS. No; an executive session is desired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type a statement made before the Committee on Appropriations by the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON].

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

Statement made by Senator RALPH H. CAMERON, of Arizona, before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, January 5, 1923, on H. R. 13481, after regular hearings had been held and closed, having to do with an increase in the forestry road appropriation in the Agricultural appropriation bill, from $3,000,000 to $6,500,000. The Appropriations Committee agreed to the $6,500,000 item.

The Agricultural appropriation bill now pending before the Senate Committee on Agriculture provides $3,000,000 for the construction of forest roads and trails for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. At the same time it authorizes the apportionment for that purpose, among the States, of a total sum of $6,500,000, being the amount authorized to be appropriated by paragraph 2, section 4, of the act approved June 19, 1922. Apparently this measure would have the following effect: (1) It authorizes the department to build and pay for forest roads and trails up to a total cost of $3,000,000; (2) it authorizes the department to plan the construction of an additional $3,500,000 worth of forest roads and trails, and permits the department to enter into contracts therefor, but does not make the money available although it promises to do so.

It seems from this that the forest road and trail appropriation, which amounted to $10,000,000 last year, is cut down to $3,000,000 this year.

It is very doubtful if the department would actually attempt to contract any work under this authorization prior to supplemental action by Congress actually making the money available for disbursement.

It is also very doubtful if the department could secure satisfactory bids under a mere authorization of this kind. In fairness to the bidder the department would be compelled to advise him that the money had not actually been appropriated. The bidder then would be compelled to take that into account in figuring on the job. Instead of being able to finance his pay rolls by percentage payments on partly completed work he would have to count upon having the capital to complete the entire job and then await actual appropriation by Congress. No doubt this will mean higher costs and reduced mileage.

The fact that there is a considerable unexpended balance in the road and trail fund would have no bearing upon the action taken at this time. Disbursements are only actually made as the work is done and completed. The available balance is not more than sufficient to complete the projects now under way and provide a reasonable emergency balance to take care of overruns. New projects should be planned for the coming year and new contracts let. The work should ordinarily proceed upon a basis of the expenditure of $10,000,000 per annum. The reduction to $6,500,000 basis for the coming year is the greatest concession that the exigencies of the actual situation in the field can make to the financial situation.

By acts of November 21, 1921, and June 21, 1922, Congress has recognized as part of national road policy the need for constructing in a comprehensive way:

(1) Roads traversing national forests needed to complete State and county highway systems:

(2) Roads and trails needed for the protection and development of the forests themselves and to make their resources available to local users.

National forests stand as the great barriers to communication and road construction of the West—first, because of their rugged, mountainous topography, and, second, because of the absence of taxable property within them to support highway extensions. Physical assets of national forests represent conservative valuation of $1,000,000,000. If these areas had passed into private ownership they would pay a substantial return to tax funds of States and counties. Congress has recognized the obligation resting upon the Government as the owner of these enormous barriers to furnish substantial aid in extending public roads through them by the terms of the last two public road laws, as well as by former legislation.

I am advised by the Forest Service that a road plan for the development of the national forests has been worked out, embracing a total of 38,000 miles. This may seem like a tremendous mileage, but the national forests have a tremendous area. In fact, 38,000 miles actually means only 4.8 miles per township, or less than 1 mile for every seven sections of land in the national forests.

With the assistance of the settlers in the West, and with the appropriations heretofore made available, there have already been constructed 1.1 miles per township of roads of a satisfactory type and 2.1 miles of inferior road. The attached diagram shows graphically the unprotected condition of these properties. I do not need to tell this committee that an adequate system of transportation is absolutely essential to an adequate system of fire protection. Fifty-nine million acres of our national forests are now without any roads whatever. Eighty million acres are inadequately served by unsatisfactory roads of an inferior type. Only 42,000,000 acres out of the total gross area of 170,000,000 acres have adequate means of transportation.

Many large portions of national forests can now be reached only by two to five days travel on horseback or on foot from the end of the nearest road. Inaccessibility of these undeveloped regions is a very serious handicap in protection from fire, particularly if such areas are subject to lightning fires. Delays and difficulties in getting back into such undeveloped parts of the national forests are partly responsible for the $750,000 emergency expenditures now required annually in fighting forest fires, as well as equally heavy or greater losses in the destruction of timber and young growth.

Fully 75 per cent of the timber on national forests is not now available for use because of inaccessibility. The present yearly cut amounts to a little more than 10 per cent of the annual growth. Timber receipts now amount to about $2,000,000 a year. When the forests are opened up by roads so that the equivalent of the annual growth can be marketed each year, the annual timber receipts should increase to fifteen or twenty million dollars. Roads will also increase the development and use of other resources in the national forests such as inaccessible stock ranges, mineral resources, and the like. The responsibility rests with the Federal Government, and the sooner this responsibility is redeemed the sooner the Government will begin to realize upon its investment.

Estimated unobligated on July 1, 1923		1,070,166

National forest area, 156,837,282 acres, or 6,807 townships, or 245,058 square miles.

Area within national forest boundaries, 181,799,997 acres, or 7,891 townships, or 284,062 square miles.

Number of entire townships within forest boundaries in which there are no roads at all, 3,685, or almost 47 per cent.

Number of entire townships within forest boundaries in which there are only very poor roads—in character resembling wagon trails—2,418, or almost 31 per cent.

Present studies of system of roads deemed necessary at present or that will be necessary within 10 years provide for a system of about 38,000 miles, equivalent to about 4.8 miles of road to a township, or 1 mile of road for about 4,800 acres (7.5 square miles).

System of satisfactory roads now less than 25 per cent completed. Present system includes about 16,700 miles (44 per cent of entire system) of roads that are not of sufficiently high standard to properly carry travel, and therefore must be improved or reconstructed. On the balance (or about 12,500 miles) no roads now exist.

Of the entire work to be done to complete the required system, about 16 per cent of the mileage and 32 per cent of the expenditure is for roads on the State highway systems, approximately 35 per cent of the mileage and 35 per cent of the expenditure is for roads on the county systems, and about 50 per cent of the mileage (not including trails) and 33 per cent of the expenditure (not including trails) is for roads primarily necessary to the proper administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Total timber stand of merchantable timber, 590,000,000,000 feet.

Annual growth, 8,000,000,000 feet.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, January 13, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast been the support of the world in ages past and Thou art our hope in years to come. Before Thee we recognize our unworthiness and confess our sins. We would that our ways, our thoughts, and our motives were altogether acceptable to Thee. O establish our principles and may our lives show the tokens of our gratitude. Bless us with the sweet fruits of goodness and spare us ever from reaping the bitter fruits of badness. Mold the fundamental decisions of our characters and always determine their direction. Comfort us day by day with the assurance that Thou art pleased with us. For the sake of Jesus and the cross He bore that we might be saved. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, by direction of that committee reported the bill H. R. 13770 (Rept. 1388), a bill to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

EULOGIES.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, February 18, 1923, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. BOISE PENROSE, the Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX, the Hon. WILLIAM E. CROW, late Senators from the State of Pennsylvania, and the Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that February 18, 1923, be set apart for eulogies upon the late Senators and the Representative from the State of Pennsylvania. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 251.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows.

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 251) providing for the filling of two vacancies that will occur on January 14, 1923, and March 1, 1923, respectively, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

Resolved, etc., That the two vacancies that will occur as herein specified in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress be filled by the reappointment of Henry White, of the city of Washington, whose term will expire January 14, 1923, and of John B. Henderson, of the city of Washington, whose term will expire March 1, 1923.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the name of John B. Henderson and insert the name of Frederic Adrian Delano.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, there is no need of my taking any time to discuss this joint resolution. The terms of these two members expire next Sunday, and unless we act upon it at once there might be some confusion. I ask for a vote. I might state that after the committee had reported the joint resolution Mr. Henderson died, and consequently it was necessary to offer an amendment to strike out his name and insert that of Mr. Delano.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a memorandum of the activities of Mr. Delano, the new member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the matter referred to:

Frederic Adrian Delano, vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

Born Hongkong, China, September 10, 1863, both parents being natives of Massachusetts.

A. B., Harvard, 1885.

Began railway service with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., with engineering party in Colorado, 1885, and same year entered Aurora, Ill., shops of same road, as apprentice machinist; appointed temporarily acting engineer of tests at Aurora, April, 1887; placed in charge bureau of rail inspection at Chicago, July 1, 1887; assistant to second vice president at Chicago, April, 1889; superintendent freight terminals at Chicago, July, 1890; superintendent motive power at Chicago, February 1, 1899; general manager at Chicago, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, July 1, 1901–January 10, 1905.

After leaving service of Burlington, was consulting engineer to War Department in relation to railroads in Philippine Islands; president Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Co., Wabash-Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co., May 1, 1905–1908; first vice president Wabash Railway Co., May 1–October 5, 1905; president, October 5, 1905–December, 1911, and one of receivers December, 1911–December, 1913; president Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway Co., December, 1913–August 10, 1914.

Member Committee on Industrial Relations, 1912–1914; appointed by President Taft and again by President Wilson 1914 member Federal Reserve Board for six-year term, and designated as vice governor for two years; resigned June, 1918, to enter Army, where he attained rank of colonel, Transportation Corps; honorably discharged October 25, 1919.

Member board of overseers of Harvard College; ex-trustee University of Chicago; trustee Chicago Sunday Evening Club; vice president American Unitarian Association, 1907.

Member American Society of Civil Engineers, American Institute Mining Engineers, Western Society of Engineers, American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Railway Association, Franklin Institute, International Railway Congress, Western Railway Club, etc.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13696, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

TEMPORARY BUILDING (1800 VIRGINIA AVENUE).

Salaries: For the following employees for the maintenance and protection of the building: Clerk of class 1; chief engineer, $1,400; assistant engineer, $1,000; 6 firemen, at $840 each; electrician, $1,200; carpenter, $1,200; general mechanic, $1,000; guards—3 sergeants at $930 each, 9 at $780 each; foreman of laborers, $840; foreman or forewoman, $780; 10 laborers at $660 each; laborers and charwomen, $3,960; female laborer, $840; in all, $34,510.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 27, line 19, strike out the figures "$840" after the word "laborer," and insert "$480."

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman state why this change is made?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is simply a transposition of the figures. They got an 8 in place of a 4. It is to correct an error.

Mr. BLANTON. To reduce the salary?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; the salary is just the same. The salary is $480, but in the printing they transposed the figures and made it $840.

Mr. BLANTON. Does this female laborer give all of her time to the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on that subject I want to say that engaged in one line of work down in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing we have nine ladies. One of them has faithfully served the Government there for about 30 years, and most of the nine have served the Government over 25 years. They give their full time and yet they are only paid $50 per month. One of them, at least, knows as much about the business of that Bureau of Engraving and Printing as any other employee in it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman state what is the nature of their work?

Mr. BLANTON. Now they have been assigned to showing visitors over the building. If that is a work that the Government ought to pay for, it ought to pay an adequate salary.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Are they not receiving honoraria, tips, or something of that kind down there now?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think so.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Are they not upon the same footing as the guides around the Capitol, some of whom make really big money?

Mr. BLANTON. I think not.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. By the sale of souvenirs and other things?

Mr. BLANTON. One of them told me that all she received was $50 a month, and she said that she could not live upon that. She said she thought the Government certainly could raise her salary. She further said she was afraid she was coming to the wrong person, because she had been informed that I was in favor of reducing salaries. I am not in favor of reducing salaries of that kind. The amendment specifying the annual salary at only $480 is for a woman. The only kind of salaries I am in favor of reducing is where we get a man who, until he began working for the Government, was receiving probably $1,200 a year, who enters the Government service at $2,000 a year, and then immediately wants his salary raised to $5,000 or $10,000 a year. That is the sort of salary that I am in favor of reducing. I am not in favor of reducing the salary of women to $480 and $600 per annum. These women ought to be paid adequately or they ought to be taken off the pay roll. If they are paid by gratuities, by contributions from parties whom they serve in showing the building, they ought to be taken off the Government pay roll entirely. I understand they are getting $50 a month, and that is their total compensation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, that is a mistake. They get the bonus. They do not get the entire bonus, but they get a proportionate share of it.

Mr. BLANTON. How much of the bonus?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is about $160.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to be paid what other men working for the Government in similar employment receive, where they give their full time to the Government, and I am using these few minutes merely to call this matter to the attention of the particular subcommittee that has it in charge, so that in the future they may fix an adequate salary.

Mr. WASON. Is not that a statutory position?

Mr. BLANTON. I think so.

Mr. WASON. Then, the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations should not legislate, but the matter should go to the proper legislating committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have heard that passing of the buck so much that it now makes me tired to hear it. Whenever any one of the subcommittees of the great Appropriations Committee that has to do with these various supply bills wants to put a piece of legislation on the bill, they put it on, and sometimes they disguise it so that it is hard to tell that it is legislation. They put it in at will, when it appeals to them, but the things that do not appeal to them they leave out, and then fight when we try to put them back.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other expenditures authorized by the act approved September 7, 1916, as amended, and by the act approved June 5, 1920, including the compensation of attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and for all other expenses of the board, including the rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and actual and necessary expenses of members of the board, its special experts, and other employees, or per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, while upon official business away from their designated posts of duty, and including the investigation of foreign discrimination against vessels and shippers of the United States and for the investigation of transportation of immigrants in vessels of the United States Shipping Board, $317,500.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to find out how much is carried under the United States Shipping Board for the purpose of advertising during the next year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not recall. I do not know that anything is carried, any specific amount, for that purpose. Of course, under the appropriation for administration they could use a certain amount of it, or whatever they saw fit for that purpose.

Mr. SEARS. Of course, under the old act, as the gentleman will recall, we had quite a fight, and there was $900,000 appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That was under the Emergency Fleet Corporation; it was not under the Shipping Board at all.

Mr. SEARS. They are so intermingled that it is hard to get them separated. I have read through the Emergency Fleet Corporation fund and I can not find it. I think it is high time that we should quit spending money in advertising that there is nothing to see in America and that people should go to Europe. The people of the country are complaining of high taxes.

Coming up on the train I read a resolution introduced by my distinguished friend from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, to the effect that during the present session at least there would be no bonus bill. Of course, we understand by that, that next year, the same being an election year, there will be a bonus bill. I think it is time for us to quit talking and get down to economy, and if there is anything in this act or any other act authorizing the Shipping Board to continue to spend $900,000 a year, as they have expended it in the past, for advertising, in my feeble way I shall oppose it, especially after the President came before us and told us that his conscience hurt him so much that he could not remain silent longer, and that we should get rid of the entire Shipping Board.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman exactly, that the best thing that could happen to the United States would be to get rid of the entire Shipping Board, and if gentlemen on the Democratic side, instead of quibbling against small items like this, would rise to the dignity and importance of the United States and establish a merchant marine, they would no longer have ground for complaint against advertising.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, we might rise to emergency conditions as we meet them, but those on the Democratic side would rather give the whole thing away than rise to the emergency of giving to a group of men, whom it is claimed are already known, about $6,000,000,000 worth of property for $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, loan them the money to buy it, and then if they do not like it, take it back from them. Of course, that is the varying difference of policy as between this side and the other side. I am willing to get rid of the Shipping Board, and have been for a good many years, and if they continue to operate it as they have operated it, I think the quicker we get rid of it the better off we will be.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY SHIPPING FUND.

For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, for administrative purposes, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships, for the tie-up, reconditioning and repair of ships, and for carrying out the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, (a) the amount on hand July 1, 1923, but not in excess of the sums sufficient to cover all obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1923, and then unpaid; (b) $50,000,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from the current maintenance and operation of vessels; (c) the amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, from the operation of ships.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 5, after the words "ships," insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That in no event shall more than $300,000 of the sum appropriated by this act be used to pay the compensation of attorneys, regular or special, for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have looked through the hearings for this year for some information about the total amount which is being paid attorneys, and I am unable to find anything. Therefore I assume that a similar number of attorneys are still on the roll for this year. I have been informed that a few have been dismissed, but the number has been reduced very little.

Last year, according to the testimony—and I have it here before me—there were $619,000 appropriated for the employment of attorneys for the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board. The list is shown in the hearings of last year on page 1165, and if there is no objection I shall insert this in the RECORD in reference to the amounts paid. Now, I am serious about this amendment and the purpose for which it is offered. It was shown by the testimony of witnesses that the principal purpose of the employment of these attorneys was the adjustment of claims and the handling of any litigation that might arise. I believe that they can get 15 or 20 lawyers and 15 or 20 claim adjusters and do this work easily and perhaps better than if it is done altogether by high-priced attorneys. About two years ago or a little more than two years ago they were paying $25,000 to $30,000 for some lawyers, and a number of them were being paid $15,000 to $20,000 each. These salaries were paid until the Congress put a $11,000 limitation on the payment of the salary of any one attorney. Mr. Schlesinger, who undertakes to justify the employment of these 78 attorneys, testified as to how he obtained the services of and how he happened to employ these great attorneys, and how he happened to secure their services for $20,000 and $25,000 a year, and after great persuasion and at a tremendous sacrifice to them he induced them to come here at $20,000 to $25,000 a year. But when Congress put on this $11,000 limitation every one of these high-priced attorneys stayed at $11,000. They were every one on the list last year, a year and more after they have been employed. I want to read some of the testimony about these lawyers. I believe in the testimony last year it was stated that for only about a year they would need this many attorneys and could reduce the force. Now, I want to say that surely with this limitation of the appropriation to $300,000 all of the necessary business can be handled.

Now, Mr. Schlesinger undertook to justify the employment of these attorneys and spoke of a man by the name of Fletcher Dobyns:

> I engaged Mr. Dobyns at $15,000 a year. Since the Walsh case his reputation had grown greatly, and he was earning a great deal more money, several times more than that. I got him to come down on account of his friendship for me and because he felt that he could add to his reputation in going through with this Morse situation.

I am sure Mr. Dobyns is a good lawyer. He bears that reputation, and I do not blame him for making the best trade he can.

That reminds me that down on the old farm we had a horse named Dobbins, and it took an earthquake to get him out of a walk, but he could eat more than any horse I ever saw. This man Dobyns had been on the pay roll before. Mr. Schlesinger employed him at $15,000, but when the $11,000 limitation was put on he still stayed on the pay roll at $11,000, notwithstanding he came here at a tremendous sacrifice at $15,000 a year.

Mr. YATES. He is a horse of another color.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Perhaps so, but he is still able to eat, evidently. Now, here is a man by the name William Marshal Bullitt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I have not had any time on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, here is another lawyer by the name of William Marshal Bullitt, and Mr. Schlesinger says of him:

> I persuaded him to come to Washington at $25,000 a year, which was a great financial sacrifice to him.

And I turn over to the list, and here is William Marshal Bullitt still working at $11,000 per year since the limitation was put on. Before that he had to have $25,000. Now he is willing to work at $11,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman object to these men sacrificing their time and sacrificing a part of the emoluments which they might earn elsewhere?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, not at all; but the irony of the gentleman's statement is that they make a sacrifice. I am accepting the testimony of the man that they need seventy-odd lawyers, which is all the justification they have here; and he says these men would not come, and they could not get these men for $20,000 and in some instances even for $25,000 and $30,000, but after they were hired at these high figures Congress forbade the payment of more than $11,000 and all these sacrificial people still stuck.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will yield for a further question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman any information that these men did not make any sacrifice in coming here?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have no information at all, but I say there should be information that they are earning the money. That is not here. I have not been able to find what these lawyers are now doing and as to the necessity for retaining them. And the hearings for this year do not disclose that information. It is not up to me to justify the elimination of these men. It is up to the Congress to eliminate some of them unless the Appropriations Committee justifies their retention. And I do not think this has been done.

It is not up to me to show that they are not making a personal sacrifice by rendering this service. It is up to those who are trying to justify them to show that they are earning what the Government pays them. I am not objecting to retaining some of these lawyers. What I want is to get the work done as cheaply and as efficiently as possible. I say this work could be done by 20 lawyers and 20 adjusters. Much of the work is such as could be done by an adjuster instead of by an attorney. It ought to be done at an aggregate cost of not exceeding $200,000. We ought to be able to get attorneys and adjusters to do this work for that money.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I sympathize with what the gentleman is trying to do, to bring this amount down to the limit of such service as we need. But the criticism may be somewhat unfair. Is it not true that we do have men in the Government service who are making a tremendous sacrifice?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I think so. But what I was saying is that these men have stayed on at a reduced salary when before their salary was reduced they protested that they could not come unless these high salaries were paid. They were accordingly employed at the high salaries. Oh, no; they could not come here for less than $15,000 or $20,000 or, in some instances, $30,000. But, like the poor we seem to have them always with us, even at a much less rate of compensation.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I will ask the gentleman if he is not capable himself, as a lawyer, of earning more than $625 a month, the salary of a Congressman? Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am pretty well satisfied with the place I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand that Mr. Lasker is not only sacrificing his business but has expended at least $40,000 out of his own private purse in order to try to solve this problem.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman a question in answer to his question.

Mr. FESS. Is it not possible that he has about him men who are devoted to trying to solve the problem and willing to make a personal sacrifice in doing so?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Most assuredly; but before the other limitation was made he had been spending large salaries to these men who could be employed for less. If they are willing to make a sacrifice now, surely they would have done it then. I say we ought to be able to get a corps of competent officers at a less total amount than is being paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Texas may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my colleague if it is not his sound judgment that what we term "dollar-a-year" men with reference to the Government service are not the most expensive men that we could have in any line of endeavor?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think that is undoubtedly true. While I think there were some patriotic men who really rendered fine service at a dollar a year, yet I think the policy was a mistake, and in the end, on the whole, it cost more to have dollar-a-year men than to pay men what their services were worth. I am not objecting to adequate compensation to attorneys for adequate work, but I think that $200,000, after a year when they had $600,000, ought to be sufficient to take care of the legal department. Mr. Schlesinger in his testimony says:

I sent for Mr. Fairbanks and offered him $10,000 a year to come with the board. He refused point-blank and told me he had been paid $12,000 when he was at the head of the War Claims Board. I offered him $15,000, and he said he would come.

Here is another man, by the name of Freund. I understand the meaning of that word is "friend." I read:

I have told you about Mr. Freund. He came from the firm of Sherman & Sterling. I took him from that firm and offered to pay him $25,000, and in view of the limitation of $11,000 salary which Congress imposed upon us, I feel badly for having done so. I think the Government should pay its attorneys what they are worth when they are unusually competent.

Mr. Freund is still on here at $11,000 a year, although he was being paid $25,000 before Congress limited these salaries. I cite this on the question of efficiency. I again repeat that they can take 20 attorneys and 20 adjusters and do this work efficiently. The evidence shows that most of their work is claims adjusting. You can take a number of adjusters and claim agents and take enough attorneys to pass on the legality of the claims and accomplish efficient results.

Here is another man, by the name of Aaron. That is a name to conjure with. Last year the gentleman from Indiana evidently had some misgivings as to the efficiency of all their work and the salaries paid. I want to quote from his question of Mr. Aaron. He asked:

Mr. WOOD. You elevated that gentleman to $10,000 from a Government position at $4,000?

Mr SCHLESINGER. No, sir; he was engaged at $10,000.

Mr. WOOD. He worked for the Government somewhere at $4,000 a year.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] says that in 1919 this Mr. Aaron was working for the Government somewhere at $4,000 a year. Mr. Schlesinger said he did not even know that.

Now, gentlemen of the House, we want to do the work of the Government properly and efficiently, but after they have had two years, with all these high-priced attorneys adjusting claims, practically all of which arose during the operation of the fleet and the work during and immediately after the war, it seems to me that $200,000 for lawyers ought to be adequate and sufficient to take care of it. I do not know whether they will need that amount or not, but there ought at least to be some limitation on the amount. In view of the testimony here and in view of the amount that was paid to these attorneys prior to the time when the other limitation was put on the action of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board, I am unwilling that they shall be given carte blanche to pay any amount they please for attorneys whom they may desire to employ. Under the terms of this bill they are unlimited so long as they do not pay over $11,000 to any particular attorney. There is no limit fixed in the bill. There should be a limit placed on the total amount paid to the attorneys, and I have been unable to find any such limitation in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] had been here the other day, I dare say he would not have humiliated himself by the speech he has just made. If he had confined himself to the hearings of this year rather than of last year, from which he has quoted to-day, I know with due respect to himself he would not have made the speech that he has just made. True to form, he is just a year behind time. I wish to insert in the RECORD a list of the attorneys now employed and the salaries given:

I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the old régime, of which he was a defender, the pay roll of this board was more than twice what it is now. With very ill grace does it come from those who are now criticizing the Shipping Board to inveigh against exorbitant salaries, when but a few short years ago they were here defending them. One of the greatest compliments that could be paid Mr. Lasker, who has sacrificed his time and his possibilities of earning money to the interests of the Government, is the fact that he has reduced the overhead expense of this Shipping Board from $15,861,000 down to $7,500,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is there any limitation in the bill which would keep him from employing any number of attorneys that he might desire?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course there is, and the gentleman simply shows his ignorance by not reading the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to be cited to that provision.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Your time is no more valuable than mine. Everybody else knows about it. Read the bill and you will find where it is.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is a very general statement. I should like to have the information, and the gentleman as chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of this bill ought to furnish that information.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The information is in the bill itself. Read the bill. You have not read the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have read the bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You have just simply been employing your time in reading last year's hearings. And let me say to you——

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is a gratuitous statement. I tried to find it in this year's hearings, and I would like some information about it. I asked the ranking Democrat on the committee about these attorneys and he said he had no information, and the hearings disclose no information. I have looked at the hearings and the index, and there is nothing in the index about attorneys.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is just simply further showing his ignorance, because there was no ranking Democrat on this committee, unfortunately.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who was looking after it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You had better employ your time in reading the minutes of the hearings.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Surely it was not the purpose to have no Democrats on the committee. Surely there are Democrats on the subcommittee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; there were two. Unfortunately Mr. HARRISON did not serve, because of a personal embarrassment for which he was excusable, and Mr. GRIFFIN unfortunately has been sick. Fortunately Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee has been able and willing to act in their places in the presentation of this bill. But if the gentleman would simply be as industrious in trying to ascertain the facts as he is industrious in trying to insert a little bit of prejudice and acrimony into this debate, it would be far better for all concerned and infinitely better for the administration of affairs.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I appreciate the gentleman's lecture all right, but I should like to have the information. He has not disclosed it yet.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have the information here now.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to know the provision in the bill which places this limitation, and I should like to know the total amount to be used to pay attorneys.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am going to insert the list in the RECORD, and the gentleman can read it at his leisure.

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I have the list? May I have time to look over the list?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why, of course you can.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman in the meantime——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not want you to be occupying my time. I want to give the House some facts.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I wish the gentleman would do it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am going to confine it to the present year and not past years. This thing of sitting backward in a car and waiting until you pass an object before you see it, and then criticizing it because you did not see it before, does not appeal much to me. [Laughter.] Now, the pay roll of this Shipping Board has gone from $15,861,000, which was the amount when the present board came into office in 1921, down to $7,500,000. This reduction keeps pace with the better liquidation of war entanglements.

Here is another thing to which I wish to call attention: We have done away with the very gentleman whom the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has spoken about. Mr. Schlesinger is no longer connected with this board. Happily, he rendered a splendid service, and after he went away the position of general counsel of the Shipping Board and general counsel of the Emergency Fleet Corporation have been united, thus saving that $10,000. They have also done away with two experts, saving $10,000 each. In fact, they have done away in that department alone with personal services saving the Government some $47,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. May I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I was a little bit amused here on yesterday to hear gentlemen on the other side criticizing the Shipping Board because they have found it expedient to do away with the commission for the settlement of claims. The members of that commission were costing us $10,000 a year each, and some gentlemen who are now criticizing the board because they have done away with that service were then criticizing us who were recommending it. For the life of me I can not understand their consistency or their attitude unless it be simply for the purpose of criticism.

Now, gentlemen, I suppose I have had just as much trouble with this Shipping Board as anybody. I think I have had more trouble. I was sent back five times last year to conference on this appropriation bill because of the appropriation for the Shipping Board. The items then in dispute have proven the very best things that could happen so far as saving is concerned, so far as reduction of overhead is concerned, so far as efficiency is concerned, and gentlemen upon the other side, some of them, are now free to admit that that is true.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it not a fact that in the gentleman's own list there are 73 lawyers now employed by the Shipping Board?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think there are, and I want to say to you, as I said a year ago, that this is the biggest business in the world. There is nothing to compare with it. That is the trouble. There is nothing that we have to do that is comparable to the extent of the business of the Shipping Board. It extends all over the world. Some of us can not comprehend the extent of it. I confess I can not; but every port in the world has some representative of this Shipping Board involving, if you please, all the expenditures and trouble incident to shipping. I am not a shipper. I know but little about this business. All I know about it is the information I get from those who by reason of long experience are equipped to give information, and to my mind it is a most amazing proposition and wonderfully to the credit of the present Shipping Board that out of all the rottenness that formerly prevailed in this thing they have reduced it as they have been able to reduce it. And I wish to say to gentlemen upon this side that there will be no one happier than I when the United States will have done with this entire thing. It is not a business in which the Government ought to be engaged; but as long as she is engaged in it she must do the best she can to conserve the best interests not only as to the property that is in trust, but to all those who are vitally concerned. I wish that I might have the deciding voice in establishing a merchant marine for the United States to take this thing over, and if you gentlemen will be as honest and industrious in trying to do that thing for the pride and glory of the country as you are in criticizing the Shipping Board we soon will be rid of this thing, and happy will I be when it comes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is chairman of this Appropriations Subcommittee. He admits on the floor of the House that only three members of Congress have had anything to do with the preparation of this bill. There are 432 other Members of Congress who had no connection whatever with the preparation of the bill, and may get information concerning it only from the hearings or the gentleman. He is presumed to answer questions as chairman of the subcommittee—questions that may be asked him concerning the provisions of the bill, and be frank about it. My colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES] can not be disposed of with a lip spanking such as the gentleman from Indiana sought to give him. He asked a legitimate question. He asked where in this bill was there such a limitation as he mentioned, and the chairman said:

It is there; you have not read the bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is not in the bill. I have read it carefully. The only provisions in the bill that limits the matter in any respect whatever are the two provisions on the top of page 35. The first provision reads as follows:

No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of any attorney, regular or special, for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation unless the contract of employment has been approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

That does not limit the number of attorneys.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What about the next paragraph?

Mr. BLANTON. I am coming to that, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio. The next paragraph merely provides that where you pay more than $11,000 to an employee you can only employ six at $25,000 and two at $20,000. They are permitted to employ an unlimited number at not over $11,000 each per annum. Let me read it to you:

No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000 except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each, and two at not to exceed $20,000 each.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. The point of my colleague [Mr. JONES] was that they were unlimited as to the number of attorneys they could employ at $11,000 a year. The only limitation is to get the approval of the Attorney General of the United States. Now, I am with the Attorney General in enforcing the laws of this country. I am against the effort that is being made to hamstring him in that enforcement. I approve of his stand against anarchy in the railroad strike. But I want to say that if you will look over the stupendous list of attorneys that are now employed by the Attorney General in the Department of Justice, you will see that we can not depend upon him to exert a proper limitation. Oh, concerning our two formers colleagues, Mr. McCulloch and Mr. Reavis—both splendid gentlemen—they are earning every dollar of the $10,000 that the Attorney General is now paying them. I commend the splendid work they are doing. They are both doing the best of service, highly valuable to the people, and if they were all like Mr. Reavis and Mr. McCulloch, I would not take the floor and say a word against them. They are earning it all. And some of the other attorneys are splendid men earning their salaries. But they have a bunch of lawyers there, some of whom are being paid about four times as much as they ever got before in their lives.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman state who those attorneys are?

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, in connection with my remarks about them, to put in the RECORD the list of the attorneys who are employed by the Department of Justice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman include the name of ex-Senator Thomas among those he is indicting?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman name the men that he is indicting now?

Mr. BLANTON. I will name some of them, and in such connection give facts that should indict them to the full satisfaction of the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why not give them to us on the floor of the House?

Mr. BLANTON. I will put them in the RECORD and you will be surprised. I am going to put the names of the attorneys and the salaries in. I am going to show you that in addition to the number of attorneys whose salaries are fixed and stated there is a long list of them whose salaries are indeterminate.

Some of them, I presume, are being given the largest salaries. The following is a list of the 39 special attorneys employed by the Attorney General in the war-fraud cases, with their home State given, and the salary they draw, respectively:

I have had quite a hard time getting the above. Some I got from our colleague from New York [Mr. HUSTED], who is chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee in charge of the Department of Justice appropriations, and the others I got from the Department of Justice after some effort. The following is a list of the attorneys who are designated as special assistants to the Attorney General in the Department of Justice, and whose salaries are not definitely fixed; but the department has promised in a few days to furnish me with data showing amounts paid them annually:

NAMES OF SPECIAL ASSISTANTS TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND THEIR LEGAL RESIDENCE.

Henry M. Glassie, Maryland.
James A. Fowler, Tennessee.
Frank K. Nebeker, Utah.
Elias Field, Massachusetts.
LaRue Brown, Massachusetts.
B. I. Salinger, Iowa.
Luke D. Stapleton, New York.
John Marshall, West Virginia.
Frederic N. Watriss, New York.
V. W. Van Fleet, Indiana.
H. C. Workman, New York.
Harry E. Knight, New Jersey.
Robert S. Blair, New York.
Thomas B. Booth, Massachusetts.
J. Edgar Bull, New York.
H. H. Byrne, District of Columbia.
Arthur E. Dowell, District of Columbia.
Osgood H. Dowell, Illinois.
Clifton V. Edwards, New York.
Frederick L. Emery, Massachusetts.
Ramsey Hoguet, New York.
A. M. Holcombe, District of Columbia.
Andrew W. Hunter, Canada.
H. Alfred Janke, New York.
Lawrence A. Janney, Illinois.
Louis A. Jones, Massachusetts.
Herbert H. Knight, District of Columbia.
Octavius Knight, New York.
Lawrence G. Miller, Massachusetts.
Maurice Orgais, Paris, France.
Edward H. Palmer, Massachusetts.
T. K. Schmuck, New York.
John W. Thompson, New York.
Thomas J. Tyne, Tennessee.
Lucius E. Varney, New York.
Manvel Whittemore, New York.
Robert H. Young, District of Columbia.
James A Watson, District of Columbia.
Daniel L. Morris, New York.
Carl P. Goepel, New York.
W. L. Tooze, Oregon.
Howell Van Auken, Michigan.
Chas. A. McDonough, Philippine Islands.
A. R. Holden, Canada.
Stuart R. Bolin, Ohio.
Joseph B. Fleming, Illinois.
John E. Northrup, Illinois.
J. Sherring Pratt, Ohio.
Harold Harper, New York.
W. H. Boyd, Ohio.
D. M. Kelleher, Iowa.
Gordon Auchincloss, New York.
Bert Hanson, New York.

Now, I was asked to give concrete cases of some of these attorneys who are overpaid. Mr. James J. Lenihan is one of them. According to his own statement, before coming to Washington to accept this position, his income for the preceding two years was not in excess of $75 per month, I am reliably informed, and that he has admitted that he had never tried a case in the Federal court. If the membership of this body will examine closely into his services with regard to the United States Harness Co. case, the Kenyon case, the Philipps & Stephens Lumber case, and the Maxwell case, you will reach the conclusion I have formed, that he has no business being employed by this Government in the Department of Justice. Yet Mr. Lenihan has been promoted and is now drawing $6,000 per year.

On September 10, 1910, Mr. George E. Kelleher was appointed special agent in the Department of Justice at $4 per day, and on February 1, 1912, was given $4.50 per day, and is now paid $4,000 per annum.

I am reliably advised that Mr. Abram F. Myers was a messenger boy in the department a few years ago.

I am reliably informed that Mr. Marcus W. Borchardt and Mr. William S. Ward were formerly special agents, and were taken in as war-fraud attorneys by Mr. Lenihan.

Concerning Mr. Ralph E. Moody, who is now being paid $5,000 per year, I am reliably informed by Mr. Gilbert and Mr. James Shea, managers in charge of the Bliss properties with office adjoining the Driscoll Hotel, that some 15 months ago Mr. Moody rented an apartment from them in the Woodward apartment building on Connecticut Avenue and lived there under immoral conditions.

Failing to pay two months rent, the Bliss properties sued him, and on February 17, 1922, recovered judgment against Moody for $300, which afterwards he paid. But he was told to move.

Messrs. Shea and Gilbert are substantial credible citizens of Washington, and if what they say is true, Mr. Ralph E. Moody is making no patriotic sacrifice in working for this Government at $5,000 per annum, but ought to be separated from the Department of Justice.

We remember that Attorney General Daugherty criticized his predecessor for paying one of his attorneys $24,000. Yet I am reliably informed that for one attorney he is now paying $12,000 a year for half time. That is the same as $24,000 a year for full time. But there is no such thing as half time for an attorney. How are you going to regulate half time? I want to say that the question raised by my colleague [Mr. JONES] is one that will not down. It is like Banquo's ghost. You can not dismiss it by getting up here and trying to lip-spank him for asking the question. Be frank about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words with reference to the question of the employment of attorneys by the Department of Justice, whose compensation is to be determined. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a great point about this method of employment, and wants the House to believe that it is extravagant and unbusinesslike. Now, the contrary is true. These attorneys in the Department of Justice whose compensation remains to be determined are chiefly employed in defending the Government in suits for the appropriation of patents or suits for the infringement of patents. They are men who in their own private practice command very large fees. They are men whose fees in their own private practice run to $100,000 a year, $150,000 a year, or $200,000 a year in some instances. They are among the best patent lawyers in the country, and they are employed by the Department of Justice under contract. These contracts provide that they can not receive more than $1,000 for any one month; that they can not receive more than $12,000 in any one year; and they can not receive $1,000 a month unless they present bills to the Department of Justice showing that they have rendered services for that month which, in the opinion of the Attorney General, are worth $1,000. Their services are rendered under contracts where the salary remains to be determined, because it can not be fixed without loss to the Government. If it were fixed, it certainly would not be fixed at less than $12,000 a year, and very few of these men get $12,000 a year. On the average, I do not believe they get more than half of $12,000 a year, and if we had any other method of providing for their compensation, it would cost the Government a great deal more than it does now. There is not an attorney employed in the Department of Justice who receives a salary of more than $12,000 a year, and when you consider the importance of the business they handle, the gravity of the questions, and the vast amount of money involved in the litigation, I think the Government of the United States is served by its attorneys at much less cost than any public or private interest in the United States.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman any reply to the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that in his view these men are getting four times what they are worth?

Mr. BLANTON. Some of them, I said.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Very well. Some of them. Will the gentleman indicate in his remarks which of them gets four times more than they are worth?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will do that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is going to set himself up as the censor of the attorneys in the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANTON. No; but I shall take the salaries that they received when they entered the Government service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana did me the honor to say that I am in charge of the bill on this side of the Chamber. I was, however, not a member of the subcommittee, and, therefore, did not participate in the hearings on this particular bill. In fact, there were no Members on this side of the Chamber who participated in those hearings, on account of the illness of the Democratic members of the subcommittee.

My position with reference to the employment of attorneys in the Shipping Board, I think, is pretty well known by some of the Members present. I had something to say upon the subject a year ago when this bill was under consideration, and I think the year before that. A year ago something over $600,000 was being spent for attorneys in the Shipping Board. The list which has been furnished the House by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] shows that there are now upon the pay roll of the Shipping Board 73 attorneys, who are drawing an aggregate of $455,000 a year. It has been stated by the chairman of the Shipping Board that the claims against the Shipping Board have been practically settled, and that by July 1 all of the claims against the Shipping Board, with the exception of a very few where the claimants prefer to go into the Court of Claims, will have been settled, and that out of the $50,000,000 appropriated to pay those claims he expects to pay back into the Treasury something like $25,000,000. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I do not see any justification for an immense roll of attorneys next year, beginning on July 1, in the Shipping Board, with these claims out of the way. Why do they need so many attorneys down there? Why do they need so many attorneys employed all the way from $3,600 to $10,000 a year? I notice on this list the name of one distinguished gentleman who is now serving as an attorney, and who was employed at the beginning of this administration, as the general counsel stated in response to questions in the hearings of last year, solely for the purpose of appearing before the proper legislative committees of the House and Senate. He is down there now at a salary of $9,500 per year, with no other duties, according to the general counsel in his statement of a year ago, than to come before the committees of the House and the Senate upon legislation affecting the merchant marine. In view of the record of the Shipping Board with reference to the employment of attorneys, I submit that this House ought to place some limitation upon the Shipping Board and limit the amount of money that may be expended in the employment of high-salaried attorneys who want to come to Washington, some of them, for the purpose of engaging in social activities.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I think some of them want to come here to take a law course at the George Washington University or out here at the Georgetown University.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know that that is the fact, but I am not prepared to dispute the statement of the gentleman. Ordinarily I am opposed to limitations upon appropriations for specific services for specific purposes; but I think the record of the Shipping Board, as disclosed in the hearings of a year ago, is such that this is entirely justified in the interest of the people of the country, and that we should put a limitation upon this bill and provide that no more than a certain amount shall be expended in the employment of attorneys. I repeat the question, What reason is there for the Shipping Board to keep this immense roll of attorneys if all of the claims against the board will be settled by the time that this appropriation goes into effect, July 1 next?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in what the gentleman says, but I did not hear all that he said. Did I understand the gentleman to say that it is stated by Mr. Lasker, or by those in authority, that the necessity for the employment of all of these men will expire on the 1st of July next?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; I did not make that statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not trying to put anything into the gentleman's mouth, but I am trying to learn what is in his mouth. I want to know. Is it true that these claims will have been all settled by July 1 next?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. With the exception of a few that may possibly go to the Court of Claims because the claimants are unwilling to accept the amount which the Shipping Board is willing to pay in satisfaction of their claims. Unfortunately the hearings of this year are entirely silent upon the subject of attorneys. There is nothing in the hearings to show how many attorneys are employed, how many are expected to be employed, next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. SEARS. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he stated that one of these lawyers got $9,500 a year whose sole duty it was to appear before the subcommittee of the House and the committees of the Senate and help to get legislation through. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I did not exactly put it that way. I do not know what his duties are now.

Mr. SEARS. I mean a year ago.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do know that in the hearings on the bill which was passed for the present fiscal year the general counsel stated, when asked what that particular attorney's duties were, that his duties were to appear before committees of the House and Senate on matters of legislation affecting the Shipping Board and its interests.

Mr. SEARS. Then if that is true the taxpayers are paying for a lobbyist to appear before committees to get legislation through.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether you would call him a lobbyist. I do not know whether he is simply appearing there to give his legal opinion upon bills pending before the committee, but I submit with the limited number of bills which are pending affecting the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation that $9,500 per annum is a pretty good sum to pay an attorney for that particular service.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand they had an appropriation of over $600,000 to pay attorneys to do certain work last year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was not a specific appropriation, but that amount was available.

Mr. BUTLER. That amount was available last year. The work is now practically accomplished, or will be by the 1st of July. I confess I do not see the necessity——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not question but what the Shipping Board will need attorneys during the year 1924.

Mr. BUTLER. Some attorneys.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They need a number of attorneys according to the statement of General Counsel Schlesinger a year ago, as I recall it, and a majority of attorneys then employed were engaged in considering these claims and passing upon them.

Mr. BUTLER. How many of these attorneys, and how much money was expended in their employment upon these claims? Because if they are about adjusted I confess I would want some one to explain it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am sorry I can not tell the gentleman, because I have no information. The hearings do not disclose it.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman will yield, as I understand the information that comes to me, they have employed a gentleman to advise the Congress, and they pay him $2,000 more than they pay a Congressman. Does not the gentleman think any man who has such a responsibility should be paid better than a Congressman to advise us? If he is not worth more than we are, he had better stay away.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not quite in accord with the gentleman in the estimate he places upon himself.

Mr. YATES. Another reflection upon us.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This row comes up every time this subject is opened about the number of attorneys employed by the Shipping Board, which we all agree and know is an outrage, and I was wondering why the Committee on Appropriations does not function and cut off some of the salaries of these fellows. That will get them out. I am asking for information purely.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The House last year adopted a provision which fixed the maximum salary and, of course, that limitation has not been exceeded by the Shipping Board at the present time. But this appropriation is made by lump sum, as the gentleman knows, and there is no restriction upon the chairman of the Shipping Board as to the number of attorneys he may employ under this appropriation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I was wondering, if it appears patent on its face that this Shipping Board is not going to need 73 lawyers next year, whether Congress in some way should not take it from under the autocratic power of the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is what I am pleading for now, and I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which limits the sum to $300,000, will be adopted. I think if the facts were fully known that is too much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] stated that he was in sympathy with the gentleman from Texas, but. Usually when we try to economize on the floor of the House we are in sympathy, but. Of course, when it becomes necessary to cut the salary of some employee we sympathize, but. We forget the American people who are paying the freight. My good friend from Indiana I think was rather unfair when he referred to the Democratic side as being inconsistent now. In 1917 I made the statement on the floor of this House that the Democratic Party, which was then in power, should check up expenditures and stop graft and wanton waste of money and not wait until the Republican Party came into power. My good friend, the late lamented James R. Mann, differed with me and said when the Republicans came into power they would attend to that, and I remarked it was too late after the horse got out of the stable to check up; that the money would be gone. For more than four years the Republicans have been in control of the House and Senate. You can not get away from the fact; you know that is true. The American people are getting tired of wanton waste of money. The American people are moaning and groaning and staggering under a burden of taxation that they can not much longer bear.

For four years I have made a fight against the Shipping Board, whether it was a Democratic Shipping Board or a Republican Shipping Board. I am here fighting for economy for the people and it is immaterial to me whether my party is in power or whether the Republican Party is in power. The gentleman well knows that ever since this bill has been up before the House I have been trying to cut down the appropriations. There is but one thing in this bill that limits it. The only limitation is we are no longer willing to trust ourselves. I was elected by a great constituency, each of you were elected by a great constituency, and yet we leave it to the Attorney General of the United States as to how many attorneys he shall employ and what salaries he shall pay each of them, except six shall receive an amount not to exceed $25,000 each and two at not to exceed $20,000 each and the rest to receive a salary not to exceed $11,000 each. To my mind, at least, these amounts can not be defended.

If Congress would exercise its rights, if you would perform your functions that the people send you here to perform and quit delegating powers to people who are not elected to office, then the American people would once more have confidence in those whom they send to Washington to represent them. I care not whether it is on this side or on that side. If you ride the trains and talk to the people you will find my statement is correct, that they are getting tired of our saying that you can not hire a lawyer to do something for less than $25,000 a year, when such a man as the chairman of the subcommittee himself [Mr. WOOD], who is chairman of the Republican National Committee, is willing to serve his people for $7,500 a year. The people are going to express their opinion upon this amount that you are appropriating, and whether it is on this side or on that side you will find they will demand of Congress that we do what they have sent us here to do—reduce taxation, simplify the form of taxation, and cut down the excessive expenditure of Government money throughout the country, which no one can deny is being done and which no one can defend. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is purely an arbitrary proposition, without rhyme, reason, or sense. The gentleman could not give any details as to the necessities of his amendment. This appropriation, whatever it may be, is paid out of the general appropriation of $50,000,000 for the administration of this service.

Now, it is true that they have been making very marked progress with reference to the settlement of these claims, and the hearings disclose that it is expected by the last of June that the claims will all be settled, and with the settlement of these claims all these lawyers that have to do with them will go out and, of course, nothing will be paid to them thereafter.

But here is the thing to consider: Before we interfere with the administration of these gentlemen we ought to have some reason for it. This money will not be wasted, and the best evidence that it will not be wasted is the fact of the return that is being made through the economical administration of this Shipping Board.

Members say there is no limitation fixed in this bill. There is a limitation in it by which not to exceed six people shall be employed at a salary of $25,000. They are employing only four now. They might employ two more. As I stated before, they have dispensed with some of their high-priced attorneys and are getting along without their services. I think it is only fair to those who have charge of the administration of this work to let them alone. Why do we want to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery when the machinery is running smoothly, simply because gentlemen get up here and inveigh against an activity that was unpopular heretofore and rotten heretofore from core to rind? That rottenness has been reduced, constantly reduced. Why do you want to handicap the work? At the same time you are trying to handicap the work you are trying to prevent, if you please, the absolute wiping out of it. We on this side are trying to get rid of it and are trying to get rid of it in the best possible way. We had better sell an uncrippled operation than a crippled operation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It has been stated here this morning that there is nothing in the hearings to show the number of attorneys provided here, to wit, 73, or what salary they are receiving, and that there is nothing by which we can arrive at the lump sum of $450,000. I was wondering how you arrived at that figure if that is true.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We do not fix any definite sum. The amount that the gentleman refers to is the amount that we would pay these men until the end of the year. If they were employed until the end of the year, it will involve that expenditure. If they are not employed until the end of the year, the amount will be reduced.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] says there is nothing in the hearings to show——

Mr. KINCHELOE. I said a statement was made to that effect. I do not know.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has read the wrong hearings. He read the hearings of last year instead of the hearings of this year.

There are over a thousand cases pending, if you please, in the various courts of the United States, some in the smaller courts, and some in the Supreme Court of the United States. The fact is there are 1,202 cases pending, and they involve in amount $118,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Where is that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the hearings.

Mr. BUTLER. How many cases did the gentleman say are pending?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On November 1, 1922, there were 1,028 cases pending in the law courts of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a question or two?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman very much. Let me say in passing that of all the men in the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] I know as very careful men and economists, and when they differ, when I am tempted to lose confidence in both of you, there is something of a flare-up. How many cases are there pending?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. One thousand and twenty-eight.

Mr. BUTLER. Those cases will not be disposed of by July next? They can not be, of course?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I expect that most of those cases will not be disposed of, because of the fact that these are litigated cases. These cases, however, will be disposed of eventually if they are not handicapped.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Shipping Board has already settled claims amounting to more than $79,000,000 for $18,000,000 in cash and kind; about $8,000,000 in cash and $9,000,000 plus in kind. There are $57,000,000 of claims yet pending, which they expect to settle before the 1st of June. If they succeed in doing that, there will, of course, be no necessity for keeping the men who are settling these claims and they will go out automatically; but we can not tell whether it is going to take this many dollars or that many dollars. If the gentleman had some scheme whereby he could figure out, or if we could figure out, how many dollars it is going to take, that would be a different matter; but simply to arbitrarily cut this pay roll in two without any rhyme or reason is unfair and should not be authorized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I made the statement that there was nothing in the hearings to show the number of attorneys and their salaries.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to the number of cases pending, shown in a little table at the bottom of page 322. That shows the number of cases pending and the amounts involved.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It does not contradict the statement I made. But I want to ask the gentleman, is it not a fact that more than half the attorneys down there are employed in the settlement of these claims?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, no.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then what do they do?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will tell you what they are doing. One of the greatest troubles we have had, and that I tried to make plain a year ago, was in the lack of attorneys experienced in the prosecution and settling of these admiralty cases. There are a great many of these cases, involving a very large amount of money.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How many admiralty cases are there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that was shown in the last year's hearings. I do not know that they are segregated here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is nothing here to show.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; but I will say to the gentleman that they comprise more than half of the litigated cases, and these attorneys have to go up against the best attorneys in the United States. They tell me that admiralty attorneys are the highest paid attorneys in the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It does not import anything to tell us that there are 1,000 cases pending. The dockets of many of the United States district courts show as many or more than 1,000 cases pending. The difficulty suggested by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is that we have no specific information, and we have been trying to get it for two or three years.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not believe the gentleman means that. If he will revert to the hearings that we had, to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] referred, those hearings show the number of admiralty cases, the number of common-law cases, and how they are divided.

Now, I will say to the gentleman that because of the shortage of time and because we are trying to expedite business here we did not encumber this record with facts that we thought were familiar to the Members of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may say it respectfully to my friend from Indiana, I think we ought to have the facts. I think that is important enough for this bill to go back so that the facts may be ascertained. It seems to me it is the most extraordinary thing I ever heard of that there are 73 attorneys employed in the transaction of business and that we hardly know what the business is.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman had some idea of the volume of this business, he would understand that these cases extend to every port in the United States and all over the world. These litigated cases are constantly arising, every time a boat puts into a port, with reference to some claim.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate what the gentleman says. I find in looking at this list that there are perhaps 8 or 10 admiralty lawyers employed, and their salaries are very low. I do not understand that. There are 40 assistant counsel. I would like to know what these gentlemen are engaged in doing. I am not having any dispute with my friend from Indiana, but the natural inquiry comes to me, as it will to the rest of us, as to what they are doing.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are engaged in trying these admiralty suits, 1,028 of them, scattered all over the coast cities of the United States. These admiralty cases naturally follow the coast towns and ports all around this country, clear from San Francisco to Boston, and all over Europe as well.

Mr. BUTLER. Will there be a reduction in these expenses this summer?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course there will be, and this administration has shown such splendid management of these affairs that we had better leave them to their own discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would not have undertaken to speak again except for the rather vicious statement that my friend from Indiana chose to make with reference to what he was pleased to term my lack of information on this subject. I admit that there are some things about it that I do not know and do not understand; but it developed in the course of the debate here that every statement I had made was borne out by the facts, and that the criticisms which I made were just. I referred to the limitation on page 35, which says that not more than six employees shall be paid $25,000 each, and that no one else shall be paid more than $11,000. I said I was unable to find anywhere else in the bill any limitation, and that I was unable to find in the bill any limitation whatever as to the total amount allowed for attorneys. So far as any limitation is concerned, a hundred lawyers might be employed. Contrary to the gentleman's statement, I have read the bill, but I do not find any limitation as to the total amount that may be paid for attorneys, and if any gentleman here can point out any such limitation, I would like to have him rise in his place and state it.

Again, I stated here that I was unable to find anything in the hearings this year with reference to the kind of work these lawyers were doing, as to the number of lawyers, and as to the salaries which they were being paid. I asked the gentleman from Indiana courteously for the information, and he said I ought to read the hearings of this year instead of the hearings of last year. I again ask him or anyone else to rise on the floor of the House and show where the hearings give that information. There is none. The little exhibit on page 322 shows the number of claims that are pending, but it does not give the information sought. That is all I have been able to find, and there is nothing in the index showing the information for which I have asked.

I always try to be frank and fair with the House. I have always tried to speak to the facts when I undertook to quote testimony about facts, and I resent any imputation like that which has been made by the gentleman here, especially when he stands in his place and fails to furnish the House the information. I want to say to him that I have the right to my free opinion, and I would like to see any man take it away from me.

I again make the assertion that there is absolutely nothing that I have been able to find in the hearings and nothing has been said here in the 40 minutes of discussion that shows what these attorneys are doing, but it has developed in the discussion that there are 73 on the pay roll. However, this was not published in the hearings. When we raised that question last year I had a similar amendment that I offered then. During the discussion upon that amendment they said, "Do not cut down the salaries now, for the most of these claims will be disposed of within one year and we will have the matter adjusted." Now it comes up this year. I will tell you why I want the limitation put on. We put a limitation on the amount of the salaries when they were paying $25,000 and $35,000—we put on a limit of $11,000. Thus we have the limitation as to the amount they can pay any one of the individuals, but we have no limitation as to the total amount that may be used for the purpose of employing attorneys. Surely this limitation, in view of the evidence we have here, should be placed on this measure. This is a time for economy and limitation on expenditures wherever possible. This is no time to take the bridle off and let the horse run wild.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make a statement to the gentleman from Indiana: That I hope if he reports the next bill he will be able to give us the information we are calling for, so that we will know what reductions can be made and know what are the services being performed by these men.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in a general way that I have always regarded these high salaries as inexcusable and unjustifiable extravagance and legislative profligacy. I do not believe for a moment that it is necessary to pay in the public service salaries of $25,000 or $35,000 per annum in order to secure an efficient and able attorney. I am not a lawyer, but I know the lawyers in this country, and many of them have admitted to me in confidence and with great modesty that they were good lawyers. [Laughter.] The country is full of them. Many of these men have been advanced from lower positions in this same bureau. I have no haunting fear that if we cut the salaries to $12,000 that any of them will resign, or at least certainly they will not all resign. I have wondered a good many times if these are the only good men that can be secured among the thousands and thousands of not only admittedly good lawyers but known to be good lawyers. This is a foolish precedent for us to establish now.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me inconceivably preposterous that the representatives of this great Government at the courts of Europe, at European capitals, are being paid $10,000 a year, that the able Mr. Reavis, a former Member of this House from Nebraska, than whom I think there has been no abler attorney in this House at any time since I have been here, shall be working efficiently, as it is said he is by every Member of this House, for $10,000 a year in the Department of Justice, and we are here voting salaries of $25,000 to attorneys for the Shipping Board. I know the spell that the chairman of the committee casts over the minds of the Members of this House, like the great Brougham of England, who spoke so convincingly that when he had finished stopped as if he had yet in reserve a great reserve of argument to influence his hearers by magic of the mind.

There is one issue before the American people, and that is economy. The wonderful, appealing, smooth, persuasive voice of the able chairman does not extend to the whole country, and they are not impressed as are the Members of the House. The burning issue before the American people is economy. [Applause.] Economy through retrenchment, which is recommended by the President of the United States. Let us work along these lines.

Gentlemen, I read a story many years ago—and this is the first one I have told in the House. It was in the days when the high god spoke to his prophets face to face, and one old prophet had become discouraged; he thought he was the only righteous man left and that all the others had fled from the presence of the king, but he was informed that he was badly mistaken, that there were yet 7,000 left.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Gentlemen, we have set the example, and it seems to be easy to follow under the magic influence of the committee. I can think of no more tremendous power that has ever been exerted upon the House than the influence of this great committee reporting such a bill, unless it may be the power and influence of the department, which has first been exercised upon the committee in order to justify the report.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Indiana referred to the work that has been done. Yes; that was done by the Claims Commission. During the period they served they settled $79,000,000 worth of claims for something over $8,000,000, and those settlements were accepted by the claimants. But in the face of that the Shipping Board entered an order, a copy of which I have, by which they discontinued this Claims Commission, effective January 1 last, and that order stated that it was done for the reason, the basis of the discontinuance was the fact, that the work of the commission in settling these claims had been practically completed. It was explained by the gentleman from Indiana that the reason of the discontinuance of the Claims Commission was that all the controverted questions had been settled and that they had reached the place where the remaining claims could be quickly settled. This bill itself proceeds on the theory that all claims will be settled before July 1 next, because it provides for a return to the Treasury of the balance of the $50,000,000 appropriated for the payment of claims which remains unexpended and uncommitted on the 1st day of next July, and the chairman of the subcommittee explained that the reason for this was that the claims would be disposed of by then. Appropriations are made for the current fiscal year to cover these attorneys and all of their expenses up until July 1. That being true, tell me what is the necessity for continuing them in the appropriation for the next fiscal year, after these claims will all have been settled? [Applause.] Furthermore, the chairman of the Shipping Board stated at the hearings on the ship subsidy bill that when these claims were settled, which would probably be done, he said, within a year, and that statement was made last April, they would be able to cut off a large expense, because it would cut off the attorneys assigned to this work and also the large number of auditors and experts and assistants who were engaged in that work. They come along now and make the same appropriation of $50,000,000, a lump-sum appropriation, for the next fiscal year, without taking any of those things into consideration. As a matter of fact, the expenses of the Shipping Board, all expenses and losses and everything, for the first 11 months of 1922 were less than $31,000,000. On that basis, assuming that there will be no economy and no cutting down of expense for the next year, an appropriation of $35,000,000 will be ample. Why are they asking for this appropriation if they do not intend to keep those officers in power? As was brought out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], of these seventy-odd lawyers only eight or ten are admiralty lawyers or engaged in the disposition of admiralty suits. The gentleman from Indiana referred to cases pending in the different United States district courts. It is the official duty of the various district attorneys in those different courts to represent and protect and look after the interest of the Government in all suits to which the Government is a party. There is absolutely no excuse for continuing this large force of attorneys and for continuing the large appropriation that is carried. [Applause.]

My colleague from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] calls attention to the statement of Chairman Lasker as reported in the hearings, as follows:

> We established, as you gentlemen know, a claims commission, of which Judge Walter D. Meals, of Cleveland, was the head. That commission will cease to function after the 31st day of this month. The commission has done invaluable work in establishing principles of settlement. The most difficult thing in making a settlement is to get a series of principles established that will be the basis of all settlements. After that it becomes a matter of accountancy and expert knowledge to apply those principles. The claims commission has heard every class of cases possible and it has established all principles.

I respectfully submit that if we are to economize, if we are to stop this enormous Shipping Board expense, the proper way to do it is to cut out these high-priced, useless officials and employees and quit charging up that waste and extravagance to an alleged loss in the operation of ships. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] is speaking about the wasteful extravagance of this Shipping Board. If he would simply hark back to the time when he was defending the wasteful extravagance of another Shipping Board, I think he would be ashamed to offer himself as an apologist at this time.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not. The trouble about this amendment is that there is no rhyme or reason to it. It will just arbitrarily cut this expense. When these accounts are settled about which this gentleman is talking in approbation and against which he fought a year ago these men will go out, but we have 1,028 claims pending in admiralty and civil law courts all over the United States, and yet these gentlemen, without any investigation, are offering this arbitrary amendment in order to cripple this thing. It ought not to be done.

I move that debate upon this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and on a division (because the Chair was in doubt) there were—ayes 41, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the funds appropriated or made available in this act for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, publication, or distribution of any newspapers, magazines, journals, or other periodicals, or for services in connection therewith, not including, however, the preparation and printing of documents and reports authorized and required to be issued by law.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 34, line 24, after the word "law," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any propaganda, arguments, or statements in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation, and no official or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall, during office hours, engage in such work, unless it be solely for the preparation of statements to be presented to a congressional committee or in response to requests from Members of Congress."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman want to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think it is necessary to be heard upon it. It is not a limitation. It is legislation upon an appropriation bill and is not warranted by any of the exceptions.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, at least the first portion of this paragraph is in accord with similar amendments that have been heretofore adopted, and it is clearly a limitation. I do not think there can be any question about that. Furthermore, if the Chair will look at the paragraph after which this amendment is offered he will notice that it is a limitation along the same line. The amendment is simply supplemental to the paragraph which it follows. The merchant marine act of 1920 specifically provides that the members of the Shipping Board shall devote all of their time to their official duties.

With regard to the latter part of the proposed amendment, it is likewise a limitation, because it undertakes to provide against employees of the Shipping Board who are receiving salaries from the Government devoting their time during office hours to unofficial matters instead of official matters, which will necessitate the employment of a larger number of employees than would be the case if they devoted all of their time to official matters. I think the general law provides or implies that all Government employees during office hours shall devote their time to the dispatch of official business, and the merchant marine act of 1920 expressly provides that members of the Shipping Board shall do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under the decision long ago made by Mr. Speaker CANNON, and which has been followed, a limitation can not contain legislation except in one case, and that is where it comes within the provision of the Holman rule in retrenching expenditures. This amendment—both paragraphs of the amendment—will retrench expenditures and clearly come within the provisions of the Holman rule. The first paragraph retrenches expenditures in that it provides that none of this money shall be wasted in propaganda. That is clearly a retrenchment in expenditures. It clearly brings it within the provisions of the Holman rule in that regard. The second paragraph retrenches expenditures, because it says that no employee of the Shipping Board shall waste his time on matters not connected with his duty under his employment. We have one man shown in the hearings who is paid $9,500 a year merely to attend committees of the House and Senate. That is a useless service. There may be other men who do not put in the time the law requires, and if by this amendment they do put in the time, it would be a retrenchment of expenditures provided in this bill; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness and in all sincerity that this amendment should not be ruled out on the point of order, because every part of it comes within the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language of the amendment is that—

No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any propaganda, arguments, or statements in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation; and no official or employee of the United States Shipping Board or United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall, during office hours, engage in such work unless it be solely for the preparation of statements to be presented to a congressional committee or in response to requests from Members of Congress.

Now, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee had been limited to the first proposition, namely: "No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any propaganda, arguments, or statements in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation," it would be clearly in order under the rule. But a limitation on an appropriation bill must be to the appropriation and not an affirmative limitation to an official function. Such affirmative limitations of official function are proposed in the second part of the amendment. A part being obnoxious to the rule, the whole amendment must be declared out of order by the Chair, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 24, after the word "law," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any propaganda, arguments, or statements in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, the last paragraph on page 34 in the bill provides that—

No part of the funds appropriated or made available in this act for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, publication, or distribution of any newspapers, magazines, journals, or other periodicals, etc.

However, that does not go far enough. That does not include one of the most extensive and one of the most expensive features of work along that line. The Shipping Board has been accustomed to having prepared and distributed numerous statements and documents of various sorts for the purpose of influencing legislation and for other reasons. The foregoing paragraph recognizes the fact in principle that it is not proper to do these things for any purpose, and I respectfully submit that it is not the function of any bureau or any department of this Government, but it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions for any one of them to undertake to bring a "back fire" upon Members of Congress in order to force through legislation or promote legislation or to prevent legislation in which they are interested. And I say that it is high time for the American Congress in unmistakable terms to give notice to all executive branches of this Government and various bureaus that they are not going to stand for any such thing, and are not going to make appropriations for the purpose of creating a sentiment and a propaganda to be brought to bear upon them in an effort to try to make them do this, that, or the other. It is wrong in principle; it is a wrong custom, not only in regard to the Shipping Board, but, of course, it applies equally to any other bureau or commission. Now, I want to show you how far it has gone with the Shipping Board. I hold in my hand a document of 306 pages, a multigraphed document, and it is expensively bound.

It costs much more than to have it printed, and I have a written memorandum furnished by an employee of the Shipping Board who is in a position to be familiar with the facts and who is entirely reliable, and he makes the statement that this document, which is simply propaganda and arguments in favor of a certain measure, was prepared in the Shipping Board and by officials and employees of the Shipping Board, and he makes the statement that over 217,000 of these documents were made in the Shipping Board and made out of material paid for by the Government and prepared and made up and distributed by officials in the Shipping Board who were receiving Government salaries. This was distributed throughout the country, to newspapers, business organizations, and what not, and at what expense I do not know, but it is in regard to the preparation and distribution of this document that this same official says that "our duplicating section was working on this issue for several weeks, holding up important work; some duplicating work in connection with the regular routine was laid up over three weeks. Mr. Lasker's orders were to give this pamphlet precedence over everything else."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman give us the page of the hearings from which he made that statement?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It is not in the hearings. I stated this is a memorandum furnished me by an employee in the Shipping Board.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A private letter?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; a private memorandum. I am not speaking from personal knowledge as to the number, but the information comes from a trustworthy source. Now, I want to tell you what else. That is not all. The Shipping Board has a bureau of information——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to this document to which I have referred, they have issued others of the same order. They have a Bureau of Information down there. Some of you will recall that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made a speech in which he read from a statement issued by the Bureau of Information of the Shipping Board in regard to a social function. He made a humorous speech upon it. Now they are continually issuing documents like this, which has on it the inscription: "Bureau of Information. Caution: Advance release. United States Shipping Board, Washington, D. C. Release afternoon newspapers, October 24, 1922. No. 565." That would indicate that they have issued 565 statements from this Bureau of Information.

Now, this particular document that I hold in my hand is in no sense a vehicle for the dissemination of official information.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has not the Shipping Board authority to issue reports when it deems it necessary in order to enlighten the people as to what they are accomplishing in the discharge of their official duties?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The Shipping Board has no authority to issue such documents as this to which I am referring. This is in no sense official, as is shown on its face. It is carrying and sending to the press, upon Shipping Board stationery and by Shipping Board officials, a speech that was made down here at the City Club of Washington by Senator George E. Chamberlain, of Oregon, at a luncheon, in which he discussed the merchant marine.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Are not the people entitled to know what Mr. Chamberlain, who is a member of the board, thinks on the subject?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; but the proper thing for the Members of this branch of the Government to do—the only decent thing for them to do—is, when they wish to express their views as to legislation, to appear before the legislative committee considering those matters and make their statements there, and when Members of Congress want to cross-examine them they can cross-examine them. But I say it is an improper function for them to send these things out all over the country, as they are doing, in order to try to bring pressure upon Members of Congress, and not try to convince Members of Congress by the arguments they can present at hearings.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It seemn to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we can get the benefit of the views of these men through the newspapers of the country it will be much more advantageous than trying to get them through belated reports or hearings before committees.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman has that idea of our form of government and the spirit of the Constitution, which creates three distinct branches of government and provides against the encroachment of one on the other, he has an idea radically different from mine. I think he is wrong. What would be the situation if every other bureau of the Government can of right devote all their time trying to get through legislation that will aid them and help them to carry out their views, and make soft jobs for them, and confer upon them the authority to disburse Government money? I say it is no proper function, and I say that this amendment ought to be adopted. It has been adopted in regard to other departments on other bills.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman knows that not one in a hundred thousand people read the reports of hearings before committees; and if these reports can be disseminated through the press the people will be better informed.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But they have no right, at public expense, at the expense of the people, to spend that money in distributing partisan views on one side or the other of any proposed legislation. That is my view about it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to state that I have just obtained from Mr. Lissner information that 1,000 copies of that document are all that were made by the Shipping Board, instead of 217,000 copies, as the gentleman stated.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not concede the correctness of that statement, because Mr. Lissner has made statements before the committee that I know are inaccurate. I have seen him perform before.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman from Tennessee, I will state that he made the statement on the floor here that 217,000 copies of this study of shipping conditions were published by the Shipping Board.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I said that I had a memorandum furnished by an employee of the Shipping Board in which he stated that that was the fact. He was in the section that issued it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; and the gentleman puts that out without any attempt to confirm or verify it on his part. The multigraph copies were gotten up by the Shipping Board after I had seen the first copy of it and were sent to each Member of Congress. Those multigraph copies were gotten up for that special purpose, so that each Member of Congress could have a copy of it for study.

That took 500 copies right away, as the gentleman knows, to cover the membership of Congress. Now the gentleman comes in and makes a wild statement, that for three weeks the multigraph section of the Shipping Board were at work publishing a huge book like that, 217,000 copies, without going down to the board and getting confirmation of that statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman contend that that immense volume of more than 300 pages, whether a thousand copies or 217,000 copies were printed or not, should be printed out of Government money?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe it is a good thing that each Member of Congress should have a copy of that study of the shipping situation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to know if the gentleman believes that the money of the taxpayers should be used in that way to advocate partisan legislation?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not believe it is advocating partisan legislation. It is a study prepared by men engaged in the shipping business, on shipping matters, and I believe it is proper that Members of Congress should be furnished with that information.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The gentleman wants to know why I did not seek further information. The gentleman knows and the printed hearings will show that at the hearings I repeatedly asked, and other members of the committee asked, the Shipping Board to furnish an itemized statement of the disbursements of that $1,715,000 advertising fund which they have this year, and that they have never furnished that information.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman did not ask me for the information, and I am not responsible for what the Shipping Board did or did not give.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I tried to get the information and could not.

Mr. EDMONDS. You could very easily have confirmed the fact whether 217,000 of these copies were published, and would have found out that they were not published, without making the statement as a matter of information on the floor.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not believe I could have got any accurate information, and for my part I do not believe the statement Lissner made to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would believe my informant any time before I would Lissner.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I have never held a brief for the Shipping Board. When I came to Congress I was told that there was bad management. I looked into their record to such an extent that I concluded there had been bad management, and I have voted against all previous appropriations for the Shipping Board. I think, however, that Members of Congress ought to be fair, and my attention was called to that this morning when my good friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] offered his amendment to limit the number of attorneys that they should have the right to employ.

Mr. Lasker has made an effective showing in the administration of the affairs of the Shipping Board. He has reduced the overhead expense and reduced the drain on the Federal Treasury, and he is entitled to credit from the Congress for that. If it takes a large number of attorneys to attend to that work, he should not be hampered in doing it.

I have been unable to agree with Mr. Lasker on the question of ship subsidy. I must say, however, that I have been treated as a gentleman. I do not know where the Members are who have been punished because their views were adverse to those of Mr. Lasker. Certainly no man on this floor took any more positive stand against Mr. Lasker on the subject of the ship subsidy than I did, and I have not received any punishment, nor have I heard of anyone else who has. I am not going to complain of the fact that he tried to put the facts before me. I welcomed that publication. It was based on that publication that I became more sure of my ground in casting my vote against the ship subsidy; but I do not want to be a party to-day to reflecting upon a Government official who has made good. There was not a department of this Government that was worse managed under Democratic rule and in which there was a more unwarranted waste of the people's money than the Shipping Board; and if Mr. Lasker has come here, as I believe he has, at a sacrifice to himself, at a salary wholly inadequate as compared with his earning capacity, and has saved this Government millions of dollars in the management of that Shipping Board, I for one want to go on record as complimenting him for it and not as slurring him.

Another thing: I would not like the precedent of adopting this amendment. I believe that the people of this country have a right to know through the executive departments of the Government what is going on in the Government. I do not know of any money that is expended out of our appropriations that is used to better effect than that.

I would hate to have this Congress put that kind of a limitation in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and if it is good for one it would be good for another. I do not think the average Congressman need have any fear of being influenced by having the facts presented to him; and as long as they do present facts on it, we had better act upon those facts. If I vote wrong on the matter of the ship subsidy and there are facts in the possession of the Shipping Board to convince my constituency that I do, they are welcome to present those facts. I made up my mind how to cast my vote after a hard and arduous study of the very document that is being criticized here to-day. I do not think this amendment ought to be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman is very able and very eloquent——

Mr. TINCHER. I yield for a question.

Mr. SEARS. Of course the gentleman acknowledges that?

Mr. TINCHER. I hope there is no question about that.

Mr. SEARS. We listen to the gentleman's speeches with a great deal of pleasure, but he pays to send them out to his constituents, does he not?

Mr. TINCHER. I have never sent out but one speech, and that was in answer to a statement which in its inaccuracy was comparable to the statement made here to-day that there were 217,000 of those documents printed at Government expense. To answer just such a statement as that emanating from that side of the aisle I once paid out $30.41 for one speech.

Mr. SEARS. Of course, punishing the people to that amount for the sending out of a speech would be a sufficient punishment, but the gentleman paid for his own speech, and the point I am making is that we, as Members of Congress elected by great constituencies, pay for our own speeches. The question I wish to ask the gentleman is, Does he think each department of the Government ought to send out as Government literature under a frank the speech of any member of that department made at a dinner or luncheon?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not understand that there has been any abuse in sending out any speeches, and I think perhaps it would be just as fair to let the executive departments of the Government express their views to the people as it is to let Members of Congress do it. At least, I am not afraid of anything that they may send out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have it reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 34, line 24, after the word "law," insert a new paragraph as follows:

"No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any propaganda, arguments, or statements in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 40, noes 64.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 34, line 21, after the word "periodicals," insert "or of any documents or statements"——

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. So that it will read——

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the funds appropriated or made available in this act for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, publication, or distribution of any newspapers, magazines, journals, or other periodicals, or of any documents or statements, or for services in connection therewith, not including, however, the preparation and printing of documents and reports authorized and required to be issued by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 59.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 34, line 5, after the word "ships," insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That in no event shall more than $350,000 of the sum appropriated by this act be used to pay the compensation of attorneys, regular or special, for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a legitimate amendment, and I offer it for the specific purpose of placing a limitation on the amount that can be expended, and I call attention to the excuses that were offered by the gentleman in charge of this bill for voting down the amendment I offered before, which was a similar limitation. He said that we offered a specific limitation as to the amount without showing that that was all that was needed. That is a remarkable statement. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the chairman of the committee, who has the laboring oar, in offering an appropriation to show that it is necessary to have the amount that is appropriated. Now, if there are no showings in the hearings and no evidence offered on the floor to justify unlimited appropriation for attorneys, why should not there be a limitation of $350,000, or even $200,000? In other words, the chairman of the committee ought to furnish the information justifying any proposed appropriation.

When I said I could not find anything in the hearings to justify such an appropriation the gentleman chided me and upbraided me by stating that I had not read the hearings. I want to say that that is a poor way to furnish information. I asked him for the page, and he declined to give it; he declined to give the information. That is only another evidence of the mistake that was made when this House put all the power to make appropriations in the hands of one committee. You can not get any information from them.

Now, when several other Members of the House joined me in asking the gentleman what the attorneys were doing—in what kind of work they were engaged—the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], referred to the hearings of last year to find out—the very hearings that he upbraided me for referring to. This action on his part thoroughly justified me in going to last year's hearings as the only source of any real information on this subject. I again repeat there is not a word in the hearings this year to show what these attorneys are doing. The only thing is on page 322, an exhibit showing the number of claims that are pending. This committee was so busy that it could not go into the details of finding out what the attorneys were doing.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is interested in having the Shipping Board conducted on economical lines?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is familiar with business organizations. Does he believe that the executive or head responsible for results can function better or worse with the number of curtailments and restrictions that are placed around it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Well, if the position of the gentleman from Ohio is correct, why does not Congress say to these fellows: "Boys, there is the United States Treasury without any limit; go ahead and use any amount that your heart wishes"? That would be a great way to legislate.

Mr. BEGG. I will accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is the logic of the gentleman's position. I say that this Congress ought to know the purpose for which it makes appropriations, and I am not in favor of taking off the lid and leaving it to the judgment of the men who have hired $11,000 men at $25,000 or $35,000 a year.

Mr. BEGG. This Congress is in no way responsible for the head of that department; that is an executive function. The gentleman will grant that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; I will not grant it. The Congress is responsible for the appropriations made and the purposes for which they are used. Of course, they have to indulge the administrative part of it, but good legislation demands that Congress define the purposes to which any appropriation may be put.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLANTON. There is not one single word in the bill along the line of the limitation offered by the gentleman from Texas—not a word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Most assuredly not, and they could, if they wished, spend a million dollars a year for these attorneys.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It is quite remarkable how illogical gentlemen may be without seeming to realize it. We have been trying to put an end to the management and operation of a great fleet by the Government by passing a bill under which we hope to transfer these activities to private management and control, where it belongs. The gentleman from Texas who has just spoken, and most of the gentlemen on that side, are very much opposed to that action. They insist on keeping the Government in the shipping business; they insist that the Government shall continue to operate ships and settle claims and transact a great shipping business. And then they want to hog-tie the agents and agencies of the Government in their efforts to protect the public and the people. That is their position—as illogical as it is possible for one to take. The curious thing about it is that these gentlemen do not seem to appreciate how illogical their position is and how little appreciation of our responsibilities their position indicates.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Charman, I ask unanimous consent to speak 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to speak 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I feel like the importance of the controversy that is now going on over the pending proposition with reference to the taxing of shares of stocks in national banks justifies an apparent repetition of some things and frequent reference to it. Unfortunately, I was absent a few days ago when the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] discussed the question, and I only heard the latter part of his statement. I discussed it some at that time. Mr. MILLS says the question has been raised by two decisions of the courts, one the decision of the Supreme Court in the Richmond, Va., case, and the other the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in the Hanover Bank case. A reference to the remarks of the gentleman from New York disclosed that he has fallen into the error that a great many other men fall into, including a number of very able lawyers.

That error is that they contend that those two decisions constitute a new departure by the courts in their interpretation of the old, old statute that has been on the books for nearly 60 years. I want to reiterate, because that is back of the philosophy of the bill which the House passed, which was supported without regard to politics by the members of the Banking and Currency Committee who looked into the matter, the courts in all of the decisions that they have handed down, including the two decisions in question, that of the Richmond case and that of the Hanover case, have not varied one iota in their interpretation and application of the statute. The question comes from discriminations in the New York tax laws and in the tax laws of a few other States. To show you that there is no change in the Richmond case, I will read the quotation which the gentleman from New York himself put into the record, reading from the decision of the New York court. I read:

> By repeated decisions of this court, dealing with the restrictions here imposed, it has become established that while the words "moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" do not include shares of stock in corporations that do not enter into competition with the national banks, they do include something besides shares in banking corporations and others that enter into direct competition with those banks. They include not only moneys invested in private banking, properly so called, but investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness.

The gentleman stopped there in his interpretation, but the court went on—> such as normally enter into the business of banking.

In the opening statement of that decision the court says "by repeated decisions of this court." It is bottoming its decision in the case at bar upon a long line of decisions of the courts which it approves.

The gentleman from New York, on page 1540 of the RECORD of January 10, 1923, from which I just read that quotation, says:

> * * * I think it is utterly absurd, and worse than absurd, that such great and prosperous institutions as the First National Bank of the city of New York and the City National Bank of the city of New York should not be paying to-day a fair tax to the city of New York or the State of New York—

I agree with him in that. I think it is absurd and ridiculous, but he goes on and he gives a different reason—> because some smart people have come down here and have been smart enough to bamboozle Congress by saying that the State of New York has not sufficiently taxed private bankers and, therefore, Congress ought not to let them tax national banks. The situation in New York, I do not mind saying, in my judgment, is nothing short of scandalous.

I agree with him. It is scandalous; but the blame is not upon Congress. The suggestion that Congress has been bamboozled is unfounded. If anybody has been bamboozled, it is the legislature and the courts of his own State. By unanimous decision the court of his own State condemned the discriminatory and scandalous tax laws of the State of New York. The court of his own State unanimously condemned that absurdity and specifically referred to Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co. I have no interest in any controversy between the City National Bank and Morgan & Co., and I think all will agree that in a controversy of that kind I can be scrupulously fair, and I think my judgment may be more unbiased on the question than the judgment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

The contention I make is that the gentleman is wrong in blaming Congress. The absurdity, the unfairness, exists in the New York statutes. He says it is absurd because the City National Bank shall escape. Yes; it is. They are permitted to escape because the tax laws of the State of New York were deliberately drawn so that a heavier burden was placed upon the State incorporated banks and the national incorporated banks, including the City National Bank, than is placed on private bankers like Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co.

I say and I repeat what I said the other day. Let these gentlemen go to Albany, go to Madison, and to the other capitals, to their own State legislatures, and say to those legislatures, Amend your tax laws so that the burden of taxation on moneyed capital shall fall equally and uniformly, and nondiscriminately on every group of individuals, whether they be incorporated or private bankers. If they will do that, they will run counter neither to the statute that Congress has enacted nor to the decisions—the long line of decisions—of the Supreme Court of the United States and the courts of the different States. I am very glad to see that they are beginning to awaken in the State of New York to the fact that the real effort to bamboozle is on the other side. They are trying to prevent the legislature in New York from correcting this. The shrewdest legislative agent that any group ever had is busy in New York trying to make it appear that the blame is on Congress, and I notice in this morning's New York World an editorial that shows that they are beginning to realize that the blame is not on Congress, but that the proper place to go is to Albany.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. If the Legislature of the State of New York had followed the provisions of the Federal statute, there would not have been any trouble.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly not; absolutely none. In other words, the Federal statutes grew out of the escape of banks from taxation a long time ago under the very plan they advocate. So Congress came along and put a nondiscriminatory limit on that and simply said this much, You can tax national banks that are instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government will not shield them, but when you do it you must not discriminate, you must not put a higher tax burden on those national banks than you do on J. P. Morgan & Co. I want now to read the editorial to which I referred, which tersely states the situation:

CONGRESS AND THE BANK-TAX MUDDLE.

We do not know why Representative OGDEN MILLS and other complainants should be taking the bank-tax troubles of this State to Washington. The place for them to go to is Albany.

Congress can not well do better than it has done under a law passed nearly 60 years ago. This law permits the States to tax national-bank shares as personal property to the owner, but the rate of tax must not be higher than on other banking capital. So this State for years has had a tax of 1 per cent on the book value of shares in all banks, national or State, and it has continued this tax after all other intangible personal property has been exempted from the old tax.

Then came the State income tax to make good the loss of revenue from prohibition's conversion of the excise taxes into profits for bootleggers, and this is the cause of the whole mischief. The 1 per cent tax on bank shares was continued, and income from the shares was taxed additionally. But private or unincorporated banks are taxed on income alone, and not over 3 per cent, which is, of course, a very much lower tax than 1 per cent on the capitalized value of income. This is a clear discrimination in favor of some moneyed or banking capital against that of the national banks in New York State. Those banks object, and why should they not? And they have won in the recent decision of the Court of Appeals.

What would Mr. MILLS and the others have Congress do? Validate the discrimination? Congress should not and never will do it, and if it did the Supreme Court would have something to say. The thing to do is to end the discrimination, and that is a job for Albany, not Washington. Congress can pertinently be appealed to on this score for such a liberalization of the Volstead law as will restore to this and other States similarly situated some part at least of their old excise revenues. But how otherwise?

How can they reach it, they ask? They say it is impossible to tax intangible property at a high rate. I grant you that experience has shown that you have to do the unfair thing, morally, but the wise thing from the standpoint of expediency, namely, fix a lower intangible tax rate in order to get the revenue. But because the problem is difficult does not mean it can not be solved by proper State tax laws. The present tax laws of New York and some other States, and the proposal of the gentleman from New York and those who oppose the House bill, exempt from taxation an enormous amount of capital. Let the State of New York and its cities go to Albany for relief from this tax-exemption scandal instead of urging Congress to approve her law, which her court condemns and by which the exemption exists at the expense of national banks and the other taxpayers who are not favored and exempted, as are her private bankers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000 except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each and two at not to exceed $20,000 each.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Kansas: Page 35, line 11, strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert "$12,000," and in line 12 strike out "$20,000" and insert "$11,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, any argument I might present in support of this amendment would be a résumé of my statement a few minutes ago in discussing the Jones amendment, for my remarks, gentlemen of the committee at that time will remember, were directed to this subject. Now, Mr. Chairman, I only want to say this in addition to what I said, that I have never believed, do not now, that there was ever any excuse or justification or added efficiency in the administration of this bureau because we paid those extravagant salaries. Gentlemen will note that here on the seats are the able lawyers of this House and of this country, and back at home are the mates to those men. They might have been as good as their successful competitors, and I have observed, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, that there are groups and squads and regiments and armies of men ready to sacrifice themselves in the public service, and I have wondered why it might not apply just as appropriately to the gentlemen who are prosecuting the cases for this Government under the direction of the Shipping Board as well as in other lines of the public service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know that, as a matter of fact, these salaries do not relate to lawyers but relate to the operating department of the Shipping Board, shipping men?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. They are designated as attorneys.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not these men; these are not attorneys.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Then why do they have so much money?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. These are expert shipping men who would get two or three times as much salary on the outside.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not have this kind out in Kansas.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. How many reductions have been made from this year's salaries?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They provide for six and we have four.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. How many have offered to resign and——

Mr. STAFFORD. Nobody ever offers to resign when attached to the Government pay roll.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I have heard it so stated and I admit I am inclined to agree. I believe that there are many self-sacrificing men who for a salary of $12,000 would contribute a few thousand dollars worth of sacrifice in addition thereto to the $12,000 to serve their country. It has always been so. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My recollection is that these figures were reduced from $35,000 a couple of years ago to $25,000, and I will say to the gentleman that these men constitute the operating staff of the Shipping Board, who are working with the chairman for the purpose of establishing this business, and I know that they are not any more anxious than the chairman of the Shipping Board is to stay, but they have undertaken the work of attempting to establish and reorganize the Shipping Board business, and they will continue trying to do so for a while longer. I simply rose to make certain that my friend understood that these salaries are not for lawyers.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Well, I am pleased to have the information. Now, I want to say to the gentleman and to the members of this committee that proceeding under the Constitution for more than 133 years we have not paid to the heads of the departments, we have not paid to Members of Congress, to United States Senators, to the representatives of this Government in foreign countries, its ambassadors, with a few possible exceptions, such salaries. The example is corrupting, it is a dangerous proceeding, and it is not justifiable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I would like to proceed for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I fear this amendment will not carry. I recognize the soporific influence of the chairman over the committee. I want to say to you gentlemen that the amendment is right and ought to prevail, and it is in line with our previous ideas of economy and the people will approve it.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, of course when those on the Republican side cry for a vote when we are trying to effect economy we should heed their call, because I have found during the past eight years the man who makes a fight for economy is simply wearing out his life. We talk economy on the stump. We talk that when we are trying to get votes, but when we vote here the past is too oft forgotten. Now, my good friend from Illinois says these are executive officers, and therefore they must get $25,000 a year. If I am correctly informed, Mr. Lasker only gets $12,000 a year, and therefore he is bossing the man who is getting $25,000 a year, and saying to the man who is getting $25,000 a year not to work to-day or to work to-morrow.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That happens to be correct. Mr. Lasker holds what is considered a somewhat political office, like the gentleman and myself, being appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. But these men are business men taken from shipping work and the shipping industry. That is the difference.

Mr. SEARS. The only difference is that Mr. Lasker holds an office somewhat similar to ours.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And I think there is some honor in our position.

Mr. SEARS. He is confirmed by the Senate, and the man who gets $25,000 a year is appointed by Mr. Lasker, who was never elected by anybody, and confirmed by the seven commissioners—that is the only difference—while we must be elected by the people.

Now, I think it is unfair for the gentlemen on the Republican side to make it appear that we are fighting the Shipping Board or to make it appear that we are trying to fight Mr. Lasker. I made the same fight against the other members of the board.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Does the gentleman think that this side of the House is trying to make it appear that you are fighting the Shipping Board?

Mr. SEARS. The leader stated that our position was illogical, because we were trying to save some money for the people. If you will simply turn your minds back a few months, when the votes were counted, you will find that the American people are waking up to the fact that those who are making the fight for economy are not so illogical as you would make it appear.

I notice that my good friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] will place in the RECORD the names of the attorneys. I would like for the gentleman from Indiana also to place in the RECORD the State and city and former employment of each of these, in order that we may find out what they did before they took over this wonderful work that they are doing for the people. We are not fighting the Shipping Board as individuals. I will again state we are only fighting for economy.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. What are you doing?

Mr. SEARS. What are we doing? We are doing what the gentleman from Indiana once did. We are doing what the Republican Party once did. It is true that we may be in the minority now, but we made the same fight when we were in the majority that we are now making, although we are now in the minority. My good friend from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON] asked why I should make the statement that I just made. I can answer that by saying that my good friend from Kansas [Mr. WHITE], though we differ politically, says he knows his motion will not carry. Simply watch the votes when they stand up, and you will see why I make the statement. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate now close on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the debate now close on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 25, line 11, at the beginning of the line, strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "four."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the committee having just voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE], I think the House should be willing to accept the one I have offered, in view of the fact that the chairman of the board in his hearing on this bill stated that there were only four men employed at $25,000 each. On page 290 of the hearings the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] asked Mr. Lasker this question:

How many men have you now employed receiving $25,000 or in excess of $25,000?

Mr. Lasker said:

We have four men at $25,000 and three men at $20,000.

Now, in offering this amendment I do not wish to be understood as affirming that there ought to be as many as four employed at $25,000 each, but I do say that at a time when it is admitted that the Emergency Fleet Corporation is operating at a monthly deficit that runs into millions of dollars it would be bad policy for Congress to authorize six men at $25,000 each when only four are now being paid that salary.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a suggestion?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman's amendment is agreed to they will have to discharge one of the men at $20,000. One of the men authorized to receive not more than $25,000 is employed now at $20,000, which shows that they are trying to comply with the spirit of the law.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You are compelling them to discharge that man at $20,000.

Mr. BLACK. I have observed the limitations that are in the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But they have three men at $20,000 now.

Mr. BLACK. They have one too many, according to their own admission.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No. That is one of the men authorized at not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, the bill now contains this language: "Two, not to exceed $20,000." I have not disturbed that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All right.

Mr. BLACK. "Six at not to exceed $25,000."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Each one of those will stay at $25,000. They are entitled to six of them.

Mr. BLACK. I do not admit that they are entitled to six. The position I take is that we should provide for four, the chairman of the board having said that only four men are now employed at $25,000 each. If the gentleman wants to accomplish the thing he is now contending for, let him offer an amendment increasing two at $20,000 to three at $20,000, instead of trying to come in here and authorize six at $25,000, when the chairman of the board himself says that only four are employed at that rate at present.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The language reads "six at not to exceed $25,000." I suppose they could make that $5,000 if they pleased.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is intelligent enough to know that, and the gentleman also is intelligent enough to know that the purpose of this language is to permit the employment of six men at $25,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to add to my amendment, so as to strike out "two" on line 11 and insert "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 25, line 11, at the beginning of the line, strike out "six" and insert "four," and in the same line strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. BLACK. If my amendment is adopted it will restrict the Shipping Board to the employment of four men at $25,000 instead of six as the bill would now permit. It seems to me that even faint regard for economy should compel its adoption.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this amendment should not be adopted. I do not know why the gentlemen on the other side, who can find no fault with the administration of the Shipping Board during the last 12 months, want to be throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery. I do not see why they should try to cripple this establishment. They ought to be trying to hold up the hands and encourage the man who has done more for it in the 12 months he has been there than was done during its entire previous existence under the old régime.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact that the hearings themselves disclose that only four men are employed at $25,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They do, and it is a compliment to the man who is at the head of this thing. He might have had six men there instead of four at $25,000 each, but in order to save money to the Treasury of the United States and because he felt that the conditions warranted it he has reduced the number to four. He has also reduced many others. You might make your amendment go further. An emergency might arise during the winding up of this thing when it might be necessary to employ for a brief period a $25,000-a-year man. Now, let me tell you something——

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not yield. Mr. Lasker has four men working in his private business to-day to whom he pays more than $100,000 a year. The United States Government is engaged in a private business, having to compete with the greatest business in the world, with the captains of industry of the world at the head of these great shipping industries. Now, as long as we are going to continue in private business, we must provide men of at least ordinary ability to compete with those captains of industry who are operating these independent concerns. It seems that it is hard for us to differentiate. I am opposed to the Government engaging in any kind of private business, but we are in it, and as long as we are in it we ought to try to conform ourselves as nearly as possible to the policies and practices of men engaged in private business. Let us get out of it, and let us encourage the man who is doing something to try to get us out of it, rather than try to discourage him. I think the conduct of this Shipping Board during the last 12 months is the best possible recommendation of its efficiency, for never in the experience of the gentleman from Texas or myself has there ever been an activity approaching this in importance or volume. You have never found a single activity that has done more or half as much within its possibilities in saving money to the Treasury of the United States. Why handicap this man? If there had been something here to show that he had been abusing the privileges that we gave him a year ago there might be some reason for the handicap that you are trying to put upon him; but when you find that he has been conserving the interests of the Treasury and has not been using the privileges we gave him, let us at least give him the opportunity to do what may be necessary, so that in the event that something transpires in the winding up of this thing—I hope it will all be wound up within a year—they may have, if the opportunity requires, a $25,000 man to compete across the table in making contracts to sell this property. It is going to be a pretty important thing. Suppose the ship subsidy bill passes? It can not all be wound up in a day. It may pass, to the chagrin and disappointment of gentlemen upon the other side who would like to see the flag of the United States disappear from the seas of the earth. In the event that it does pass, there must be dickering and business transactions so that the United States may protect herself. Then it will need the best ability, the best experience, representing the best interests of the United States and the people of the United States to see that we are protected, and possibly it will take $25,000-a-year men. I am speaking only of a possibility. It may never occur.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more. I wish to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman said two or three times that it was necessary to continue this, pending the winding up of this business. Has the committee made any inquiry as to when that will probably occur?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That will depend upon the action of the body at the other end of the Capitol and the action of this body on this side. If those who are desirous of maintaining the best traditions of the United States and its future welfare in establishing a merchant marine are successful, then it will be done within less than six months. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the sum appropriated in this act shall be used to pay any claims of the United States Navy Department against the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation arising prior to July 1, 1921, or to pay any final judgment rendered in any suit authorized by the act entitled "An act authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1920.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman if there is any provision in this bill for the payment of the Norwegian claims recently arbitrated?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not carried in this bill at all. There was a deficiency appropriation carrying that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In what bill is it carried?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is carried in a deficiency bill, as I remember.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a State Department matter.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thought it was a claim against the Shipping Board, and that it would have to be carried in this bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it was an independent claim growing out of a treaty, or the settlement was made pursuant to a treaty entered into by the State Department, for the settlement of these Norwegian claims, and the appropriation has already been made, as I remember, to carry it out.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It has already been made, has it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

For carrying out the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau and to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act approved August 9, 1921," including salaries and expenses of the central office at Washington, D. C., and regional offices and suboffices, and including salaries, stationery and minor office supplies, furniture, equipment and supplies, rentals and alterations, heat, light, and water, miscellaneous expenses, including telephones, telegrams, freight, express, law books, books of reference, periodicals, ambulance service, towel service, laundry service, repairs to equipment, storage, ice, taxi service, car fare, stamps and box rent, traveling and subsistence, salaries and expenses of employees engaged in field investigation, passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repairs, and operation of same, vehicles at a total cost of not exceeding $7,500 may be salaries and operating expenses of the Arlington Building and annex, including repairs and mechanical equipment, fuel, electric current, ice, ash removal, and miscellaneous items; and including the salaries and allowances, where applicable, wages, travel, and subsistence of civil employees at the United States veterans' hospitals, supply depots, dispensaries, clinics, and vocational schools, $49,984,063: Provided, That on or before the 15th day of each month when Congress is in session, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau shall transmit to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a statement giving in detail (a) the total number of positions at a rate of $2,000 or more per annum, (b) the rate of salary attached to each position, (c) the number of positions at each rate in the central office and in each district office or suboffice, and (d) a brief statement of the duties of each position.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: On page 37, line 13, strike out the words "vehicles at," and in line 14, strike out the words "a total cost of not exceeding $7,500 may be."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This provision was carried under the necessities of last year's bill and crept into this bill. There is no necessity for it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask the indulgence of the committee for about 10 minutes, or perhaps more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sure every Member of the House is anxious to know something about the hospitalization situation throughout the country. During the time allotted to me I will endeavor to give you such information as I can on that subject. Since 1919 the Congress has appropriated approximately $54,000,000 for the construction of hospitals and the provision of additional facilities for the care of wounded and disabled veterans of the late war. In 1921, $18,600,000 of that $54,000,000 was appropriated to the Treasury Department, and the allotment of the appropriation was made upon the advice of a medical consultant board, who recommended the places and kinds of buildings to be erected. Later $17,000,000 was appropriated in a special act and placed at the disposal of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. I have been very much concerned to know from time to time how the work of building was progressing. During the hearings on this bill I interrogated Colonel Forbes, the director of the bureau, in respect to the progress that is being made under the two acts I have just described. It seems that even under the appropriation of $18,600,000 some of the buildings authorized have not been completed. Under the appropriation of $17,000,000 none of the buildings have been begun. The appropriation under the last act of $17,000,000 was made the 20th of April last. That makes nine months from that date until now. When Colonel Forbes was before the Committee on Appropriations requesting the appropriation he promised our committee that he would have all the buildings under the authority granted by the act finished in nine months from the time the bids were advertised. Nine months have elapsed and two of the buildings have been let. He promised then that the cost of a bed would be about $3,000. It is clear to those who know the facts that the cost will be very much higher than $3,000 a bed; in fact, it will run from $4,000 to a little over $5,000.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will let me make my statement first—I want to make a connected statement—I will then yield to him. I presume when the auxiliary buildings, such as the bakeries, the quarters for the officers and nurses, and other buildings are finished, that the cost will run up to $5,000 a bed. In answer to a question I asked as to when we could hope for the buildings to be placed at the disposal of the men for whom they were constructed, Colonel Forbes said it would be 300 days after the contract is let. Some have not been let, and I do not know when they will be. But the first one completed will not be completed in less than 300 days. We have, however, no serious embarrassment, because there are sufficient facilities to take care of the men even to-day.

I have had prepared by the Veterans' Bureau a statement showing the number of hospital beds, the number of patients, and the kind of patients, and I find the number of patients in the Government hospitals is 17,361, the number of patients in contract hospitals 7,075, the number in all the hospitals 24,936. The present number of Government beds in Government-owned hospitals is 24,759, coming within about 200 beds owned by the Government less than the number of patients in all the hospitals. The estimated number of Government beds remaining available February, 1924, is 20,503; new beds under the first and second Langley bills, when completed, 10,047; the total Government beds available February, 1924, 30,550, or 6,000 and something more than the total number of patients in the Government-owned and contract hospitals.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that exclusive of the authorizations made for the Veterans' Bureau hospital?

Mr. MADDEN. That is exclusive.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman said that Colonel Forbes said he would have the hospital erected in nine months. Did he state what was the cause of the delay?

Mr. MADDEN. He is making as rapid progress as he can in making the plans and selecting the sites, and he said no contractor will take a contract to put up a building under present labor conditions in less than 300 days after he takes the contract.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I want to say to the gentleman that at one of the hospitals at Livermore, Calif., the bids were opened two or three weeks ago and all were found to be beyond the estimate, and for that reason new bids had to be called for.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman's table that he has show the number of tubercular cases and psychiatric cases?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will put them all in. Now, I have the data of the new building for psychiatrics at Little Rock, Ark., with 270 beds. I will not go into that now, but it will be completed soon for the patients provided for under the first and second Langley bill.

There is an interesting situation in respect to vocational training. I think more than 400,000 men made application since the war and 229,000 have been passed as eligible for admission. The law limits the applications to December 16, 1922. All applications after that time fail. The number in training on January 1, 1923, was 97,035. The estimated number in training January, 1924, will be 82,000. The estimated number on January, 1925, will be 42,000. So it shows a very marked decrease. The average cost per trainee for tuition and supplies is $19.62, with allowance pay $108.70. That is, the total cost per pupil is $128.32 for vocational training per month. We have in this bill a limitation of $5,781,000 attached to the appropriation for hospitalization. This limitation restricts to that sum the amount to be used for the construction of officers and nurses' quarters, and so forth, in connection with hospitals under way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. We provide that of the appropriation of $48,683,000 for hospital care $5,780,000 shall not be used for the purchase of any ground, the construction of any new hospital building, or for the purchase of any building and ground for hospital purposes. The reason why we put this limitation upon the use of this money is that in his examination Colonel Forbes informed the Committee on Appropriations that he had the authority under the law to use any money appropriated for any purpose for the benefit of the Veterans' Bureau, whether it be for salaries or rent or what not, for the purchase of property, the establishment of new hospitals; and we thought the time had come when we should get the opinion of the Comptroller General of the United States as to whether or not any man in any department of the Government has the right to spend money appropriated for one purpose for another purpose. I asked Colonel Forbes if he thought he had the power to spend money appropriated for clerks for the purchase of hospital buildings, and he said he had. I asked him if he believed if we appropriated money for 20,000 clerks, and he used only 10,000 clerks, that he could use the balance of that money to buy buildings with, and he said he thought he could. I said, "If you can do that, then why do we appropriate at all; and if you have that power and I have the power to curtail it, I am going to do it"; and here we are with a limitation providing that the money appropriated for certain purposes in this bill can be used only for the purposes for which it is appropriated. There may be some opposition to that limitation, because I understand there are many requests made of Colonel Forbes to buy property not desirable, and there might be some influence brought to bear to permit this fund to be left free, without strings. I hope the House will agree with the Committee on Appropriations that there ought not to be any unlimited right to use funds appropriated for one purpose for any other purpose. It is bad business; it encourages extravagance; it encourages waste; and it may encourage corruption, we do not know; but if we think that we can avoid the suspicion of extravagance, the smell that goes up from corruption, by any limitation that we can place upon any expenditure in any appropriation bill, we would be criminally negligent if we did not do it; and I appeal to the House to sustain the Committee on Appropriations in the limitation which we have placed in this bill. The $5,781,000 is for a legitimate need—that is, for hospital extensions; but there are other items in this provision, and we have placed the limitation on the $5,781,000 because we do not want any more used than that which is set out. I have here a list of the purposes for which the $5,781,000 is to be used. It is for ordinary repairs and hospitals, for approach work, for new construction work which is necessary to build quarters for the doctors and nurses and attendants; and we have set out here the exact purposes for which the money can be used and the amount that can be used for each item in detail.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the matter which the gentleman has before him, he says that the $5,781,000 is necessary to make available hospital construction already undertaken and in part completed, but which can not be utilized to its full capacity because these details, kitchens, quarters, are not provided for the personnel.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. If the House would not mind, this is not voluminous; it might be well to incorporate it in my remarks, so that we can have the information in detail as to just what this money can be used for. It will be illuminating, and not only illuminating but it will be an evidence of our desire to say to the director and to anyone else who may be interested that this is the purpose for which we appropriate the money, and that we have put it in the RECORD with that end in view.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can the gentleman tell the committee whether it is contemplated by the Veterans' Bureau to extend the capacity of existing hospitals?

Mr. MADDEN. It is to extend the capacity to the extent of making quarters for the nurses and doctors and all that and giving the bed space now used to the patients.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does not the gentleman think it would be good business to extend the bed capacity of the hospitals?

Mr. MADDEN. We are doing that. For example, let me show one case. Here is a case at Palo Alto, Calif. Two hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars are appropriated there. Ordinary repairs, $25,000; approach work, $8,000; and then employees' quarters, 70 beds. That is the extension.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The reason I asked the gentleman is this: At Dawsonsprings hospital——

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, there is something in here for that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think it is one of the most magnificent institutions I have ever seen. It has a bed capacity of 500. It seems to me that it would be wise to double the bed capacity.

Mr. MADDEN. There is an item of $213,000 in this $5,781,000 for Dawsonsprings.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am talking about it as a matter of business judgment. The hospital is there, and I say one of the most magnificent I have ever seen. If they took some of the money and doubled the bed capacity, it would be better, I think, because all you have to do, with your overhead taken care of, is to build your bed units and then connect up the lighting and plumbing facilities.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have the capacity at Dawsonsprings, but the World War veterans will not go there.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. There are about 400 soldiers there now.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does know what he is talking about.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have recently come from there. That is characteristic of the information that used to be given when you were trying to defeat the bill, and especially by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I have thought the information contained in these documents of sufficient importance to submit the case to the House, so that everybody may be able to answer any question that may be asked. We have taken care of the Dawsonsprings hospital.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, I have no personal interest in the matter at all, except as a matter of economy, and of getting more beds.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize that; that is what this does.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Did not the last appropriation bill place at the discretion of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau $17,000,000 for building purposes?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Now, is there anything in the law that leaves with the Congress any direct responsibility for a failure to construct those buildings up to date?

Mr. MADDEN. No, sir. I think we have done everything in our power to do what should be done and get early action and have the facilities completed.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The delay is entirely chargeable to the departmental branch of the service in so far as there is any?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that under the hospital branch of the Veterans' Bureau better facilities are assigned to tuberculous patients than other kinds of patients——

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. And in some cases there is a shortage of hospital facilities for that kind of patients, and that shortage exists now and ought to be corrected at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. MADDEN. And every effort is being made to correct it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is it permissible to make additions to leased hospitals under the language of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman is certain about that?

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information. Do you have enough beds and suitable places for your mental and tuberculosis cases?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; when this program is completed; yes, indeed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The bill which was passed granting the Director of the Veterans' Bureau authority to engage in furnishing and constructing buildings to the total amount of $17,000,000 only authorized the making of contracts for that amount. Is there any law existing to-day where he may use that appropriation?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; we appropriated $12,000,000 and authorized $5,000,000, but that is not wanted for a year because he can not use it for 300 days.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is in the current appropriation bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So, up to July 1 he will have available $12,000,000 in money and an authorization for another $5,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but he will not need it because we are not up to that point.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. FESS. I desire to ask whether any information was given to the committee as to when we should reach the peak in the need for hospitalization?

Mr. MADDEN. We have reached the peak now. We have 24,000 men in the hospitals to-day. There were over 31,000, and we think it is because of the fact we are using dispensaries for the treatment of men who are employed outside and living at home which has taken the burden away from the hospitals which heretofore existed. And the further development of the dispensary system will continue to relieve the Government from the need of having beds in hospitals to a large extent.

Mr. FESS. So the facilities already authorized will be sufficient?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; we will have 10,000 beds to spare when we get it completed.

Mr. FESS. The Surgeon General made a statement to a committee about two years ago that it would be 1926 before we reached the peak.

Mr. MADDEN. We have reached it now because we have dropped from 31,000 to 24,000.

Mr. FESS. There is another question I am very much interested in, and that is we will reach the maximum vocation work very soon.

Mr. MADDEN. We have reached it. According to our estimate we have 97,000 now, and we expect a year from now to have only 82,000, and a year from that time only 42,000, so we have reached the maximum now.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman give the number of sick soldiers taken care of in Government hospitals and the number taken care of in contract hospitals? Will the gentleman tell us what kind of treatment they receive in contract hospitals and if they are asking the Government to take care of all of them?

Mr. MADDEN. The committee can not tell, but the information we have is that they are getting as good treatment in the contract hospitals as they are getting anywhere else, but we have no information; that is, direct information, and we have to take our information secondhand.

Mr. LAZARO. Is there any effort being made to have all of them taken care of in Government hospitals?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; just as fast as we get the buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one additional minute. I desire to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the question: The gentleman said in his judgment we had reached the peak and that soon he thought we would have 10,000 beds to spare; that would be the surplus?

Mr. MADDEN. That is, to spare, if we continue to have these contract hospitals.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not use the same contract hospitals if we have reached the peak, if we can care for them properly, and then we will not have them on our hands in a few years?

Mr. MADDEN. In the first place, the men were very hesitant about going into contract hospitals. That induced Congress to establish a policy of building Government-owned hospitals. These Government-owned hospitals have been appropriated for and the policy has been established by the Congress, the work is under way in accordance with that policy established, and the appropriations made, and we are powerless to change that.

Mr. BLANTON. But I can cite the gentleman to numerous service men and women in the contract hospital at San Angelo, Tex., and El Paso, Tex., both in the district of my colleague, Mr. HUDSPETH, out of my district, and in New Mexico, where splendid service is given in contract hospitals.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the contract hospitals are just as good, but there was a great deal of prejudice about them for a long time, and so Congress was induced to establish a different policy.

Mr. LAZARO. What is the difference in the cost of the treatment?

Mr. MADDEN. There is not much difference.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the statements in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert the statements referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the statements referred to:

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has stated the present situation in reference to the second so-called Langley bill, which authorized the expenditure of $17,000,000 for providing hospitalization facilities. It will be recalled that this bill was recommended and reported for passage by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The same committee reported and recommended the first so-called Langley bill, which is known as the act of March 4, 1921. This authorized an expenditure of $18,600,000 for hospitalization purposes.

I have thought that the Members of the House and perhaps the people of the country would be interested in knowing the present status of the expenditures authorized by this first Langley bill of March 4, 1921, and I therefore procured from the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Edward Clifford, who is in charge of the Supervising Architect's Office in the Treasury Department, a statement showing the projects, the allotments of money, the number of beds contemplated, the type of hospital, the contract time for completion, and the present condition with reference to the completion of the various establishments that were included in the expenditures under the authorization of the act of March 4, 1921, and I ask unanimous consent to insert that statement in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

JANUARY 10, 1923.

Hon. CARL R. CHINDBLOM,
United States House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In accordance with your request, I am sending you herewith memorandum showing hospital construction under the act of March 4, 1921, authorizing $18,600,000 for that purpose.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD CLIFFORD,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just at that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How does the matter of expedition in the construction of that group of buildings compare with the expedition under the $17,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that the statement shows that more than one-half of the projects are now completed; that 11 out of 19 projects are now completed; that the balance of them are more than 90 per cent complete, with the exception of the single project at Chelsea, N. Y., in the metropolitan district of New York, for which the contract was awarded October 23, 1922. That work was delayed because of the inability of the people interested in that section of the country to agree upon a location. These 11 projects which are already completed and which have been transferred to the Veterans' Bureau involve an expenditure of $8,431,799.17, and provide facilities for 3,248 patients. The entire appropriation has been used to the extent of $18,366,600.07, and provides for 6,207 patients, making an average cost of about $3,000 per bed.

There was in the House and in Committee of the Whole considerable discussion about the efficiency and the competency of the Supervising Architect's Office in the matter of erecting these hospital buildings, and largely on that account, as well as on account of the interest which exists with reference to the present hospital situation, I have taken the time of the House for these few minutes to show the situation and to have this statement inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the program for these various hospitals provide for employees and doctors?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The appropriation did not provide for the personnel, but it will pay for some of the equipment. You understand that all these buildings are erected by the Supervising Architect's Office and turned over, when completed, to the Veterans' Bureau for use and occupancy by them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the United States Veterans' Bureau, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $300,000.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, some two years ago I came before you pleading the merits of Fort Walla Walla as a desirable place for the establishment of a veterans' hospital.

During the preceding year I had repeatedly tried to secure the consent of the Secretary of War [Mr. Baker] for the use of these grounds and buildings for hospital purposes. Although they had not been used for military purposes for 11 years the Secretary steadfastly refused. Whereupon the matter was presented to the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. After thorough investigation and consideration that committee, at my request, wrote into their hospital bill of two years ago a provision for the utilization of this splendid site and buildings for hospital purposes.

To-day I present to you some wonderfully artistic photographs made by my friend and fellow townsman, Mr. John W. Langdon, banker, business man, artist, and philanthropist, of Walla Walla, Wash.

In these pictures [exhibiting] which Mr. Langdon has made especially for you you will see the medical officers' quarters, nurses' home, superintendent's home, and various brick buildings occupied by the patients. I invite your especial attention to the neat and attractive appearance of all buildings and to the numerous shade trees and flowers. In this picture you see a strip of woodland and a brook. The grounds comprise more than 600 acres, 60 acres of which is wooded and is being converted into a natural park for the patients. Six streams of living water flow through the tract, affording sufficient water for the irrigation of 150 acres of unusually fertile garden land at some later date.

The buildings are all located on a low ridge which lifts them above the surrounding country and affords an excellent view of the city of Walla Walla, a mile away, the orchards, the garden tracts, the wheat fields, and the valley skirted by the Blue Mountains, 10 miles away.

Mr. BLANTON. How many patients have we there now?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. We have 138 patients and capacity for 100 more. Medical officers who have been stationed at several other institutions tell me that in climate and general attractiveness that this Veterans' Hospital 85, at Walla Walla, surpasses all others with which they are familiar.

I have repeatedly visited every part of this institution; I have repeatedly talked with each and every patient; I have inspected the kitchens; I have eaten of the same food at the same table with the patients. The medical staff, the nurses, and all others who serve the patients, in my opinion, are fully competent.

The citizens, and especially the good women of Walla Walla, are making lawns, planting shrubs and flowers, and in every way possible are beautifying the grounds and adding to the attractiveness of the institution and the comfort and amusement of the patients.

As a physician of many years' experience, I have often stated that in my opinion if a patient can recover in any hospital, any place, he can recover in this institution.

But we can not understand why patients are maintained in private institutions in the thirteenth district when beds and every other facility await them here. When more accommodations are needed in the Northwest, the great expanse of grounds, the large heating plant already installed, the water system, fire protection, laundry facilities, walks, parks, roadways, and general overhead all mark this as the logical location for expansion.

Abundant grounds are also available for the establishment of a vocational training center. The climate and soil especially adapt it for the growing of all sorts of fruits, berries, and vegetables; for dairying, poultry, and bee culture. Shops and patients' quarters could be heated, lighted, watered, and provided with sewage facilities from the same systems now supplying the hospital. Every consideration of adaptability, desirability, and economy seem to warrant the training of ex-service men at this place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to place before the House a few observations just in the way of food for thought. I do not want to make any startling disclosures or even to criticize the committee who have this measure in charge. At the outset I want to state that the subcommittee, according to the record, gave only two days' hearings to the Veterans' Bureau. I think even the committee will agree that the Veterans' Bureau, spending something like $500,000,000 a year, is entitled to a little more consideration than two days. In fact, the Veterans' Bureau spends more money than the War or Navy Department. We have no committee in the House actually looking after the various items in this tremendous undertaking of affording veterans relief. Of course, we have the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but that committee is too busy. Its calendar is overcrowded, and it is unable to give any consideration to the workings of the Veterans' Bureau. I am sure no member of the committee will challenge that statement. They have not given one hour's consideration in the last year to the question of veterans' relief, and I think this is as good a time as any to present these facts to the Members of Congress, so that they will be able in the future to make up their minds as to the advisability and justice of having a new committee to handle all soldiers' relief legislation arising out of the World War. For example, let me ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he knows how much rent is being paid for the district office at Boston?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; we have the statement of the officer in charge of the Veterans' Bureau as to how much is being paid.

Mr. BRIGGS. How much is it?

Mr. FISH. I think if the House knew how much is being paid for rent in Boston the Members would agree that there is need for a committee to deal with the various ramifications of the Veterans' Bureau, including the contracts entered into for renting offices, hospitals, and schools.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are paying rent in Boston because we have no Government property there that is available. Some of the activities of the Veterans' Bureau, in New York especially, are conducted in Government buildings. We are using Government property where it is available, and where it is not available, in order that the veterans may not suffer in consequence, we are paying rent.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the amount the Government is paying for rent in Boston?

Mr. FISH. I can tell the gentleman, to save time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Boston is included in district No. 1, and the allowance for rentals there is $189,214.

Mr. FISH. I think the House would like to know what they are paying for the district office at Boston. The rent for those offices is $156,000 a year, with extras for lighting, and so forth, which are not down there.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is not objecting to our paying it, is he?

Mr. FISH. I am certainly objecting when you can get suitable offices for $9,000, and I understand that they are going to get them to-day. I am just pointing out that the subcommittee can not go into these items in two days of hearings.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say that we did it. We went into it two years ago, and in consequence of our going into it we made quite a saving in the city of New York. Their offices there were down in a portion of the city where rents were high, and this activity could be taken care of just as well on the outskirts.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but this rent in Boston has been going on for a number of years. I believe it has just been called to the attention of Colonel Forbes, and he has taken steps to get suitable quarters at about one-seventeenth of the rent that we have been paying. We have been paying this extra money right along for nothing. What I say here is not a criticism of Colonel Forbes, because I think he is doing as well as he can under the circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman leaves Boston, will he permit a question?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman asked about the rent in Boston. I wonder if the committee knows what that manager at Boston was doing when Director Forbes had to go up there and remove him.

Mr. FISH. That is past history. I wonder if the chairman of the subcommittee can tell me what is the necessity of paying $153,000 for the rent of the vocational school at Novo?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not think there is any necessity for it, and instead of that being a matter of criticism against the committee——

Mr. FISH. No; my object is to bring the matter before the House and not to make any reflection whatever on the committee or Colonel Forbes. I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to emphasize the necessity of creating a new committee to handle veteran relief legislation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is purely a matter of administration; and I will say to the gentleman that with a good economical business administration the affairs of this department could be conducted with a saving of many, many thousands of dollars to the United States Government. But we are not the administrative officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that while we are expending $153,000 for rent at Novo, wherever that is—it sounds like a brand of food; but I believe it is located in Illinois—we are vocationalizing 173 men there. That is almost $1,000 a year per man for rent, to say nothing of the expense for teachers, supplies, food, and everything else, and for the other employees.

It is time that some committee of the House should go into this matter. What I want to do is to bring to the attention of the House some of the things which require special consideration in this enormous bureau, almost as large as any department.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the gentleman know why they are paying these exorbitant rents?

Mr. FISH. I can not say why they are paying $153,000 at Novo, Ill. I should think that they might almost build a school for that sum.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the gentleman know whether other buildings are available?

Mr. FISH. I know that there must be other buildings available in the United States.

Mr. REED of New York. Has the gentleman looked into it?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I have given many hours to the investigation of the whole subject.

Mr. REED of New York. I think the House is very much interested in it.

Mr. FISH. At some future time these matters will all be placed before the House, and perhaps a good many others. I will say that in my own district the Treasury Department paid $100,000 for property a few months ago which had been sold the year previously for $27,000. I will say that the Veterans' Bureau, also in my own district, has rented some buildings for a school at $60,000 a year, and I think lately it has been increased to $75,000 a year. I believe they could have bought the whole property for that amount. My purpose now is to tell these matters in a general way, placing the information before the House, because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has not got the time to look into the details and the subcommittee that has charge of the appropriations has not given sufficient time to find out the whys and the wherefores of these excessive rents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman state what executive officers made the contracts for rent of buildings at these excessive rates? Who were they?

Mr. FISH. That depends on whether it was for a hospital, vocational school, or office space.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Either one or all.

Mr. FISH. Many were contracted for years ago, before Colonel Forbes came into the bureau.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I am not asking about Mr. Forbes; I am asking who was responsible for these excessive rates for rent.

Mr. FISH. That is for the committee to find out.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I would like the title of the office that did the business.

Mr. FISH. I do not care to implicate anyone at the present time.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It looks like we are in the dark unless we know where the responsiblity lies.

Mr. FISH. Let me say to the gentleman that you are absolutely in the dark and the House is absolutely in the dark, and will be until a new committee is created.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Can not we do something which will let in a little light?

Mr. FISH. How can the House do anything when you have the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that does not give the matter any consideration?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The gentleman from New York is well informed personally, and I should be glad to know who was responsible for these excessive contracts.

Mr. FISH. I am simply placing some information before the House to show the necessity of creating a new committee to handle all veterans' relief legislation.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can not the matter be investigated by the appropriate committee?

Mr. FISH. That is the trouble. The Appropriations Committee has an excessive amount of work to transact and has been unable to give more than two days to the consideration of the Veterans' Bureau. That is in no way a criticism of the committee. I am simply calling it to the attention of the House. I admit that I have a resolution in my pocket to investigate the whole subject, but I am not prepared to say whether I will introduce it or not. I thank the Members of the House for their attention, but I will thank them more if they will give some real and immediate consideration to the changing of the rules and establishing a veteran relief committee.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is not there a Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and did not it conduct an investigation some time ago with reference to the activities of the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. FISH. No; the Veterans' Bureau is a separate bureau and does not come under the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand that now, but just prior to the time that the transfer was made there was an investigation made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department when that department then had jurisdiction of the War Risk Bureau, as it was then called.

Mr. FISH. I never heard of any investigation of that kind.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Does the gentleman know how this legislation fell into the hands of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. FISH. That was before I came to the House. I have asked several Members about it but none of them seemed to understand the reason. Even if there was a reason it has not worked out well.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. It is a busy committee.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Let me say that this bureau started purely as a matter of marine insurance. I had the responsibility devolve upon me to examine and settle the first accounts. It was a plan for marine insurance exclusively, and it was considered, of course, by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and everything followed in that line.

When the men came and the war insurance act was passed, then the proposition, which was purely commercial in the first place, gathered to itself the matter of insurance and benefits for soldiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. There are other committees that consider appropriations for the hospitalization of the World War veterans than the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on Independent Offices. The subcommittee on the War Department made considerable investigation as to hospital accommodations for veterans in the Army hospitals. That same subcommittee has given consideration to the hospitalization for World War veterans in connection with the various branch homes of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. A committee of surgeons, to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations just referred, recommended a proposition which was very sound from an economic standpoint, and that was to have the hospitals erected in connection with the existing soldiers' homes, distributed throughout the country, so that they could utilize the existing permanent establishments.

A year ago I was surprised in the hearings on the War Department appropriation bill to find that there were at that time 1,200 beds available for World War veterans, which would not be utilized by the Veterans' Bureau. This year's testimony only emphasizes the striking condition that although we have capacity in hospitals connected with the national soldiers' homes, capacity in the hospitals connected with the Army and with the Navy, yet the Veterans' Bureau will not utilize those hospitals to the capacity available.

When I interrupted the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] it was in all candor. I assumed the hospital at Dawsonsprings was in his district. I had no desire to single out that hospital in not being filled to capacity from any other. Construction was authorized four years ago, to be under the Treasury Department. I well remember the fight upon the floor in respect to it. The fact that it was not opened sooner has been the subject of criticism on the part of the war veterans. No patient was received at the Dawsonsprings Hospital until April, 1922.

I said in my interruption in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the capacity of that hospital was not utilized fully. It is not the only one. Hospitals all over the country, with accommodations that are available, of the highest type—and where can you find a hospital of a higher type than those of the Army—are not used. The hospital at Dawsonsprings has a capacity of 500, and I have confirmed my impression since I interrupted the gentleman, by telephoning to the Veterans' Bureau; and I am informed that there are only 347 patients there at the present time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The commanding officer of that hospital gave, as his reason why the 500 beds were not utilized, the fact that he had plenty of applications but that he wanted to take those in close proximity.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know what the reason is. I just telephoned to Doctor Stewart, of the Veterans' Bureau, and he says that there are beds available there and that they have no occupants.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Because they would not permit the transfers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am criticizing this policy, wherever the responsibility lodges, of the Veterans' Bureau not utilizing present existing available beds. We have had available accommodations for years and years, and yet they are going ahead and establishing new hospitals throughout the country, when there will be no need for them because everyone knows that the peak of necessity for this service has passed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, with reference to where the responsibility rests for this wholesale, wanton, and unreasonable extravagance, I am reminded of a charge I heard a Federal judge deliver to a grand jury once. He was talking about train robberies, and he said that the railroads were reaping what they had sown. He said that for the last 25 years every railroad had permitted the peddling on their trains of books on the lives of highway robbers, and that they are now reaping their reward. Congress is now reaping the fruits of its own folly in decentralizing the Veterans' Bureau. When the bill was before the House about August, 1921, I offered an amendment striking out the paragraph providing for decentralization, because I thought I foresaw the very trouble that we are now having. I said at the time that it was unnecessary to decentralize it, that it would scatter the records of the bureau all over the United States, and would greatly increase the expense of carrying on the work, and also increase the red tape and make it harder for the veteran to get the relief to which he is entitled. I am not like my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FISH]. I do not mind saying where this responsibility rests. It can rest at but two places. One of them is with the Congress of the United States and the other is with the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. What is a director for? If you have directors of a bank and they permit a waste of money you hold them responsible. You have a man here who contracts for various things. We are told that he pays $150,000 a year for office rent in one place and $50,000 or $60,000 for office rent in another. You are spending hundreds of millions of dollars a year more than is absolutely necessary to render the relief that the boys are now getting. A number of Members of Congress have expressed the regret to me at having voted for decentralizing, and, so far as I am concerned, I am in favor of recentralizing the Veterans' Bureau and placing it where Congress can supervise it. [Applause.]

I am not a bitter partisan, but it does not set very well with me to hear a Congressman of the party in power, having on his shoulders the responsibility that he has, show that some man, whether he be a director or head of a bureau or any other officer, is responsible by either his inability or his misconduct, or his inattendance to duty, for wholesale extravagance, and then decline to point that man out. I want to tell you there will have to be a recentralization of this Veterans' Bureau and a reduction of its expenses. I have worked hard, as has every other man here, to see that these disabled boys are taken care of, and we are going to see that they are cared for, but there are some other people whom we are going to have to take care of also, and they are the taxpayers of this country. It is costing from three and a half to four and a half billions of dollars a year at the present time to run this Government, from $35 to $45 per capita, or from $180 to $220 for the average family.

How long do you think the American people are going to stand for these extravagances? Are we not going to make any effort at all to reduce them? So far as I am concerned, if you will bring in a bill here any day, I do not care whether it is from the Commitee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or not, bring in a bill from any authorized committee to recentralize the Veterans' Bureau, to investigate it, to cut out all these superfluous expenditures and bring its cost down to what it ought to be, I will support it and do everything I can to bring about its passage. But until you do that you are going to have the same trouble you are having to-day, and the longer it runs the more trouble you are going to have.

This decentralization was tried out on the Bureau of Pensions in years gone by, and it proved too costly and too cumbersome for the work to be done, just as the Veterans' Bureau is proving to be under the present régime. Let us recentralize it, increase its efficiency, and reduce expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had thought that the fight against the Dawsonsprings, Ky., hospital had long since been settled, but it seems that it is the delight of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who fought it as much as he could in the Congress which passed the bill, to point out whatever he can against the Dawsonsprings hospital. Why, he says it has about 367 beds——

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Did not we recently increase the appropriation $750,000 for Dawsonsprings?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How much more do you need?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the administration building hospitals at present. I want to get to the proposition of construction of these hospitals under that White commission, and I say it was a crime for its extravagances. That is what I am talking about. Let us take, for instance, the Dawsonsprings hospital, a magnificent institution—I think the most beautiful hospital I have ever seen in my life—and we have spent $2,250,000 in the erection of that magnificent institution with 500 beds. Now, under this $18,600,000 and under the $17,000,000 we have given carte blanche to this commission. What is the definite thing to do? If you want to get more beds—that is what the Veterans' Bureau said; they wanted more beds, and want them now—why, for a nominal amount you can increase the capacity at Dawsonsprings to a thousand beds. How? You can build additional units. You have 5,000 acres of land which the people gave to the Government, and all you have got to do is to build the units, connect up the lighting and plumbing system and you can get double the capacity at one-fifth of the cost. Yet what did this commission do? It ran out and built these new hospitals, with all their overhead charges. Why, the gentleman from Wisconsin facetiously says that the hospital is not full.

No. I have talked with the people there, and they say that they have enough applications for transfer of boys from other institutions to fill this institution, but what the officer in charge wanted to do was to fill the institution, if he can, with boys from that particular portion of the United States; that is, as adjacent to that institution as possible. And, if this White commission under its $18,500,000 appropriation would have gone out to existing hospitals, including Dawsonsprings, and doubled the bed capacity at one-fifth of the cost and in one-third of the time, we would have enough beds now to take care of all these boys. I do not want to inject politics into this thing, and I will only say that every time anything in reference to hospitals comes up Dawsonsprings seems to be the target. Now, when my bill became a law on March 3, 1919, when it came to a vote in this House, notwithstanding Secretary of Treasury McAdoo wrote a letter to the Speaker here saying that these boys needed hospitals, away back in 1918, you gentlemen treated it lightly, but when the bill finally came up for passage there was but one Republican Member of Congress who voted for it. That is the politics in it. But, as I say, I am not trying to inject any politics, but what I am trying to say is that we would have had enough beds for all these boys who are suffering if we had exercised some business judgment and extended the existing hospitals, and we could have saved millions of dollars. Personally I do not think there was any need for that $17,000,000 appropriation, and if the money would have been wisely and economically expended you would not need another dollar to supply sufficient beds.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The gentleman means the $18,600,000—not the $17,000,000?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes. I mean the $18,600,000 appropriation. I wish some of you gentlemen interested in hospitals, you who seem to delight, and especially the gentleman from Wisconsin, in a reference of criticism to Dawsonsprings—I wish you would go and look at that magnificent institution. It will stand for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this item be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the debate on this item be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This appropriation shall be disbursed by the United States Veterans' Bureau, and such portion thereof as may be necessary shall be allotted from time to time to the Public Health Service, the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, and transferred to their credit for disbursement by them for the purposes set forth in the foregoing paragraph. The allotments to the said Board of Managers shall not be used to augment the appropriations made for the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 39, in line 14, after the word "paragraph" and beginning with the word "the," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do this because it is permanent law now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who has consistently fought centralization of the Veterans' Bureau, I want to say as one who advocated centralization that I believe it is worth the trouble. There may be some Congressmen here who may think they are not getting sufficient credit from the veterans, as their claims for compensation and relief are now being handled by the subdistrict and district offices. But I want to say that since the bureau has been decentralized there have not been half as many complaints, and if you will read the report just issued by Colonel Forbes, you will note that he states that in all the districts where the work has been decentralized the handling of claims has been going on smoothly and efficiently.

That ought to be an answer to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this debate is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has not talked yet, and the Chair is not able to determine whether the gentleman's remarks are germane or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The decentralization of hospitals is not germane.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is rather late in raising his objection. He waited until the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had replied to me and put his side of the case before the House. Now to raise objection, it seems to me the gentleman has been guilty of laches.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may be right in one respect, and that is that there has been a great falling off in the number of applications and the number of claims of veterans that have been filed. But the decentralization bill was passed, I think, on August 7, 1921, more than two and a half years after the war closed. The majority of the men who were suffering disabilities because of the war not only had made prior application, but most of them had been looked after. No wonder there has been a falling off. The logic of the situation is that the longer we go the more the number of these claims should be diminished. To say that they have not been piling up in Congressmen's offices as they have done heretofore is no excuse for spending $500,000,000 annually when, in my judgment, the work could be done for $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 less. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For military and naval insurance, $90,000,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, when the bill for the reorganization of the War Risk Insurance Bureau was passed Congress had provided for three main divisions—the allowance and allotment, the compensation, and the insurance. Later on the question of rehabilitation was taken up and a new measure was introduced to provide for that.

No one, I think, in the House thought that the time would ever come when there would be more money expended for that activity than for any one of the other three. I am sure I had no conception of it whatever. I was very anxious to see this activity undertaken. The allowance and allotment, of course, would not last long after the war ended. The compensation would go on, measured, of course, by the disability. I notice that the bill carries $118,450,000 for that activity this year; and the insurance feature, which was one of the main items, amounts only to $90,000,000, as I notice in the bill. But the vocational work this year amounts to $120,743,000. It is literally staggering to me. The first appropriation made was $2,000,000. The next appropriation was $4,000,000, and it was increased by amendment on the floor of the House to $6,000,000. Then I remember it went to $16,000,000. Now it is $120,743,000. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stated that we had reached the peak and that next year, for which we are now making appropriations, it will be a little less than at present, and that the following year it will probably be $84,000,000.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I am afraid the gentleman is giving erroneous information to the House. We have not reached the peak, because these schools heretofore have been unorganized, and hereafter you must provide for teachers, employees, food, and supplies for the trainees, and everything else, and it will be a great deal more than it is in this bill.

Mr. FESS. I will state to the gentleman from New York that I think he is mistaken on that, for the reason that the basis for the rehabilitation is the disability. Will we not reach the point pretty soon where that will be lessened?

Mr. FISH. We have not reached the peak as far as the expense is concerned. The trainees are not in all of these vocational schools yet.

Mr. FESS. I would not want it understood that I am complaining about the work. I am speaking about the enormous size of it. I think it was started without anyone realizing what it was going to amount to. I do not mean to make any apology; but the amount of money required is so large, beyond any thought that I had, that it is somewhat bewildering, and I am concerned about it, whether we will not pretty soon reach the point, if we have not reached it already, where the amount will be very materially lessened and ultimately the rehabilitation work will entirely stop.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. On what date will the privilege of applying for vocational training cease under the law? Is there any limit?

Mr. FESS. There is a limit fixed.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What is it?

Mr. ROSSDALE. I think it has just been reached.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. December, 1922?

Mr. MADDEN. They can not apply after that, and even if they are certified as eligible they can not take training unless they begin within a year after they are passed on as eligible.

Mr. FESS. I think it would be very unwise for the Congress to launch out into the policy of the Government establishing these schools for rehabilitation, because if you do that I fear it is going to be permanent and that no limit will be placed on the amount of money that will be required.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How many are there who have not yet entered upon their training who have been found eligible?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Ninety-seven thousand.

Mr. MADDEN. There were 107,000 a year ago, and there are 97,000 now. Two hundred and twenty-nine thousand were passed on as eligible, but more than a year has elapsed since many of those were passed on, and they can not receive their training unless they begin within a year after they are found eligible.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Then the maximum number that can go on with vocational training now is how many?

Mr. MADDEN. Ninety-seven thousand.

Mr. BLANTON. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman promised me yesterday that he would not bother us at all.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to bother you. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I am sure it is a personal pleasure to every Member of this House to have the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] preside as Chairman of the Committee in the consideration of this bill. In my judgment, first, he is one of the finest parliamentarians we have in the House. [Applause.] Second, he is one of the finest gentlemen we have in this House. [Applause.] Thirdly, he is one of the fairest presiding officers, next to our late lamented Champ Clark, that I ever saw. [Applause.] He is fair to everybody. He is a partisan Republican, and I do not blame him for being partisan. I am a partisan Democrat myself; but no matter how anxious he is to have a quorum here, if to get a record vote, a point of order is made that there is no quorum present and a count lacks one man of having a quorum, he states the honest number regardless of where the chips fly. [Applause.] He expedites business and is honest and fair, and I for one appreciate a man of that character who sits there and gives every man a fair deal. I am sorry that he is not going to continue next year to preside over the committees of this House. I think the Speaker picked one of the finest men in this House when he chose him to preside over the consideration of this bill which involves $496,235,000 of the people's money, and I take off my hat to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon. [Applause.]

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I happened to come into the Chamber while the discussion was going on about the hospitals of the Veterans' Bureau. I regret I was not here during the general debate on the bill, but in the limited time at my disposal now I will tell the House as briefly as is possible about the hospitalization, or rather lack of hospitalization, by the Veterans' Bureau in the State and in the city of New York.

The number of World War veterans requiring hospitalization is materially reduced by the bureau's usual classification of applicants as "not connected with war service." This classification of a soldier's claim deprives him of hospitalization and also compensation. His claim is thus held up for a considerable period, after which the bureau generally admits the veteran's disability is of service connection.

During this "not connected with war service" period the sick and disabled soldier must shift for himself, oftentimes depending upon charitable or pauper institutions for temporary care and sometimes dying for lack of any care. It is a harsh, cruel trick, but it reduces the number of those receiving hospitalization and enables the bureau to piously exclaim, "See the number of surplus empty beds in our hospitals," when in truth there are thousands of sick and disabled soldiers unlawfully deprived of hospitalization which Congress intended they should have and for which ample appropriation was made.

In the metropolitan district of New York, with its teeming population, there is only one hospital for tuberculosis sufferers, the nearest other such hospital being at Oteen, N. C., neither of which really has enough beds to care for even a portion of those in this district needing same.

In my district we have United States Veterans' Hospital No. 81. It is a neuropsychiatric center. There are 340 patients there, with over 500 employees, an unusually large number of them clerks, and only 8 doctors in the entire place. Millions are being spent, or, rather, misspent, in the handling of the patients there, and the abuse that is heaped upon them has long been a public scandal. The superintendent of that institution lives is a great big house by himself, with numerous servants, a couple of automobiles, chauffeurs on duty day and night, and all the luxuries Uncle Sam's Treasury can afford. It is a house that would provide sufficient beds for a considerable number of sick soldiers. Yet it is used as the private quarters of the superintendent. Patients in that institution refer to it as "the castle of our king." The hospital is located on a 35-acre tract of land. It was to have accommodations for over a thousand patients. It cost to date about three and a half million dollars, with alterations, and presumably will cost more than twice that sum before it will have accommodations for the thousand patients it was intended or claimed to provide for. It might be well for the National Treasury if this House were to investigate the management of that particular Veterans' Bureau hospital. If a congressional investigation was made of Veterans' Bureau hospitalization, I doubt very much that Congress would again give that bureau a blank check, as it has done, to continue its career of waste and inefficiency.

It is more than four years since the armistice was signed, and surely sufficient time has elapsed in which to make hospital provision to do away with the evils of contract hospitals, which in the majority of cases are city, county, or State pauper institutions.

Late in October of last year there were 73 tubercular veteran patients in Sea View Hospital, which is a New York City owned pauper institution. The conditions of the sick veterans there were so intolerably bad that the patients actually had to beg visitors for some food to sustain life, claiming they could not eat the hospital fare.

In response to a signed petition by 67 out of 73 patients there—the other 6 were so bedridden that they could not write—petitioning that they be given decent treatment by the officials in charge, and that they be given food fit for human consumption, and enough to sustain human life; that they be permitted to leave the grounds oftener than only once in 60 days; that they be given clean bed linen; that they be permitted to eat at tables in a dining room, and not be compelled to eat from filthy, rusty iron trays on their beds.

I visited the hospital, where these unfortunate veterans were contracted for by the Veterans' Bureau, and was shocked and grieved to see them existing there in filth and amid revolting conditions.

I called upon Mayor Hylan the next day to complain to him of these conditions. I brought along two ladies, Mrs. Malcolm MacLeod and Mrs. A. P. Dennis, active workers in the Women's Overseas Service League, who had served overseas with our boys during the war and who now devoted their lives to caring for the disabled in hospitals. With these ladies to corroborate my recital of the conditions at Sea View Hospital, I tried to acquaint Mayor Hylan with the facts with the object of remedying them, but the mayor of New York refused to listen and roundly abused both these patriotic women and myself.

I then wrote to the Veterans' Bureau district manager and received this reply, which I will insert in the RECORD, also accounts of the conditions there, printed in the New York Evening Post of October 23 and November 1. The writer of the special Post article is Harold A. Littledale, an experienced and trained investigator. His article tells its own story of shameful abuse and pitiless neglect in this New York City contract hospital:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
OFFICE OF DISTRICT MANAGER, DISTRICT NO. 2,
New York, N. Y., October 26, 1922.

Hon. ALBERT B. ROSSDALE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ROSSDALE: Acknowledgment is made of receipt of your letter dated October 24, 1922, with reference to the conditions now existing at Sea View Hospital.

You are advised that this matter has been taken up by the district office with Commissioner Coler, with a view of correcting the conditions as they now exist at that institution. A further conference will be held with Commissioner Coler, advising him wherein bureau beneficiaries are not receiving the proper attention, and also bring to his attention the fact that the majority of beneficiaries of the bureau now receiving treatment at Sea View are New York City cases. After a reasonable length of time, if it is found that the recommendations as made by the bureau are not put into effect, arrangements will be made to transfer them to Government-owned or controlled hospitals.

For your information it may be added that beneficiaries of this bureau in contract hospitals may always avail themselves of Government hospitalization. There are sufficient beds available for the care of all the tuberculous cases at United States Veterans' Hospital No. 41, New Haven, or United States Veterans' Hospital No. 60, Oteen, N. C., and we will be glad at any time to arrange for the transfer of any of these cases who are able to travel without jeopardizing their lives.

Respectfully,

W. F. LENT,
District Manager, United States Veterans' Bureau, District No. 2.

REFUSES TO PERMIT ROSSDALE TO TELL OF VETERANS' MISTREATMENT.

An attempt on the part of Representative ALBERT B. ROSSDALE, of the Bronx, to lay before Mayor Hylan matters in connection with his recent investigation of alleged neglect and mismanagement within the veterans' ward of the Sea View Hospital came to an abrupt close today when the mayor; David Hirsfield, commissioner of accounts; and Bird S. Coler, commissioner of public welfare, practically refused Mr. ROSSDALE a hearing.

Mr. ROSSDALE was silenced without being allowed the privilege of completing a single sentence except in defense of his own motives, as were also two women hospital workers who were personally acquainted with conditions at Sea View and who said that they had repeatedly tried to get the attention of the authorities.

DIED WITHOUT MEDICAL AID.

Neither in the remarks of Mr. ROSSDALE nor in the attitude of the two women workers—Mrs. Malcolm MacLeod, of 321 West Fifty-seventh Street, and Mrs. A. P. Dennis, of 34 East Fifty-first Street—was there any apparent trace of bias or political animus. Describing conditions to newspaper men before the hearing, Mrs. MacLeod said that she had been prompted to lay her knowledge of conditions before the mayor by personal observations made especially during the latter part of the summer.

"Men have died in the veterans' ward of Sea View without medical attention," she said. "They have died from undernourishment practically amounting to starvation. During the course of the summer there were no screens in the veterans' ward, and I have known cases where sick men have sat up all during the course of the night brushing the flies and mosquitoes from the faces of their dead comrades. We have repeatedly tried to have these conditions bettered, but have met with nothing but denial."

"Doctor Kramer, the head of the hospital," she continued, "when we brought these facts to his attention, told us that these boys were 'nothing but a lot of truck drivers, who didn't have sense enough to deserve anything better.' I know of one case where a dying man fell out of bed the night he died and was buried with a 2-inch gash on his forehead. I know of another, where a dying man called for the doctor, and died in two hours without medical attention, excepting such as could be administered to him by his comrades."

SEVENTY-THREE TUBERCULAR PATIENTS.

There are 73 tubercular war veterans in the city-owned Sea View Hospital on Staten Island. By arrangement with the Federal Government these patients were transferred there from Fox Hills Hospital when the latter institution was closed after investigations last spring.

Mr. ROSSDALE inspected the veterans' ward yesterday upon receipt of a petition from 67 of the men begging him to bring about their removal. The men complained in particular of filthy and decayed food. In detailing his findings Mr. ROSSDALE said before the hearings took place that he had learned that Albert Johnson, a veteran from his own district in the Bronx, had died of a hemorrhage in the hospital last Friday night 30 minutes before medical aid reached him.

Other discoveries made by Mr. ROSSDALE were that the veterans for whose maintenance the city is paid $3 a day by the Federal Government are allowed but one day leave of absence from the hospital every two months. They are not allowed the privilege of the mess room. Food is dished out to the patients, who must first form in line. They are compelled to take the food back to their beds on dirty trays, he said, and as a result the cots and bedding have become foul and greasy. The kitchen he found dirty and fly ridden, and the food not only insufficient but in some cases insanitary.

The "hearing" took place in a little antechamber to the mayor's office. When Congressman ROSSDALE, together with Mrs. MacLeod and Mrs. Dennis, was admitted, the mayor was seated at a small desk in the center of the room. On either side of him were Mr. Hirshfield and Mr. Coler, both of whom had spent some time in conference with the mayor before the hearing. Mr. ROSSDALE walked in with four rusty trays he brought up from the hospital as examples of the eating conditions there and was immediately confronted by the hostile glares of the mayor and his two commissioners.

HYLAN TRIED INTERRUPTION.

"Mr. Mayor," Congressman ROSSDALE began, "I am here in behalf of the veterans in Sea View Hospital. I have investigated conditions there and have a report to make."

The mayor started to interrupt, but Mr. ROSSDALE broke him off, laying the four trays down on the table.

"I wouldn't let a dog eat out of these things," he burst out. "And yet these filthy, rusty things serve as tables for tubercular patients who have suffered in the World War."

"Just a minute, just a minute," shouted the mayor. "We want to get to the bottom of this thing. You are running for reelection, I believe."

"We won't bring politics into this thing, Mr. Mayor," Congressman ROSSDALE said. "I am here to speak on things I have seen and which you can remedy. One of the boys in my district died last Friday night in Sea View under conditions that were utterly intolerable. I am here to speak for him and for more who may die in the near future."

The mayor flushed angrily.

"What time did that man die?" snapped out Mr. Coler.

"Some time during the course of the late afternoon," Mr. ROSSDALE began. "He was unable to get medical assistance. I want to tell you, too, about the sanitary conditions. The food is bad. These trays are typical of the way it is served. They are dirty and rusty. The beds are rusty. Would you let a dog eat out of a thing like that?" he added, pointing at the tray.

[From the New York Evening Post, November 1, 1922.]

DISMISS VETERANS WHO COMPLAIN AT SEA VIEW HOSPITAL—CITY AUTHORITIES OPENLY DECLARE THEY DO NOT WANT MEN THERE—EX-SOLDIER PATIENTS SAY THEY WERE SERVED WITH WORMY CEREALS AND OTHER UNFIT FOOD.

(By Harold A. Littledale.)

War veterans who complained against conditions at Sea View Hospital on Staten Island now charge that those who had the courage to speak out openly have been summarily dismissed and have had to leave the hospital.

The fact of the matter is that Dr. Geza Kremer, medical superintendent, does not want the soldiers at Sea View. He has said so openly. He has been in the employ of the city for 26 years. He was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1894, and when he applied for admission there he gave his home address as "Austria" and said he was a graduate of the Catholic Gymnasium of Budapest.

While Doctor Kremer and Bird S. Coler, commissioner of public welfare, must take responsibility for conditions at Sea View and should ask for a real investigation, the Veterans' Bureau and Congress must be blamed for the fact that these men, disabled in the service of their country, suffering with tuberculosis—all of them—have been farmed out on contracts, and then have not been properly supervised.

For the farming out Congress is to blame. Four years after the armistice enough Government hospitals do not exist. In this State, for instance, which provided one-tenth of all the men in the military service, there is not a single Government hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis. That, of course, is scandalous.

COSTS $100,000 A YEAR.

Under such circumstances the men had to be farmed out. They are being farmed out at Sea View for $3 a day. That is what the Veterans' Bureau is paying for them; and as there are about 90 soldiers there now, the bill, in rough figures, comes to approximately $100,000 a year.

Yet, although the Veterans' Bureau is spending that amount, it has been callously indifferent as to the service rendered. For the bureau has not been in ignorance of conditions at Sea View. Months ago formal complaint was lodged with the district officer here, but nothing was done. A few weeks ago formal complaint was lodged with the central office of the bureau in Washington, but nothing was done. And since the outcry only a perfunctory inspection has been made.

But what has the Veterans' Bureau been getting for its investment of $100,000 a year? Well, the boys charge that they have been getting wormy cereal, stale and even rotten eggs, unfit meat, and unwashed vegetables. Do you expect tuberculous men to get well on that? Why, the situation became so bad that men were actually bringing their food to the office of the Evening Post and writing so many letters of complaint that an investigation was decided on. That investigation was begun some days before Representative ALBERT B. ROSSDALE visited the hospital, and this article is the third of a series on Sea View occasioned by the investigation.

Closing Fox Hills Hospital in April necessitated sending its patients to other hospitals. Some went to hospitals nearer their homes, but veterans of New York wanted, and rightfully so, to be placed in hospitals here where they could be visited by their relatives. But the hospitals did not exist—at least the Government hospitals did not exist—back there last April any more than they do this November. There was room at Sea View, which is operated by the department of public welfare, and although Kremer did not want the veterans, Coler made the contract and the veterans came.

Kremer at that time was quite open about not wanting the soldiers. He was quite open about the fact that they would be treated no better than the city patients. That would be all right if the city patients were well treated and had no complaint, but the facts of how they are treated were told in last night's Evening Post.

WHEN VETERANS COMPLAINED.

Doctor Kremer fulfilled his threat. At first the veterans were treated just the same as the city patients. Complaint resulted. Anyone with vision would have seen that complaint would result. The result was that the veterans were given some extras at meals and, as they are complaining now, you can imagine how the city patients would protest if they only dared.

When the transfer was made from Fox Hills to Sea View the Women's Overseas Service League asked permission to visit the veterans. It was at first refused. Coler would not hear of it and Kremer would not hear of it, although Sea View is supposed to be a public hospital. Not until the women agreed in writing that they would "cooperate" were they allowed to visit the veterans. And that "cooperation," stripped to its bare form, was a promise not to let their eyes see conditions, and if they did see never to speak of them. But if Sea View is well run, if it is a good hospital, why is that necessary? The well-run hospital, the hospital with nothing to hide, would want everything seen and its praises sung from the housetops, surely. And since they have been going there the members of the Women's Overseas Service League have taken about 100 dozen eggs each month, among other things. If the food at Sea View is good, why is that necessary?

"The cereal was often wormy," the soldiers explained. "The food was poorly cooked and served cold as a rule. There was seldom enough, and fish was invariably bad. At times the fish was positively rotten; the eggs were black, and the bread was dry and not well baked. Almost invariably the vegetables were unwashed. Sometimes we found worms in the cabbage—say, look here."

The man dipped his spoon in his soup and fished out a fly.

VETERANS THROWN OUT.

Since the complaints at Sea View became known the hospital authorities have been dismissing all who were prepared to tell the truth. Three of the first to go were dismissed when matters were in a ferment, two days before the publicity began. They were W. J. Sheridan, George B. Schafer, and George Rue. They went out to eat when all they got for breakfast was cold toast and cold coffee. Upon their return they were thrown out. There is no other word for it. And within a day or so they were followed by Orie Palmer and John Hogan, both of whom were dismissed on some silly fiction, but actually to get them out of the road of investigators who were certain to come.

It was on Monday, October 23, that Congressman ROSSDALE complained to the mayor. On Wednesday last, two days later, Commissioner Coler went to the hospital. As he went up the elevator orderlies ran down the stairs with the rusted trays. Thus was the denial of rusted trays made good. They were not there when Coler came. They had been replaced with white ones. The writer saw the substitution made, and if Coler did not see it, too, he must have been very unobservant that day.

Complaint of lack of medical attention has brought about a change. There is no lack of doctors just now. You run into them in every ward. But, of course, tubercular patients do not need much medication. It is only when a hemorrhage occurs or something like that happens that a doctor is needed. And then he is needed quickly. First measures can be taken by a nurse, to be sure, but a doctor should come. The veterans say that hours often pass before the doctor does arrive. And that, of course, is wrong.

DOCTOR CAME TOO LATE.

In the case of Albert Johnson, who died the other day, the veterans say that although the doctor was sent for at 4 o'clock he did not arrive until after the boy was dead. And on top of that they charge that the body of this dead soldier was wheeled out into the hall of the ward and left there, some screens about it that did not more than half conceal the still and lifeless form. For nearly three hours it was left there. The veterans say it was not moved till nearly 7. They fix the time because they say the orderly "hoped" the men from the morgue would come before he got off at 7. And they came a few minutes before he did get off.

That conditions have been allowed to come to this stage is due to the failure of the Veterans' Bureau properly to supervise its contract. It went into that contract knowing that Kremer would stand for no suggestions. It placed a liaison officer there for a few weeks, but he is gone. It had a vocational adviser there for a few weeks, but he is gone. It had a compensation man there for a few weeks, but he is gone. Nothing has been done in a definite, permanent way. The Veterans' Bureau has left things drift, and now they have reached this pass.

On top of that there is no Government hospital in this State where these boys can go. For that Congress is to blame. The hospital program was delayed. Hospitals are now being begun that should have been begun as quickly after the armistice as the money could be appropriated. And to add to the delay, General Sawyer has been saying that there are Government beds aplenty. But if there are Government beds aplenty, why are men in contract hospitals? And nearly 10,000 disabled soldiers are in contract hospitals. That in itself shows that General Sawyer's contention is but a silly fiction.

If the veterans are to stay at Sea View, control over them should pass into the hands of the Veterans' Bureau. It should have its own doctors there, and, while they would observe the hospital rules, they should be left as free as possible and with power to see that the food is fresh and fit and clean and well cooked. Then when the new hospitals are built the boys should be moved away. Doctor Kremer has had his chance and appears to have failed.

When I appealed to the Veterans' Bureau for relief for those men who are suffering from tuberculosis, the Veterans' Bureau admitted that they had no beds in the metropolitan district, and that if I wanted to get them transferred, the nearest place was Oteen, N. C., or New Haven, Conn. Now, gentlemen of this House, many of these boys were near death. They wanted to be near their relatives, and there ought to be some hospital where they could have been hospitalized near the city of New York and not down in North Carolina, Connecticut, or elsewhere. Why has not the Veterans' Bureau so arranged its hospitalization that these men could be taken care of in a Government hospital equipped to care for tubercular patients somewhere near the great city of New York?

Mr. MADDEN. They are building a very large hospital in New York now.

Mr. ROSSDALE. They abandoned that after they started it.

Mr. MADDEN. No; they are building one. They have just bought an orphan asylum down there and are rebuilding it.

Mr. ROSSDALE. The former orphan asylum is the one I have referred to. That was completed more than a year ago and is known as United States hospital No. 81. That is a building that is limited to mental-hygiene cases; it is an immense, big place, and ought to be sufficiently large to house more than a thousand patients. It was the former Roman Catholic orphan asylum, and it then housed over 800 children. Now there is room there for only 340 patients, because the official who has charge of that institution does not want to be burdened with too many patients and because Director Forbes, of the Veterans' Bureau at Washington, permits him to run the place like an overseas hospital camp in 1918 during hostilities.

This hospital is not for tubercular patients and none are there, for they are all in contract hospitals in the metropolitan district. While we are crying about the shortage of beds the bureau is lieing about a surplus of them. Congress ought to look into that situation; and when we are appropriating all of this money you gentlemen might consider how little you are doing for these soldier boys in New York and, for that matter, for those elsewhere in the United States of America.

They have not had and have not proper hospitalization now, and it is useless to appeal to the Veterans' Bureau. I have appealed time and time again and have received nothing but evasion. Almost every Member of Congress has received the same treatment. Back home we are held responsible for the Veterans' Bureau. Although the faults are administrative, we are nevertheless held accountable by our constituencies.

I was informed that the bureau purchased a site for a tuberculosis hospital in the highlands back of the Hudson River, and after a fortune was spent in blasting rock and digging out soil for a foundation the bureau suddenly ordered a cessation of work and abandonment of the project, declaring the site to be unsuitable. Just why the bureau did not study and know the site conditions before buying the land and contracting for the erection of the buildings is a mystery that perhaps Director Forbes can solve. It would be interesting to know the why and wherefore of this unusual and costly proceeding.

It is a sad commentary upon our boasted care and tender solicitude for those who made such great sacrifices in the World War. Our sins of omission and commission will not be explained away with the blame placed upon this particular administrative bureau, but, rather, upon the Government, that is directly responsible for this branch of itself.

Congress, if it would so desire, could reform the Veterans' Bureau and render a great service to the Nation. If ever there was a part of the Government that needed the flood light of publicity turned upon it, it is this petted darling of the administration, which defies public opinion and public decency and is getting away with it.

It is useless to appeal to the President, for have not the American Legion and other veteran organizations' pleas for more and better hospitalization been rejected? I have often wondered what was the magic possessed by Director Forbes that enabled him to continue in favor at the White House, when all the country has long been aware of Forbes's incompetency.

I base my opinion that it is useless to appeal to the President of the United States because I have appealed to him from a harsh ruling of Director Forbes and found it was useless. Evidently Forbes, right or wrong, must be upheld.

About a year ago I called upon President Harding and personally appealed to him to set aside an unusually harsh and cruel ruling of Forbes in the case of a soldier boy from my district who went to Arizona in a last effort to stay alive in the healthful climate of that locality.

This boy was in the last stages of tuberculosis. The bureau ordered him to leave the private sanatorium where he was at Prescott and to enter Whipple Barracks Hospital, but he was too far gone to be able to obey the order without risking the likelihood of his removal resulting in death. He pleaded to be permitted to remain where he was for the little while left for him to live, but a Forbes ruling, like a law of ancient Media, was immutable. The bureau stopped his compensation because he was too weak to leave the bed where he lay sick unto death.

I begged, pleaded, argued, and threatened for the boy, but was coldly rebuked by Veterans' Bureau officials. Incensed at the bureau's heartlessness I appealed to President Harding in person, but without avail. The poor soldier was never able to leave the bed where he lay and died some months later. Veterans' Bureau officials later refused to allow even funeral expenses for this dead soldier, because, forsooth, he died without being able to comply with a stupid, arbitrary, and unwarranted Forbes rule.

If the files of that bureau possessed the power of speech, what terrible stories of mismanagement, inhumanity, and stupidity they would tell. Some day, but perhaps too late, much of it will be made known. For my own self I will say to this House that I have no confidence in the management of the Veterans' Bureau to vote any more lump-sum appropriations to it and will vote against this bill for this reason. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the privilege granted to me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Veterans' Bureau, I am inserting the story of the investigation into the rehabilitation and hospitalization of our World War veterans in the New York metropolitan district.

The series of articles comprising this story was written by an able and trained investigator, M. J. Racusin, a New York Tribune special writer, and published in that newspaper. I am conversant with all of the subject matter therein and know the facts to be true as stated. I believe the country will want to know these facts, and for that reason I am inserting them in the RECORD.

It is a graphic portrayal of the colossal failure of the Veterans' Bureau to properly function, and proves what critics of the bureau, including myself, have contended for months, that only a congressional investigation will check the costly "muddling through" policies of the bureau.

The question of rehabilitation and hospitalization of our World War veterans is a great problem. I am firmly convinced it requires the best brains and genius we have to solve it.

It is incumbent upon the administration to enlist our ablest men for this task, for the results shown in the following story prove that it has been intrusted too long to men of mediocre ability who are unable to cope with it.

[From the New York Tribune.]

WAR CRIPPLES LEARN LITTLE IN "TRAINING"—VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS FOR NEW YORK SOLDIERS CALLED FAILURE AS MEN ARE MISHANDLED AND NEGLECTED—VICTIMS WITH BAD FEET PEDAL MACHINES—SHUNTED ABOUT DESPITE PROTESTS—NO JUDGMENT USED, VETERANS SAY.

(By M. Jay Racusin.)

What is happening to New York's soldiers disabled in the World War?

Three years ago the crippled veterans were placed in schools and workshops in an effort to restore them to usefulness. The Government has been spending millions to help them get another clutch on life.

The crisis for many of these men is at hand. In a few short months their periods of training will have expired.

Have they been rehabilitated?

Have they learned profitable trades?

Will they have jobs awaiting them?

It is in an attempt to answer these questions that these articles are written. The investigation upon which they are based shows—

That 75 out of every 100 of the veterans sent through the training schools have been pitifully neglected;

That they have been inadequately trained or scarcely trained;

That at the expiration of their periods of instruction they will meet almost insurmountable barriers to profitable employment;

That if present conditions continue they will find few if any jobs awaiting them;

That they will find themselves almost as helpless as they were four years ago.

SERIOUSNESS IS RECOGNIZED, PLANS FOR RELIEF STARTED.

There are indications that the seriousness of the situation is at least being recognized and plans are on foot to meet it, how successfully remains to be seen. The continual change of district chiefs here—eight in 14 months—is declared to be chiefly responsible for the development of these chaotic conditions. The present manager, Maj. W. F. Lent, has been in office only five months, and can hardly be held accountable for their existence.

On the contrary, it is asserted by those who have the welfare of the veteran at heart that he is the first man who has shown an understanding of the soldier's troubles and is taking vigorous measures to correct them. If at this time there is to be a ninth manager, it would be all but calamitous for the disabled soldiers.

Those who have gone through the relentless war sieve of the days of 1917 know how careful the Government was to select only perfect specimens for its armies. Many came back shattered. Then, apparently, a miracle took place. For now the Government tells the blinded veteran that he will make an excellent tailor; the poor fellow with smashed feet is told they are fine for pedaling a sewing machine; a soldier with paralyzed hands is told he can be a skillful sign painter; a veteran with a battered right arm is advised to wield heavy tools as a mechanic; an ex-service man suffering from tuberculosis is set to confining battery making; a disabled fighter who has had three years' instruction under Government supervision as an auto mechanic is offered a job as a "butterfly" in a theatrical entertainment at the conclusion of his training.

$430,000,000 SPENT YEARLY TO RESTORE MAIMED VETERANS.

This is illustrative, in a few words, of how a large proportion of the maimed veterans have been handled in accordance with the Government's promise to nurse them back to health and restore them to gainful occupations, at an expenditure which this year totals $430,000,000.

There are 97,359 veterans undergoing "training" for one or another of 170 and odd trades and professions in institutions of learning and workshops throughout the Nation. Of these 11,763 are receiving instruction in district No. 2, including New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, with headquarters here. About 8,000 of these men are in and of the metropolitan area, and half of them are in schools, with the other half distributed through shops of various trades for supposedly practical experience.

Under the law the injured ex-service men are permitted training in some profitable occupation, the period of instruction not to exceed four years. During this time the Government is responsible financially for the man's tuition, and in addition allows him generally from $100 to $145 a month for support.

At the end of the four-year period, however, the Government virtually discharges him. If he has learned something and jobs are plentiful and his physical disability is not too great, well and good.

But if he hasn't learned a trade, and countless barriers are put in his way, what is he to do?

On July 1 and during the several months following the allotted four-year period of training will expire for about 2,000 of them. Many are married and have families. A large number of them face a desperate situation.

It is generally agreed among those interested in the welfare of the disabled veteran that the medical and hospital facilities provided and planned for his care and treatment are fairly satisfactory, although there is still room for much improvement.

As for training and rehabilitation, however, I can say from personal observation that the matter would be laughable if it were not pitiful. This is true of a large percentage of the cases. I make this assertion on the basis of a four weeks' trip through representative places of instruction, conversations with teachers and Government agents, and talks with scores of the shattered veterans themselves.

Here are some of the most striking facts that have come under my observation:

Hundreds of ex-service men are being crowded through the private institutions that grew up over night, with little facilities and less soul, and whose only interest, on the word of the veterans themselves, appears to be the collection of the contract price allowed by the Government.

One of the institutions at which instruction is given is actually owned by a salaried official of the United States Veterans' Bureau, employed at the bureau's Washington headquarters.

TRAINING AT TIMES IS NO MORE THAN HOLLOW GESTURE.

The training offered in a goodly portion of these schools is nothing more than a hollow gesture, the men idling away their allotted four years of instruction lolling about unworkable or insufficient machinery, with few instructors about, and these incompetent and little interested in the trainees. In the best of these places, I was informed by a Government agent, fewer than 30 out of every 100 trainees could ever hope to be turned out even mediocre craftsmen.

Here were war derelicts whose physical disabilities made it obvious that they could never succeed at the vocations assigned to them by the advisers in the Veterans' Bureau. There were bent and useless hands set at sign painting. There were helpless feet ordered to turn fur-working machines. There were clouded eyes "advised" to read micrometers, and grammar-school mentalities assigned to vocations requiring a knowledge of geometry and trigonometry.

Here are men, too, who dislike the trade foisted upon them, who take no interest in learning its rudiments, who do not intend to work at it at the conclusion of their training period, who have repeatedly appealed for transfer to some other industry, but who are still there after months and years of lost time.

Then there are those who throw up their hands in despair and say: "What's the use of the whole business, anyhow? We are in overcrowded industries. And then the labor unions won't admit us into their ranks. They have told us this years ago. They insist that we serve long periods of apprenticeship, come into the industries as new men and make worthless the four years' training we have received from the Government. That means there will be open only to us a few low-paying nonunion jobs. Well, the flag waving is over and there is no more hurrahing, so there you are.

DO OUTSIDE WORK BUT GET NOTHING FOR IT.

"Why, we even do outside work for the head of the school. He sells our stuff and pockets the money. Don't you call this exploitation? What are you going to do?"

A close-up view of one of the institutions in which instruction is offered will give an insight into the causes of the situation and suggest probable remedies.
